Girls who think they look like Mary Pickford attract much attention to the lobby of Tremont theatre, Boston

Would-Be Pickfords Boost "Daddy Long Legs" in Boston

COMPLETE miniature motion picture studio, equipped in detail with regulation lights, special scenery and all the standard fittings of the huge studios in which the masterpieces of filmdom are produced, was erected in the lobby of the Tremont theatre in Boston for the presentation of "Daddy Long Legs."

It was announced in all local newspapers that girls between twelve and sixteen years of age, who wished an opportunity to appear in motion pictures, would be eligible for a Mary Pickford film contest, in which the winners will be cast in a special production.

The idea of setting up a miniature Mary Pickford studio in the Tremont theatre was the idea of Thomas Spry, manager of the Gordon-Mayer Exchange, which holds the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for New England.

The advertising campaign leading up to the presentation of the picture and the working out of the plans for the miniature studio were directed by Mr. Spry.

The announcement that candidates for the Mary Pickford film contest would be filmed in the miniature studio in the theatre brought a response that the management had not anticipated.

The first day saw the theatre lobby thronged with would-be actresses. The second day it was necessary to station policemen about the theatre to keep the applicants in line, and by the end of the first week of the contest more than 1,000 candidates had registered, and were awaiting their turn.

The first showing of "Daddy Long Legs," with seats selling at $1.50 and $1.00, was attended by a capacity audience, and the seating capacity of the big theatre was taxed at every performance thereafter.

The miniature Mary Pickford studio attracted hundreds who wanted to see how a real studio worked, and the lobby was crowded from morning till night.

Filming of the candidates in the contest was carried on in the morning and afternoon, when little girls, dressed in their Sunday best and very much excited, appeared with their parents for the big event.

The miniature studio represented in effect one of the school-room scenes in "Daddy Long Legs." It was equipped with blackboards and school desks, even the blackboard showing crude childish drawings and bits of writing.

A number was placed in every scene filmed and announcements were carried in the newspapers giving the date on which the film would be shown.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary, aids the contest by posing one of the entrants

The papers also carried each day cuts of several of the contestants, announcing the day on which their particular films would be shown. These pictures, outside of the great newspaper publicity interest, had real news-picture value, and were gladly published as such.

The climax of interest in the miniature studio was reached when Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary Pickford, came to Boston to see the presentation of "Daddy Long Legs," and to inspect the lobby display. Mrs. Pickford was so pleased that she met the candidates and spent hours showing the would-be Pickfords how to pose and to appear at ease before the camera.

An unexpectedly large number of children showed unusual talent in working before the camera, and with more than 1,000 to choose from, the judges in the contest still have several weeks' work ahead of them in making the final selections of those who will have opportunity of taking part in the Gordon-Mayer play.

More than 2,000 little orphans of Greater Boston were the guests of Mrs. Pickford at "Daddy Long Legs" during her visit in Boston, and each child received a box of chocolates as a remembrance of the day.

The widespread publicity obtained for "Daddy Long Legs" in its Boston presentation fulfilled the confidence of the men who planned and carried it to a successful conclusion that their idea would draw the public.

Never in the history of local exhibitors has a picture created such a furore; never has a production received such valuable mouth-to-mouth advertising, or so much valuable free newspaper publicity.

The cleverness and enterprise of the originators of the miniature studio idea is shown in the results of the campaign. They reached the child patrons as they could have in no other way. The studio with all the romance and glamour of the film world proved an irresistible attraction, against which the scruples of the parents, if they might have, could not withstand the pleas of the youngsters to be in on the contest, and of course, to see "Daddy Long Legs."

"Daddy Long Legs" came to Boston, was presented at one of the city's best known theatres, and was received by the public with enthusiastic admiration and delight—all a tribute to a superb advertising and publicity campaign carried out.

As a matter of fact here is a plan that offers results for any of the theatres in cities of any size which are showing Mary Pickford pictures or those of any other star of the so-called younger school who frequently take child parts. Every exhibitor recognizes the desire on the part of the thousands of gets to "get in the movies."

WHAT A "LITTLE FELLOW" DOES

Interesting Article for You In This Issue

ALTHOUGH we have told you time and again how we want to hear what the fellow in the small town is doing, it is exceedingly difficult to get this matter. It is impossible to keep correspondents in every village and hamlet and therefore a lot of the good ideas are lost.

More and more exhibitors are coming every day to realize that this interchange of ideas in these columns means progress for everyone. It is the problem of the small fellow that we are so anxious to reach, where there is really an idea of what he is doing. So on Page 705 of this issue we print some observations from Wm. C. McIntyre, who conducts the Rose theatre in Fayette, N. C.

There is nothing especially sensational in this article, but there is some philosophy that will pay us all to think over without merely labeling it "old stuff."

General lobby effect of the display at the Princess theater, Milwaukee, and the crowds that it drew

Milwaukee Manager Proves Hot Weather No Bar to Enterprise

GIVING no quarter and asking for none, exhibitor ability in Milwaukee engaged in a finish fight with the dreaded foe of all showman—hot weather—with the result that Frank Cook, manager of the Princess theatre, emerged victorious in a campaign of exploitation that dwarfs his previous efforts by its size, scope, volume and persistency.

Mr. Cook began this promotion work without the aid of any previous interest that might have been aroused in his attraction. Unfortunately, no Milwaukee newspaper had published the serial version of "Ravished Armenia," the story from which was made the photoplay, "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian. This was the special feature production which Cook proposed to play for a week despite hot weather. How he did it, and broke box-office records at the Princess makes an exhibitor article with some new and interesting facts.

Mr. Cook decided that the best way to arouse interest was to let the public know how the picture had been received in other cities. Accordingly, a week previous to the first presentation of "Auction of Souls" at the princess, small four inch, one-column ads appeared in the newspapers. It was teaser advertising, plain and simple. The ads stated: "Coming, the only picture ever shown for $10 per seat." These teasers ran the first half of the week. During the later half of the week, another teaser reading: "Coming to the Princess, 'Auction of Souls,' the only picture ever shown for $10 per seat."

Several days before the opening, Milwaukee suddenly blossomed forth with bright red and yellow posters, bearing the floating red banner carrying the words, "Auction of Souls." Every vacant store window, and there are many of them in Milwaukee since saloons began closing, every wall and billboard, boasted of a flock of auction flags and posters. The street cars were not forgotten, either.

For a week previous to the opening presentation of the picture the newspapers carried pictures of the Armenian girl who stars in the picture, together with news stories telling of her tragic story and the announcement of her visit to Milwaukee.

Committees from several clubs called at the theatre to invite the girl to be their guest during the week. Mr. Cook was quick to realize that these invitations made news stories.

The day of the opening was the hottest day of the year. Doubtless auto trips and park excursions had been planned by many families, but the half-page ad of Mr. Cook's was too enticing. It seemed that most of Milwaukee was interested in "Auction of Souls." The 1,100 seats of the theatre were filled for every performance and sweltering crowds stood in line to get in.

An unusual lobby display was intended to interest the ordinarily casual passerby. A cardboard drop, picturing two pillars bearing crossed scimitars, formed three arches, for the entrance, exit and ticket office, while the name of the show and star were conspicuously arranged in big letters. Directly over the ticket office was the announcement that Aurora Mardiganian would appear in person. The ushers were attired in Armenian costumes, and added a touch of local color to the presentation.

Publicity appeared to come easy for Mr. Cook. Monday's newspapers carried long interviews with her, mentioning that a motion picture starring her was showing at the Princess.

On Tuesday Miss Mardiganian and Mrs. H. L. Gates, who appeared in Milwaukee as her sponsor, spoke at the Rotary Club luncheon, the club being composed of about 300 business men of the city. A news story of the affair was a feature of each afternoon paper.

On Wednesday the Armenians of Milwaukee staged a dinner for Miss Mardiganian, and this resulted in publicity.

On Thursday and Friday, stories telling how a long lost cousin and aunt of Aurora's were found in Milwaukee found their ways into the newspapers. And on Friday night, the Scribblers' Club, an organizationtion of women writers of Milwaukee, entertained the Armenian girl.

Publicity gained this way did not prevent the insertion of quarter-page ads nearly every day.

A woman's matinee was given each morning at 10 a. m., with a more detailed talk by Miss Mardiganian and her guardain. Attendance increased each morning by 25 per cent.

Big Advertising Pays "Little Fellow" Down in North Carolina

HERE'S the case of a man who was a successful butcher and who went into the motion picture business and made good. While he was handling the steaks and the tenderloin cuts over the counter and sending the remnants back to the sausage machine he found out the truth of the old adage "it pays to advertise." This man is William C. McIntyre, manager of the Rose theatre, Fayetteville, N. C.

Dealing in fresh meats is not much of a training for a man to handle canned films, but Mr. McIntyre had the ground work of business ability, the right idea of exploitation and the determination to study the business in which he was engaged and develop it to the utmost. So he sold out the fresh meat business down in High Point, N. C. where there is enough furniture made very year to give each man, woman and child in the country a new chair once a year.

So to Fayetteville he went and took charge of the Dixie theatre there. He decided that the best thing to do right at the start was to make everyone in the city forget the Dixie theatre. "I realized that I was inexperienced in motion pictures," says Mr. McIntyre, "but I could at least see the many things that were wrong with the house. I determined that the thing to do was not to start in by telling the public how poor the other fellow was, but to make a clean start for myself and to take the blame for the mistakes that I myself would make without handicapping myself with a past."

Most of the business principles of Mr. McIntyre are not novel. They consist in following the same policies that are followed by the better class of exhibitor, no matter the size of the city, plus heavy advertising—as heavy as he figures the production will stand.

He first started out to identify the Rose theatre—for such he called the old Dixie—as representative of the better element of Fayetteville. The theatre was renovated and repainted and the whole affair changed around as much as possible under the circumstances. Ventilation was poor and this was immediately remedied. Projection was terrible and he started out to study the best in the proper screening of pictures with the result that Rose is said to have screen results now that equal any in the country. He covered the lobby floor with clean linoleum, hung pictures in the theatre, employed real or artificial flowers. Minor improvements were made wherever possible and when the theatre was opened for business it was as clean and attractive as the meat shop down in High Point that McIntyre had been running. And cleanliness has been just as great an urge in his motion picture theatre as it ever was in the butcher emporium.

Then the next thing that he did was to start to telling the people about the theatre. Now Fayetteville is a city with a census population of 7,045 and one daily newspaper with naturally a limited circulation. Theatres there had not been advertising in this newspaper and Mr. McIntyre decided that he would do so. There's where he got off to a flying start. The exhibitor who enters the big city and finds the other theatres using the display columns deserves some credit if he goes them one better and uses more space and uses it intelligently, but the man who blazes the way in a town like Fayetteville deserves the more. He is a real pioneer of the sort that during the past few years has given the cinema forward to better things.

Considering big city opportunities we would not call the most of the advertising of the Rose theatre good advertising, but when a man takes the fullest advantages of the chances that he has he deserves the greatest credit. Now cuts are hard to get from the exchanges, and therefore he has them seldom. He resorts largely to the use of type in his advertising and after having displayed the name of the star and the title of the picture prominently, then he talks about the production in the intimate sort of way that builds business when you back up what you say. For instance, in the 3 col. 9½ inch display announcing the holding over of "The Turn in the Road" for another day he refers to the fact that the film came late on the first day and that to disappoint no one he is holding the picture over. Then he starts in with the selling argument, which is in effect a reading notice. Very often he used two full columns in the paper dividing the space up between different attractions and giving selling talks with each one.

Now when he started in to play "The Heart of Humanity" he heard that this picture had fallen down in the city of High Point where he sold fresh meat with success, so determined that he would show how he could sell the picture in Fayetteville. He knew that he had the goods and that there was something the matter with the way that the theatre he used to visit between dispensing pork chops and liver had played it. The wrong thing was the lack of advertising, so McIntyre planked down $75 in the newspaper office, and went to it. He got more on the repeat day than High Point did on the first day run.

Here is his policy in a nutshell:

"I find that it does not pay to advertise an inferior article too strong. If I get a picture that I know is not very good, I say little about it. But the average picture that is being put out by the exhibitors these days will stand going to strong. I believe in advertising every show possible—in letting the public know that 'Brown's in Town.' It

AT ROSE THEATRE WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25.

Not a War Picture, Love, Greed, intrigue. The hundred pictures ever screened. Right now our country is in ruinous parts as in a state of unrest. Strikes along various lines, anarchists running around and worst of all that's ever invaded America's shores, the land of the free, the home of the brave, is the dreaded bomb throwers or Bolsheviks. We show you not a war picture, but the story of Bolshevism and treachery of the demon Bolshevism with all the scenes laid on the soils of the Atlantic ocean, God's country.

But a propaganda picture, but a thrilling drama with a delightful love story running throughout it. The land of a picture that leaves you nauseating to think about. The Rose manager wanted this big unusual yet wonderful picture for three days. For the time being Select picture cuts, only limited it to us for one day.

We will open the doors at ten o'clock that day and close at eleven that night.

Keep this ad, remember the day and date. When you leave you will know what Bolshevism really means with its disregard for anything but its treachery, desperate ones it symbolizes a country.

We will have a big double-header, rock, snappy comedy to top the day off with an uproar.

Only one day, Wednesday, June 25, 1919. Do you realize we keep nothing but SOLOTONE morning, noon and night?

Tomorrow "ROSE" Tomorrow

"The Turn in the Road"

By special request from large per cent. of the people that saw THE TURN IN THE ROAD yesterday; we will repeat it tomorrow. We never got open until late; delayed in transit. In order that no one shall be disappointed the Rose manager got busy over long distance and held it over for Friday.

Special Note—Cancel all engagements for that evening and night. Come and see the most human picture ever screened.

One of the Strong Expressions—"The best picture I have ever seen in Fayetteville"—Lieutenant Jones.

"THE TURN IN THE ROAD" by King W. Vidor, produced with all star cast by Brentwood films, released by Exhibitors Mutual.

Who and What is God? Does He visit upon man afflictions as well as blessings? Paul Perry's faith in the orthodox God was blasted when his young wife died, and he went in search of the True God and sank to the depths of degradation. How his own child led him into the light of Truth is told in a drama of pathos and humor, thrills and climaxes that stir the deepest emotions. A beautiful story of the power of Love over Hate and the simple faith of a child that overcame Fear and Unbelief.

All-Conquering Love
The Voice of Truth
The Search for God
A Prayer That Was Answered
From Darkness Into Light
And a Little Child Shall Lead Them
The Dawn of New Love
Faith and Love Conquer Fear and Hate
Taming the Tyrant
Happiness at Ho's Own Hearth
When the Preacher's Family Disagrees

WHAT YOU'LL SEE IN "THE TURN IN THE ROAD"

A child playing with Wraps
A Realistic Storm with Death on Watch
A Bride of a Year Telling Her Husband the Secret
A Money-Mad Tyrant at the Mercy of His Victims

Two of the striking special paintings used in the lobby of the Strand "Sahara" week

Striking Lobby Cards at Strand on "Sahara" Bring Many Inquiries

MANAGING DIRECTOR Joseph L. Plunkett has been overwhelmed with inquiries from exhibitors who have booked "Sahara," the latest Louise Glaum success, as the result of the manner in which the picture was put over at the Strand theatre last week. A full account of the arrangement of the program, the prologue and the tableau appeared in last week's issue of the Motion Picture News. But in addition to those features the immense lobby of the theatre was made a thing of beauty.

Jay W. Weaver, the Strand poster artist, once again proved he has few superiors in the art of making a lobby breathe the atmosphere of the presentation his handiwork exploits. While Joseph L. Plunkett and Carl Edouarde were engaged on a beautiful prologue for the Hodkinson release, Weaver was putting in his best licks transforming the Strand lobby into, as close as a human hand can devise, a panorama picture of Cairo, the Sahara Desert and Paris. How well he succeeded is attested by the throngs that viewed the brilliant "Sahara" exhibit in the lobby and the many requests as to who was responsible for the unique and beautiful lobby cards and decorations.

A dozen remarkable paintings were made for "Sahara" by Weaver, and their splendor was heightened by the specially prepared scene stills that surrounded them. Most attractive among the paintings was one showing Louise Glaum, as Mignon, in the Palace of the Dawn, Cairo, and another depicting her as the reigning belle of a luxurious Parisian café worshipped by the revelers. Another poster worthy of mention was a life-size painting of the star with a giant peacock as a background.

Another series of painting was used the week preceeding the engagement, these showing attractive figures of Miss Glaum in something of a siren's role, desert scenes with the Moors as the principal figures and one with a huge peacock. The size of the Strand lobby permits large announcements of the current production but in this case the "next week appeal for Sahara" dominated that of the current offering.

In all paintings and illustrations Weaver used a rich Urban blue tone for his main scenes and sunlight yellows for his exteriors. Without question the artist's work on "Sahara" is the biggest achievement of its kind since the opening of the successful Strand five years ago.

This picture seems to have had a general appeal to exhibitors for word comes from various sections of exploitation methods used.

Manager Julius Johnson of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, used a program representing a scene in Cairo, the feature of which was the reproduction of the Palace of Dawn, with a score or more of men and women celebrating the "Feast of Allah." Dancing girls prformed as the banquet proceeded.

At the California Theatre, Los Angeles, Production Manager Harry Leonhardt used a prologue showing a scene on the desert with a nomad encampment in the foreground. Into this came a group of Arabs followed by a dancing girl who went through a weird dance with the Arabs bowing in prayer at its conclusion.

In Salt Lake City George Mayne, manager of the American, uses an airship dropping announcements of the attraction and, at intervals, free tickets.

Big Advertising Pays "Little Fellow" Down in North Carolina Town

does not pay to misrepresent, for there is a sure and swift come back. I don't advertise with the objective of putting the other fellow out of business. I believe in letting 'John's' business alone and attending to your own, but I do believe in selling what I have."

It wasn't but a few weeks ago that one of the staff of the advertising department of the Motion Picture News came into the office of the writer and asked:

"Who is William C. McIntyre of the Rose theatre, Fayetteville, N. C.?" and then added: "He wants to get the plates used in the double page advertisement on 'Bolshevism on Trial' that appeared in the Motion Picture News last week.

We told him; McIntyre got the plates and we have illustrated here the use he made of them—a full page display with the selling argument running down the inside column.

We have referred to cleanliness. Courtesy is another one of Mr. McIntyre's hobbies.

Mr. McIntyre pays attention to the littlle things around the town. He knows how the people of a city like Fayetteville know everything that goes on. He can't expect to wait for the visit of a French field marshal or a ten million dollar fire to bring him publicity. He uses what he gets.

One night there was a window broken out of the front of the local Kress store. The following Monday McIntyre was to play J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Burglar for a Night." He went back to his theatre and printed a card: "We don't think Mr. Kerrigan broke this, but see J. Warren Kerrigan in 'A Burglar for a Night' at the Rose Monday."

Richness of Miss Glaum's costumes brought out here

Here is a suggestion for exhibitors who want drops they can use more than once. This is used by McCormick at the Circle for Irish songs

Here's How McCormick Plans His Campaign—"Ain't it Simple Now?"

BECAUSE of the many articles that he has contributed to these pages, and because of the many other accounts of things that he has done at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, which have appeared here, S. Barret McCormick is certainly one of the very best known exhibitors in the country to readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

But recently we have had a number of inquiries from readers asking us to tell the way that he lays out his advertising. Robert Leibert, one of the principal owners of the Circle, is also owner of the First National Franchise for that section, and there has been unusual attention attracted to the way that the Anita Stewart, Chas. Chaplin and other pictures have been presented at the Circle. In fact, McCormick's own advertising campaign has been adopted by scores of exhibitors, especially in that section and reaching all the way to Canada.

It remains a fact that one of the Indianapolis newspapers has on its subscription list more than one hundred exhibitors who are taking the paper regularly to get day after day the advertising that is used by the Circle and that this paper makes it a regular business of supplying these mats. So it can be seen that a lot of these people want to know what are the methods of McCormick in evolving these, so we have had a representative study the work at close range, but let us tell you right now that the methods he used are no wise as impressive as the results he obtains.

In the first place let us say that Mr. McCormick never ignores anything that will throw light on a picture that he is going to play. He is one of the most careful readers of the trade publications among all exhibitors. He watches the press books of those companies that are really doing things worth while, and if there are any ideas that impress him he does not hesitate to use them. Yet he goes in to look at the picture himself with an open mind and it is his impressions that mould the displays that are to appear in the Indianapolis papers.

It was just after the appearance of the advertising campaign on "Sunnyside," which was described in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week that the correspondent called on him with the following question:

"Mr. McCormick," (or rather in the interests of accuracy he said "Mac," for McCormick is so known to all the newspaper men in Indianapolis, having himself come from the Fourth Estate), "how do you analyze the selling points of a production and make the selling points of your campaign? There are a lot of exhibitors who want to know about all the hard work you do in laying out one of these campaigns."

McCormick is generally smoking. He wasn't at that moment, so he stopped to light his pipe. Then he smiles at the idea of the hard work of laying out a campaign, for one who has seen McCormick at work understands that he really enjoys this. The picture that he is to play for the following week becomes a part of his life from the moment he witnesses the first screening and his first impressions go down. Those first impressions are likely to be the ones that he uses in the advertising, for they generally suggest the theme.

Mr. McCormick views every large picture booked at the Circle before it is shown to the public. By virtue of the fact that the Circle is a first-run theatre, he receives his prints in advance and has them shown in his private screening room. His secretary makes notations, at his direction, of the various scenes which suggest to him a basis for his advertising campaign.

"I try to pick out the dominant element that gives the picture life and appeal," said Mr. McCormick. "Some times it may be some little incident that to the casual observer would be more or less insignificant, but to me would be the thing that could be made to have the greatest appeal."

After the screening of the picture, Mr. McCormick's secretary makes a copy of his comment and submits it to him for more careful consideration. This copy, he says, is really a scenario or synopsis of the things which in his opinion contain the most dramatic force and appeal.

He then goes over his notes with his artist and after selecting a few "stills" which serve to illustrate the selling talk, makes a rough sketch of the advertising layout. Mr. McCormick writes the lines for the ads and the artist attends to the illustrating part.

In exploiting "Sunnyside," Mr. McCormick selected for his largest advertisements "stills" taken from Chaplin's aesthetic dancing scenes, and for the followups and smaller advertisements he used the kitchen scenes, in which some of the old-time Chaplin slap-stick comedy was brought out.

"I picked out the dancing feature because of its absurdness," said Mr. McCormick. "Here was Charlie as an aesthetic dancer, something entirely different from his older and more generally known antics. Why it made you laugh within yourself when you looked at the 'stills' and tried to think of Chaplin, with the funny feet, as an aesthetic dancer. It immediately started your imagination to work and suggested that here was Chaplin in something entirely new and something that no doubt must be funny. Then in the later ads were the illustrations which served to connect Chaplin as the dancer with Chaplin of the old-time custard pie, etc."

This is a rather simple setting with the plaid hangings immediately supplying the Scotch atmosphere

"The motion picture advertising writer has to possess dramatic sense or instinct, just the same as the playwright or the author must sense the dramatic element in the play. The advertising writer must picture with words and illustrations the elements of the picture which make the greatest appeal. He is dealing with human beings and must fit each picture with publicity and advertising that will appeal directly to the emotions. He must cater to the dramatic instincts."

To find the appeal in a picture, as in any commercial product, according to Mr. McCormick, requires a careful analysis. In this analysis is included an investigation of all the selling qualities it possesses, an elimination of the lesser points and an acceptance of that element which comes nearest to the universal appeal.

"When does it tell in an unusual manner a story of the various human emotions, upon which all plays are based?" he continues. "Is love the big thing? Is it Hate, Humor or Mystery? If so why does it strike the responsive chord and subjugate all else before its spell? When you grasp this you have analyzed the local selling points and can make them the features of your advertising compaign.

"When showing a good comedy, like Chaplin's 'Sunnyside,' it is not enough to merely run a line or two in your advertisements to the effect that 'here is a great comedy.' The exhibitor should build a comic atmosphere around his advertising and publicity because advertising, after all, is just a sample of the real stuff. The illustrations in motion picture advertising should be used merely as samples of what the theatre-goer is going to see upon the screen. Advertising should be mooded to the picture, just as the orchestra leader moods his musical interpretations to it."

It was just a year ago, in the July 29 issue to be exact, that we told you the way that McCormick plans the stage presentation and the scenic settings through a miniature theatre that he has in his office. Here the scenes are reproduced in the actual colors in which they are to be shown to the audiences and the same lighting effects are obtained. The music is similarly outlined in conference with the musical director.

"I enjoy," says McCormick, "these own private performances of my own more than most people enjoy the finished presentation. There is, of course, a joy in creation. I try never to let myself get too enthusiastic, but I do like to let the ideas as they will and to be guided largely by inspiration, regulated by common sense and local conditions. The average exhibitor can get more out of a motion picture if he will enthuse a little for himself, get his own joy out of the production than if he views the whole thing as a cold-blooded proposition. You cannot expect to get more out of a production for your audience until you put the most into it yourself, and that means enthusiasm and appreciation—to be transmitted on to the patron."

Franklin Uses Clever Teaser Advertisements on Chaplin

Harold B. Franklin, managing director, Sheas' Hippodrome, Buffalo, produced a series of refreshingly original advertisement on Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "Sunnyside." The ads attracted wide attention and much favorable comment. Mr. Franklin opened the week on Sunday with a four column three inch display.

This was followed on Monday with an inch and a half double in which the billboard idea showing Chaplin reading the program and exclaiming "Some bill." This was followed on Tuesday and Wednesday by hand drawn one inch

This was because he wanted to boost Olive Thomas who appeared for the first time as a Shea's Hippodrome star. Friday he came back with a one inch Chaplin ad showing Chaplin and the words "I'm going to see Olive Thomas in 'Toton,' and my latest comedy." Saturday's ad conveyed the information that the comedy king was sad because this was the last day at the Hippodrome with the further comment that "Life Hardly Seems Worth the Living."

appeal. Yet there are lots and lots of people who are straight-laced enough in their own ideas who like to get a little spice of the fast life in New York so long as the happy ending of the picture, with right triumphant, justifies the events. We have tried to bring out this appeal with none of the cheapness. The result of this display was that people came to the theatre expecting to see just the sort of a picture that we showed them. We did not mislead them in either direction. Overplaying of that element would have been bad. It would have kept a lot of people away, and it would have disappointed any that were looking for the more sordid side.

In brief we believe in the show-window effect in our advertising. We believe in advertising just what we have without going into the tiresome descriptive details. But we believe in making our goods so attractive in the newspaper advertisements that the public will turn to the OFFER of them, as representing in these displays, FIRST. When we have succeeded in doing this we believe that we have accomplished a great deal.

But there is an important thing to be done after this—to keep up the quality of the theatre. It is not only our advertising, but the quality performance that we give the patron that makes our policies pay.

"Shimmie Contest" Adds Interest to 'Frisco Theatre

It is somewhat out of the line of motion picture, but Strand theatre, San Francisco, has been arousing a lot of interest during the past few weeks by staging "shimmie" contests at the end of the evening performances. This week the final contests are being held and the winners of these will challenge artists of national fame in the shimmie, tango, Texas tommie, hesitation and other modern steps.

Reports from San Francisco are that a great deal of new talent has been developed and that interest in the various contests have packed the theatre to capacity during what is supposed to be the poorest season of the year.

Tivoli Used Ten Girls in Red Lantern Prologue

Manager Frank J. Costello, of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, gave the coast city one of the most elaborate motion picture presentations that it has ever known last week when he showed Nazimova in "The Red Lantern."

As a prologue he staged "The Glow of the Lantern," a dance in which ten girls appeared for a dance in Chinese costume. Miss Dorothy Nevel, soprano, sang "The Red Lantern," accompanied by a number of Tivoli review girls.

The theatre was decorated in Chinese style from lobby to stage.

Guest Opens Detroit Offices to Exploit Pictures

Harry R. Guest, formerly publicity manager for the J. H. Kunsky interests in Detroit, is the latest publicity man to graduate from the motion picture field to general publicity work. Mr. Guest has just opened an office in Detroit, from which he will handle general advertising for general business, but specializing in motion picture exploitation. He has been appointed the Detroit representative of a number of Michigan exhibitors who want a man at the exchange center to take care of exploitation and other matters for them.

How New York Stages the Show

WOMEN stars have everything their own way at the three leading New York theatres. This week also marks the return of Irene Castle after a long absence from the screen and the first appearance of Constance Talmadge as a star at one of the "big three."

Pauline Frederick is the star at the Rialto in "The Fear Woman," a tense picture which gives the proper relief by ending happily. On the same bill is the latest of the Mack Sennett comedies, "Trying to Get Along," showing some of the perils of restaurant life. One of Major Jack Allen's animal catching pictures rounds out the program.

Rivoli has Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" which is also intensely dramatic, picturing the plight of a girl whose secret marriage and unwillingness to hurt her foster parents brings her sorrow. It, too, has a happy ending. "Hungry Lions in a Hospital" is the Sunshine comedy reissue. There is especially interesting scenic and a striking setting for one of the vocal numbers.

Constance Talmadge delights at the Strand with an element of comedy running through the story and nothing to ever worry about except the trouble she creates for others. The same Mack Sennett is being shown there, and there is an Outing-Chester scenic. Bruce Weyman, popular soloist, has just returned from the war and he gets a big reception from his thousands of admirers at the Strand.

Next week attractions are: Rialto, Tom Moore in "The City of Comrades"; Strand, Jack Pickford in "Bill Apperson's Boy" and Rivoli, Ethel Clayton in "The Sporting Chance."

Strand Theatre

GAIETY marks the entire bill at the Strand this week. The feature is light with comedy prevailing, there is a screaming Mack Sennett two-reeler and the music is all of the brighter sort that is mighty good for hot weather. We would describe the whole entertainment this week as interesting without anything that will urge anyone to think or to attempt to solve any problem. It is the sort of a program that sends people away from the theatre with the single conviction—that they have had a good time.

Excerpts from "La Gioconda" form the overture this week. This is a work full of effective numbers of all sorts and these have been gathered together in this number in a way that the whole thing sparkles with unusual musical brilliance. It is played with the lights gold on the stage and the house dark.

Strand Topical opens with Interantional pictures showing the polo games at Meadow Brook, which are screened to the music of "Step Lively." International also supplies some striking pictures of the fire which destroyed the terminals at South Ferry. These are largely local in their interest to New York city, but they got unusual attention here. A dramatic agitato is used with all of the fire effects including the bells, sirens, sounds of the rushing water and the chopping away of the burning structure. From the same source come unusual pictures of the battleship New Mexico which has just been named flagship of the Pacific fleet. These pictures show her going under the Brooklyn Bridge, and some of the shots taken directly down show the top of the fighting masts almost in the eye of the lens. "The Thunderer" is the accompaniment. Great applause greets the Pathe pictures of the NC-4 on board the tender "Aristook" and there are explanatory pictures showing just how the vessel cares for her charges. The same music is used through these.

There is a relief from the news subjects with Topics of the Day. Among them are "There never could be a treaty of peace that would make a licking feel good." "Field Marshal Ludendorf declares that American won the war. He ought to know;" and "Nicaragua has appealed for aid against Costa Rica. Boy, page Sergeant York." "Carolina Sunshine" is the music during these.

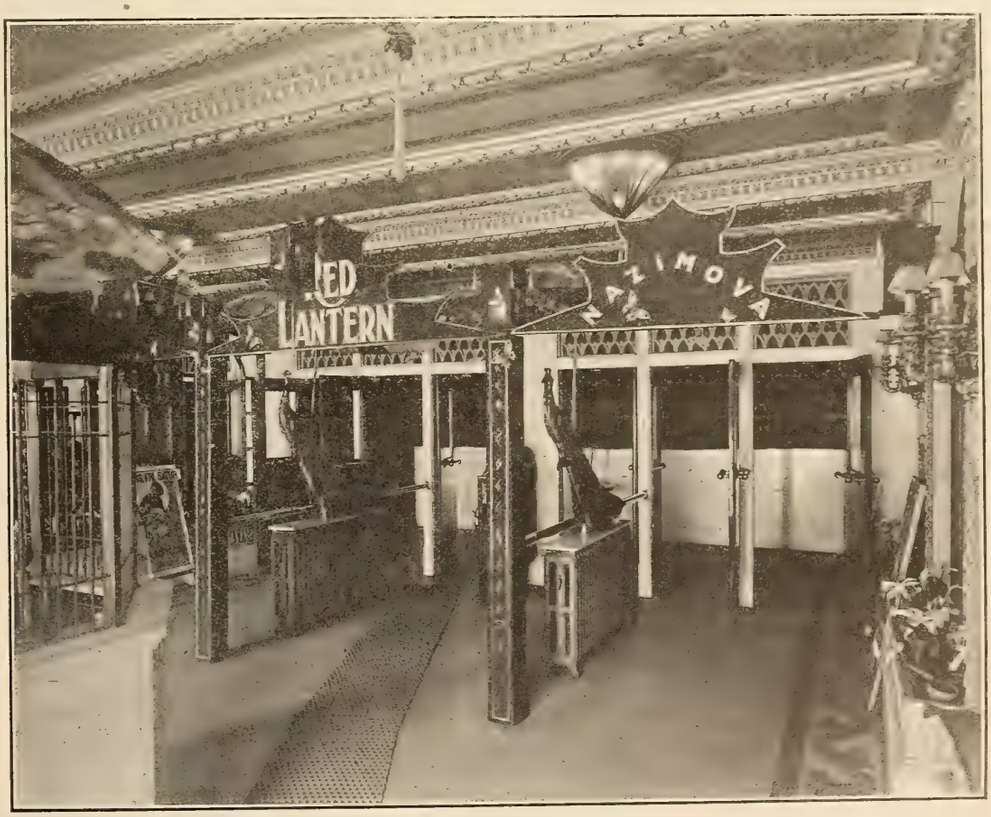
Pathe shows some interesting pictures of a wild west performance at Salina, Cal., and here we have the usual broncho busting and then riding wild cattle. "Western Rodeo" is the music and effects are used liberally. Pathe presents some of the essential facts about the R-34 through a cartoon, explaining the mechanics of the airship. Now, as we saw the performance Sunday evening there came to most of us a distinct surprise. Only a small portion of the New York people read the afternoon paper that is published on Sundays. The Sunday morning issues had told us that the R-34 was having all sorts of difficulties in a storm and apparently running short of gasoline and probably wouldn't reach New York at all. So when there flashed on the screen pictures of the R-34 landing at Mineola and then a flash of the crew, there were a lot of people who weren't quite sure whether they were fakes or not. But they weren't. But the real thing, and the Strand had been able to show the actual pictures of an event before ninety-nine out of every hundred in the audience had known that the event had actually taken place. Some feat for motion pictures. "Hands Across the Sea" is the music for these.

Thence we go to Charleston, S. C., where Pathe shows us pictures of Germans who were interned during the war being set back to the vaterland. "Nation's Awakening" is first used and then with the title "civilians held as spies," there is a change to "Goodbye, Huns," which is especially arranged for these pictures. From the same source come pictures "Off the French coast," showing the French sailors in training, and then some of the athletic feats used to keep them in the pink of condition. Here "Blue Devils" is used. The punch at the end is given with International pictures showing the visit of President Wilson to King Albert and the ruins of Belgium. There are a number of shots of the wreckage the Huns left behind them, and of the King and President together, showing the democracy of both of them. There is a particularly touching scene where the little Belgians pay a tribute to America by presenting flowers to President and Mrs. Wilson. "Sons of Uncle Sam" helps along the applause.

Follows an Outing-Chester, "Getting the Cassiar's Goat" which represents hunting these extremely wild goats of the snow covered mountains with the camera. There are some interesting views taken of the cruise up the Strikine river and views of the snow-covered Cassiar mountains, and finally we are rewarded with some shots of the goats themselves. "Serenade" is played by the orchestra and the organ carries the remainder of the music.

Bruce Weyman, baritone, gets a most enthusiastic welcome. He sings "On the Road to Mandalay" and is called back again and again.

A selection from "The Royal Vagabond" is played at the screening of the feature, Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure" and this is followed through with "Break of Morn" and then



Striking lobby display of the American theatre, Terre Haute, for "The Red Lantern." The entire color scheme was in red, eighteen Chinese lanterns bing used, and these connected with the electric current and supplying all the lighting. The entire house staff was costumed in Chinese dress for the run of the picture

Tips From First Showings Here

"Forget Me Nots" until the title telling us of disappointing news when the organ takes up the music for six minutes. The orchestra returns as we see Annesly falling in love with Geraldine in the manicure shop, and here "Kingdom of My Heart" is used, followed through with "Canzonetta." Then with the scene at her home where the girl recognizes Annesly "Graciousness" is played. Then as we are transferred to the activities of Reggie Crocker "Coo Coo" is used, starting at the refrain and then with the change of scene the organ takes over the music for fifteen minutes.

Then with the title "The morning after" we have the imitations of the burglar alarm and "Turbulence" is used by the orchestra, changing with the breakfast scene to "Serenade." Then with the title "When a man is in love" the theme is introduced for the first time by the orchestra with "Miracle of Love," changing to "The Wooing Hour" after four bars and then following through with "Water Lillies." At the scene at the end where the couple are seen together the theme is repeated.

Mlle. Marguerite Lamare then sings "Love's Garden of Roses" and "Her Dream" and we have a screamingly funny Mack Sennett comedy, "Trying to Get Along," which deals with an attempt to run a restaurant, the arrival of the wife's brother and all sorts of developments that come about only in comedies such as these. Occasion is taken to introduce some cabaret scenes and therefore get some of the beautiful Sennet bathing girls into the picture. "Flying Rag" is played at the screening and this is followed through with "Flirting Whistler," "Sunshine at the Y. M. C. A." and "Booster Rag," then the organ taking the music for a time and then "When We Meet Again" and "Pickin's."

Chopin's "Polonaise Militaire" is the final organ solo.

Strand theatre, Denver, used a twenty-four sheet for its main lobby decoration on "Mints of Hell," and then added just enough of the fur trees to give the suggestion of the far north. Scene pictures were used in profusion

Rivoli Theatre

MUSIC once more marks the program as unusual at the Rivoli this week, and the splendid dance selections played during the feature make it all the more enjoyable.

It is seldom, indeed, that there is anything at either the Rialto or the Rivoli with which we have to find serious fault, but there is one thing used in the program at the latter house that we would distinctly advise the exhibitor against following. Charles Maigne has achieved a masterful direction of Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" and right at the end of the feature there is occasion for the husband in name only to take his own life.

We are shown the man whom the wife really loves on his white horse standing guard to protect her and then we have the husband picking out a comfortable spot for his end, and then a flash of a huge stag. A second later the start of the horse and the deer in a flight of panic are supposed to convey the idea of the pistol shot, but right here some one at the Rivoli conceived the idea of reproducing the pistol shot. It not only mars the artistry of the picture, but it was distinctly startling and as we witnessed the performance it caused audible cries from several of the woman around.

This is carrying realism to the extremes. The director is to be credited with a distinct achievement, when he can carry out the idea of a suicide without showing even a flash of it. Director Maigne did that with this picture. The shot was not only unnecessary, nerve racking, but helped to spoil the picture effect.

Third and fourth movements from Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique" forms the overture. This opens with the house lights in blue and purple on the orchestra. It starts on the strings with the 'cello. The horns come in strong at times with the reminder almost of a dirge, for the tragic element is strong through the greater part of the selection. As the music becomes livelier the lights change to red and then to gold toward the end with the drums and brass strong.

"War Spruce," released by Educational, is one of the most interesting pictures that we have yet seen. It shows the processes of obtaining wood for building aeroplanes from the giant spruce trees felled in the forests to the finishing airship. The music for this, followed through, consists of "The Mill in the Forest," "A Dutch Wind Mill," "April Moods" (until riving the logs), "In Holland" and "Forest Whispers" starting at the trio.

With an introduction of organ, drums and flute the curtains part revealing a scene at eve on a rockbound seacoast with Emanuel List, basso profundo, standing at the left of the stage attired as sailor or coast guard, in shirt sleeves. To the right in the rocky shore and in the distant a flashing searchlight, "Asleep in the Deep" is the selection.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with International views of King George honoring Britain's heroes of the army and navy and here "Sons of Britain," which carries a counterpoint of "God Save the King" is used, the audience enthusiastically applauding the ruler of our Ally. Field Marshal Haig also comes in for a big hand. "Tents of Arans" is the accompaniment of Pathe pictures of the representatives of Mejas mounted on their camels at the Paris peace meeting. Kinograms shows pictures of Africans parading at the Methodist Centenary in Columbus, O., many of them attired as their ancestors—or rather in lack of that attire, the same music continuing through these.

Then with the International pictures of the South Ferry fire we have the effect accentuated by the foots coming up in red to the music of "The Tempest." From the same source come pictures of "a kind of fishing that you dream about" which we are told "we dare not tell where" and here the foots are in blue. This use of the foots now and then is mighty good stuff, especially where you have a change such as this afforded, the red for the fire and the blue for the water effects, but it should not be overdone. International shows pictures of "Mary's little lamb" who is hard to find on the sheep ranch at Hoytville, Cal., and from the same source are pictures of "some bull," a $60,000 product on exhibition at Pittsburgh. The animal idea is carried out further with Kinogram pictures of the biggest hatchery in the world turning out chicks at Cleveland, "O'Birds and Butterflies" starts with the fish picture and continues through all the others.

Blue foots are used again with International pictures of the yacht races at Oyster Bay and there we have "Lovely Summertime," starting at the refrain. Then come pictures of the French sailors, already described to "Les Enfants de France" and then Kinograms shows pictures of Secretary Daniels dividing the American navy into the Asiatic, Pacific and Atlantic fleets. After the pictures of the commander of the Asiatic and Pacific fleets we have views of battleships in line and then with pictures a view of Admiral Wilson of the Atlantic fleet there were pictures of the big ship in the Hudson. "The Marathon" is the music. Kinograms supplies the final punch with pictures of the last session of the peace conference and here we have Gen. Foch inspecting the guards, the arrival of President Wilson, and then the departure of the German delegates, of Orlando, Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Wilson, all of whom evoke great enthusiasm. "March Militaire Francaise" is the stirring music.

Music Hints For Entire Programs

"The Firing Line" is screened to "Sizilietta" and with the first view of Irene Castle there is a change to Caresse," and then as the scene of the boat drifting with the tide we have "Over the Water" with a change to "Brahms Waltz" as the girl climbs into the boat. That night when Hamil recognizes the girl "Chaminade Serenade" is played as a violin solo, waltz time, for a few bars and with the scene on the porch there is another change to "Spanish Serenade." When Hamil tells his aunt of the girl he saw today "Brahms Waltz" is brought back and continues to scene where the girl dances where "Moonlight Waltz" substitutes.

"The next day" brings "A Garden Dance" and when he starts to tell her he loves her "Demands et Response" is used, changing to "Sehnsucht," the theme, with "A Florida Moon." With the title "One night soon afterward" there is a change to "Bucolique" and with the title "Until the final night" the organ takes up the music. However violin and 'cello are left behind and as the lovers as seen outside the theme is played as a violin solo, then with the title "Why did you come" there is a change to 'cello solo and then as the girl exclaims "Garry, I can't let you leave me" both violin and 'cello are used until the scene where he leaves and then the organ alone carries the music.

The orchestra comes back with the title "The battle" and renders a numbered selection, changing to "Serenade Valse" with the title "After long weeks" and then when the husband says that this had gone far enough King's "Romance" is used. With "The night" there is a change to "Tenderesse" and at the scene where they lay the hands on the table there is a numbered selection with effects for the bumps of the table and cymbals as the table falls apart. Numbered selections are used until near the end where with the title "Then for dreary months" we have "Fairy Tales" to the end.

"Hungry Lions in a Hospital" is the Sunshine reissue comedy. "Kinky" is played on screening and with the meatless day "The Girl Behind the Gun," changing to "Cossack Revels" as the lions escape, followed through with "More Candy" and then changing to "The Plumber" for the auto scenes. Effects are used liberally.

A sure antidote for "that hot feeling" is supplied by the display of the Ansonia theatre, Butte, Mont., on "Jacques of the Silver North." The land of the snows was everywhere suggested

Rialto Theatre

THERE is quite a shift in the Rialto program this week with the scenic taken from its usual place and with the interlude of a vocal number placed behind the feature.

Erno Rapee, conductor at the Rivoli, is responsible for the brilliant orchestration of Liszt's thirteenth "Hungarian Rhapsody" which is played with the lights all gold and includes mirambaphone and xylophone solos.

Rialto Magazine opens with the International pictures of the battleship New Mexico and then Gaumont shows views of Lieut. Com. Read and the other officers reporting to Secretary Daniels. "Regiments Return" is the music for both of these. International show pictures of a wild west show revival at Chicago and "Wild and Wooly" is used to the chariot race and then we have a drum roll crescendo. International pictures of flying over New York in a dirigible and here we have a few bars of "My Sweetie" and then the orchestra tacet, with effects, for the remainder.

Happy Hooligan is the star in the Educational side splitting cartoon "Perils of Paprika." "Moorish Dance" is played at screening and until the introduction of "Chester Clisauce"—and here a mysterioso is used until Hooligan enters the plane with a return to "Moorish" until the scene where they meet in the air and here a hurry is used. With the introduction of the Duke of Muttonchops "Lovingless Day" is played to the command "Stop" where Happy interrupts the wedding then "Debutante" is used until the "movie finish" effect near the end and "In the Gloaming" is played until the fade-out and then "Debutante" to the end.

Kinograms supplied a beautiful picture with "Blossom Time in Nova Scotia" with the apple trees in bloom and here the music is "Pavanne." Kinograms tells us the A. E. F. is still winning in France and shows us pictures of a doughboy facing the altar and his French bride to the accompaniment of "Goodbye, France." Gaumont supplies pictures of de Valera addressing crowds at Boston and then comes the striking finish with International pictures of President Wilson's visit to King Albert and shell torn Belgium, already described. Eight bars of "Belgium" are used at the start, following through with "Coronation March" with the snare drum as the President enters the auto and then changing to "Athalie" for the views of the President and Cardinal Mercier.

With the lights red all over the house, and the side curtains parted in red and a purple flood Rosa Lesea then sings "Il Bachio."

Then comes the feature, Pauline Frederick in "The Fear Woman," another one of those heredity stories, this time of a woman who fears to become the mother of children lest they follow in the footsteps of her father. "Ecstacy" is played at the screening and then with the title "His pet fear" there is a change to the theme, Beethoven's "Grave." For the scenes at the engagement dinner we have "Love's Torment" and then as the drunken father falls down the stairs to his death there is a pause and the theme taken up.

"When the first dark days" brings "Moonlight Sonata" and then with the appearance of the housekeeper's visitor "Silent Sorrows" is used changing to "Duo Amoureux" for the title "The Wedding Hour" and then to the theme as the girl sees the drunken woman in the street. "You've acted like a fool" brings "Simple Avon" and the title "Important work" calls "In Saint Malo." With the introduction of the Scar couple comes "Dialogue" and the title "Helen is popular" changes the music to "Bangalore," the organ taking it up when we are told that shadow has passed for a time.

Orchestra comes back with the hotel's tennis match and here "Yankee Girl" is used with "Kiddies" cooking in with the tournament dinner. With the title "In order to save the son" a numbered selection is used and then when Helen shows that she had been merely pretending to be drunk "Cherry Blossoms" is used with an adagio as she says "You were right, Bob," to the end.

Greek Evans, easily one of the most popular of all the male singers, is then heard in "On the Road to Mandalay," and then follows "The Leopard Hunt," one of the Major Jack Leanorard pictures showing how he takes them alive. "Dance of the Egyptian Maidens" is played for the preliminary portion and then as Allen lassoes the animal the orchestra remains tacet to the end.

Comedy element is supplied by the same Mack Sennett comedy being screened at the Strand, "Trying to Get Along." "A la Carte" is played at the screening and then with the appearance of the check "Slippery Hank" with a trombone effect with the title "I insists on saying." With the title "A wife's privilege" we have "Can You Tame Wild Women?" and then when she is seen chasing him with an axe "Hop a-Long." When the brother presents the monkey "Zoo Step" is used, changing to "Ja-Da" for the cabaret act, and then with the scene of the spurting champagne bottle, "You'll Do It All Over Again."

Live News from the Producers

"13" Is a Thriller In Every Sense

WORD comes from the office of Burston Films, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, that President Burston in Hollywood, Cal., is busy packing his trunk preparatory to his start East, where business connected with the placing of his latest Francis Ford serial, "The Mystery of 13" is demanding his attention. In advance of his coming the picture itself is expected for review, and if reports are to be trusted, the title is lived up to in every one of the fifteen episodes.

Francis Ford heads the cast, with Rosemary Theby opposite. The principals, include Ruth Maureice, Doris Dare, Elsie Van Name, Marc Fenton, Nigel De Broullier, Phil Ford, Peter Gerald, Jack Saville and V. Ovilo, many of whom appeared in Producer Burston's last Ford serial "The Silent Mystery." The story is claimed to be a thriller that should appeal to the serial fans, for it combines mystery with the broad outdoor action of a western picture. But there are apparently no limits to "locations," for the company took a carload of diving equipment to Catalina Island for one of the first episodes, which opens in a South American country. In the first episode Francis Ford, doubling as the brother of his famous character Phil Kelley, escapes from his South American ranch, the boat on which he has stowed himself away burns at sea, and the rescue is a marvelous piece of camera realism.

Francis Ford, in "The Mystery of 13"

Francis Ford and Rosemary Treby both are seen under water in complete diving equipment, and as antagonists there is a lively battle between them over a little matter of cutting the air pipe that supplys one of Francis' henchmen. The big water stuff was taken at Catalina Island, where Francis Ford has a summer home, and to which the company was carried in his motor boat, Delirium II. Some wonderful effects are said to have been secured by the use of an under water camera of Mr. Ford's own invention.

To save time and secure the very best results where the action is so rapid that every detail must be as clean as if made under the most brilliant California sky, the fill-in water scenes have been made in one of the largest tanks ever built for motion pictures which was installed recently in the Francis Ford Studios at Hollywood. The production is said to mark a long step in advance in the filming of underwater scenes, and that Francis Ford, who is directing "The Mystery of 13" as well as playing the lead, will take full advantage of the opportunity, is the assurance of Producer Burston.

Director Ford's genius for props, effects, and novel inventions has stood him in good stead in "13," as the company familiarly calls the current production. In the play there are thirteen members in the inner circle of the band of "13" and at their meetings, to bar absolutely any and all outsiders, each must wear his hooded cowl with his number—"1" to "13"—plainly showing thereon. When three "6's" appear in the third episode there is more consternation, you may be sure, than if the same appeared in a pat hand, and there is some lively scrambling on the part of those who have not the password to this inner circle. Some of the experiments in producing "glow" effects in various and unexpected places are pronounced unusually weird and uncanny by those who have seen them.

"Man Who Stayed at Home" Broke Stage Records

Data compiled by Metro Pictures Corporation, which will be exclusive distributors of the Screen Classics, Inc., all star super-production, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," scheduled for release in September, shows that the play achieved an international record for continuous performances. In fact, it was on the strength of its drawing power as a stage production that Screen Classics, purchased the screen rights to this thrilling drama of love, mystery, intrigue and suspense.

"The Man Who Stayed at Home" is from the pen of those two British playwrights, Lechmore Worrall and J. E. Harold Terry. It was produced for the first time on any stage at the Royalty Theatre in London in the fall of 1914, where it established the phenomenal record of a continuous run of almost four years, playing to capacity business.

Final Touches Are Put on Vitagraph Serial

Antonio Moreno and scores of his fellow Vitagraph players are now back in the mountains of upper California putting the final touches on his fifteen episode serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain." Although the sixth episode is the most advanced chapter shown by any of the exhibitors, even among those who first sensed the value of the chapter play, the work has been carried forward with the regularity of clockwork and the serial is practically completed.

Through a happy inspiration of the authors, Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, nearly all of the early scenes in "Perils of Thunder Mountain" were set in the snow-capped mountains of northern California.

Robertson-Cole in Antipodes Deal

Australasian Films Closed with on Big Contract

SUPPLEMENTING its strides made during the past few weeks, which inclueds a half million dollar deal disposing of its entire product for Canada for the coming year, Robertson-Cole this week announce another important contract with the Australasian Films, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia.

Through its president, Harry G. Musgrove, who is now in the United States, the Australasian Films, Ltd., has purchased the rights for Australia and New Zealand to the productions starring Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Warner, and William Desmond. The J. Warren Kerrigan features which Robertson-Cole control throughout the world, with the exception of the United States, are also included in the deal.

While not as big financially as the contract which gave the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation of Toronto the entire Canadian rights to the Robertson-Cole output for the ensuing year, the arrangement with the Australasian Films is a most important transaction for Robertson-Cole.

In a resume of its foreign activities during the past few months, Robertson-Cole in a statement announcing the contract with the Australasian Films, call attention to the fact that Chester Beecroft has taken over all its pictures for distribution in Continental Europe; Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, has taken over the entire output for the British Isles; a large part of the South American territory has been sold to various importers of motion pictures; Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation has taken over all star series for Canada; A. George Smith of the International Variety and Theatrical Agency, Limited, acting as agents for African Films, Limited, has contracted for the exhibition rights to Robertson-Cole features in Africa, South of the Equator, and now Australia and New Zealand are added to the countries where Robertson-Cole features will be prominently exhibited.

The following statement on the deal was issued by the Australasian Films:

"Australasian Films, Ltd., have secured the Robertson-Cole output for Australia and New Zealand, which will be distributed through their ten exchanges in the Antipodes. The contract signed this week on behalf of the Australian Company by their general manager, Harry G. Musgrove, covers a lengthy period.

"With the Robertson-Cole Output and others, Australasian Films during the coming year will control the release of the productions of over thirty stars and will offer not less than six features of each artist.

"Mr. Musgrove looks forward to a new successful chapter in the Australasian Film Business in the reconstruction period after the War, and the reason for his presence in New York is to plan for future conditions."

Appoint Five United Artist Sales Managers

Ten of the seventeen sales managers to head the distributing depots of United Artists Corporation, have now been appointed.

Hiram Abrams this week gave out the names of his five newest selections and there remain only seven offices for which Mr. Abrams has not yet announced his men.

George F. Lenehan goes to the Washington office, Robert J. Churchill to Detroit, T. Y. Henry to Denver, E. C. Fielder to Cleveland and C. S. Trowbridge to Philadelphia.

As previously announced, Cresson E. Smith is in charge of the Chicago office, Harry D. Buckley is in Kansas City, Walter S. Rand is in Los Angeles, Louis W. Thompson is at Seattle and Abraham C. Berman is at the Toronto office.

Despite Contrary Report Fight Pictures Shown

Frank G. Hall, who controls the exclusive world rights to the motion pictures of the Willard-Dempsey boxing contest, held in Toledo, July 4th, wired the New York office of Independent Sales Corporation, Tuesday, that the pictures were shown to more than 40,000 people in Cleveland, Sunday. Contrary to the report in the daily papers to the effect that the Ohio State Censor Board had ruled against the showing of the pictures in the state, Mr. Hall informed his office that arrangements have been completed to show the pictures as a special attraction throughout Ohio, under the supervision of Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager.

Two Beats Claimed by Pathe News

Pathe News not only boasts of beating all of its camera rivals in announcing the winner of the Willard-Dempsey championship battle, but scored, as well over the newspapers, which were waiting to herald the result.

This "scoop" was followed two days later in being the first to give to the cinema audiences of New York the picturesque arrival of the giant British dirigible R-34, as it touched at Mineola after its record flight from Scotland.

New Series on Universal Program

Big Stories and Stars Announced for the Fall Season

THE fall program announcement of Universal brings to light the fact that many new stories worthy of high consideration have been purchased for screen production and that new stars are to be brought out by Universal within the coming year. In practically every case the star has been selected with the idea in mind of obtaining the star best qualified to portray the leading role. The newer pictures are said to carry out in full the purpose of the company to produce bigger and better pictures. The new plan calls for the production of a series of twelve high-class photo-dramas.

The series will be known as the Special Attraction series, a brand name long noted among Universal products. Many of Universal's well-known stars are cast in leading parts in this series and several new and heretofore unstarred players will make their debut as Universal stars. The pictures will be distributed on the open booking plan.

On August 11 the first of the dozen series will be released. It is the Joseph Medill Patterson story, "A Little Brother of the Rich." Frank Mayo, J. Barney Sherry and Kathryn Adams, are starred in this attraction with a strong supporting cast.

Only three productions of the Special Attraction series will be released each month. According to the plans now, no one of the series will be released in the last week of each month.

Harry Carey, Universal's Western actor, is the star of the second of the series, "The Ace of the Saddle."

The third picture is said to be a surprise to all concerned. Universal has secured Olive Tell to lead in the picture "The Brat," which was written by Richard Harding Davis and Jules Goodman. The story is said to be of exceptional value with regard to screen production.

"The Woman Under Cover," starring Fritzi Brunette, is the fourth of the series. Monroe Salisbury, who has long been one of Universal's most admired screen actors, will be the star of the fifth of the series. The story of "Sundown Trail" was written by J. G. Hawks. Alice Eliot, who has been cast as Salisbury's leading woman in many other Universal productions, will again be seen opposite him in this production.

"The Brute Breaker," a story of the Northwest country, said to abound with realism and yet retain the finer points of a clean story, will be the sixth production. Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams will be starred in this feature release.

Following the completion of the first six pictures the remaining six will be started, and an effort will be made to have them ready for showing to the exhibitor, all at one time. "Common Property," is the title of what is expected to be the sevenh of the series.

"Loot," a Saturday Evening Post story, written by Arthur Somers Roche, will be one of the series to be produced.

Another one of the Mary MacLaren productions which will be included in this series is the screen version of "Auld Jeremiah," taken from the novelette written by Henry C. Rowland. Waldemar Young is writing the scenario for this production.

The second Harry Carey production will be produced under the itle of "Jim of the Ranges."

It is stated many of the titles given above are tentative ones and subject to change.

Realart Discloses Its Year's Plans

First Vehicles of Star Trio Named; Forty Films This Year

THE first combined announcement of Realart's projects, and its stars' doings is made this week, a month after the formation of the concern. Not only have administrative staffs and field forces started to work, but three stars, Mary Miles Minter, Alice Brady and Constance Binney have been placed under contract.

Mary Miles Minter will make her bow as a Realart star in a picturization of the four "Anne" books, the classics of American girlhood by L. Montgomery. The title chosen is "Anne of Green Gables," from one of the series, and the stories narrated in the four will be embodied in one picture. William Desmond Taylor has been engaged to direct Miss Minter for Realart Pictures.

Miss Minter starts work at once at the studios of the Mary Miles Minter Productions in New York. Her contract covers a period of three and one half years. During this term, she will make six pictures yearly or a total of twenty for the life of the contract. Tremendously increased sums will be spent on her productions for stories, direction and support.

The securing of Alice Brady as a Realart star was considered a wonderful coup by the knowing ones in the profession. Negotiations for Miss Brady's services were under way for several weeks and her signature to a Realart contract was secured in the face of the keenest sort of competition. Her contract calls for her appearance in eight pictures during the next year. The ink was not dry on the contract before Miss Brady said that she wanted to start work immediately. Consequently this young woman is already hard at work at her New York studios on her first Realart picture under the direction of Kenneth Webb. This first Alice Brady production will be "Sinners," adapted from the stage play of the same name by Owen Davis.

Miss Brady will work on her Realart productions through the summer and later her strenuous assignment will be doubled as she will continue her screen work while on tour in "Forever After" during the coming theatrical season.

The third to be secured of the trio of luminaries to be starred in Realart Pictures is Constance Binney. Her first vehicle has been selected but she has not yet started production; the reason for this is obvious to the follower of theatricals. "39 East," the Rachel Crothers comedy, is one of the hits of the New York season.

The vehicle chosen for Constance Binney's Realart debut is "Erstwhile Susan." This is the stage success of a season or two ago with Mrs. Fiske. There is ample latitude in the part of the appealing Mennonite maid, "Barnabetta," to allow Miss Binney to bring to photo-dramatic life all the charms of her personality and youth.

Offices are in operation at the following central points, and all exchanges will be established by the end of July: New York, Lester W. Adler; Chicago, Harry W. Willard; Pittsburgh, Nat Barach; St. Louis, J. C. Ragland; Detroit, Cornelius G. Kingsley; Boston, Walter R. Scates; Buffalo, Henry E. Wilkinson; Cincinnati, Mark Goldman; Denver, Bert R. Latz.

Realart will release its first production in the early Fall. From thirty-five to fifty pictures will be the year's total.

Comedies on New Metro Program

Trio of Light Offerings Presented for August

As its August releases Metro announces three All Star Series productions, with Bert Lytell, Hale Hamilton, and Emmy Wehlen in the stellar roles. Each of the three productions, just completed at Metro's new studios in Hollywood, is of the sprightly and sparkling comedy variety and designed as diverting entertainment.

"Easy to Make Money" is the title of the Bert Lytell vehicle which is booked for release August 4. This is to be followed, on August 11, by "The Four Flusher," starring Hale Hamilton. "A Favor to a Friend" is the title of Emmy Wehlen's newest vehicle, which will be released August 18.

These three quality pictures, each of them produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General, will mark the end of the Metro program policy. This policy will be superseded, as already announced by Richard A. Rowland, president, and W. E. Atkinson, general manager, of Metro, by a policy of "fewer, bigger and better" pictures to be made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed solely by Metro Pictures Corporation.

"Easy to Make Money," Bert Lytell's concluding program picture, is a rattling comedy from an original story by John H. Blackwood. It was adapted to the screen by Finis Fox, and directed by Edwin Carewe.

"Easy to Make Money" releases an amusing narrative, enlivened by numerous fast-moving comedy situations. Its theme is the oft repeated assertion of its hero, "Jimmy" Slocum, that "it's easy to make money." Gertrude Selby has the leading feminine role.

"The Four Flusher," Hale Hamilton's starring vehicle, is also a comedy and likewise from original sources. It was written by Izola Forrester and Mann Pagg and made into a scenario by A. S. Lee. Harry L. Franklin directed the production.

The story of "The Four Flusher" is said to be romantic, breezy and replete with adventures, financial schemes and novel love interest.

"A Favor to a Friend" was written especially for Emmy Wehlen by Luther A. Reed, author of "In For Thirty Days," starring May Allison, and other successes. It completes the trio of summer comedies. Reed also made the scenario. John Ince directed and the photography was by Arthur Martinelli.

In the cast supporting Mis Wehlen are Jack Mulhall, who was her leading man in "Fools and Their Money." Joseph Kilgour, Hugh Fay, Effie Conley, Jack Miller, Jr., Harry Todd and Fred H. Warren.

Goldwyn Tries Repertory Plan

Players and Acting of Minor Parts Will Be Benefited

NEWS for actors and for the future of acting in motion pictures is contained in the announcement of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation that a repertory company is to be built up at Culver City, California. It is not a thing of the future, it is already established. It is more than a stock company such as the industry knew in the early days.

Samuel Goldwyn's plan is a departure in motion pictures in the endeavor to ensure acting of a quality that measures up to the stories secured for Eminent Authors Pictures and to support the Goldwyn stars. For some time past, it has been the policy with Goldwyn as with the majority of producing companies to employ supporting players for single pictures only. The Goldwyn organization goes beyond that, to the advantage of the actor folk and the quality of the productions.

Two of the newest recruits to the Goldwyn repertory company are Naomi Childers and Sidney Ainsworth. Mr. Goldwyn has also enlisted Herbert Standing, Aleck B. Francis, John Bowers, Macey Harlam, Florence Deshon and Kate Lester. Three of the company, Mr. Standing, Mr. Bowers and Miss Lester will appear in support of Madge Kennedy in the new Goldwyn picture, "Through The Wrong Door" by Princeton's other author—Jesse Lynch Williams.

Naomi Childers went gaily into pictures after a brief but successful stage career. Sidney Ainsworth has six years on the screen to his credit, besides numerous important Broadway performances on the speaking stage.

Special arrangement has just been made by the Goldwyn Company for the appearance of Betty Blythe in some of the productions of Eminent Authors Pictures. She goes to join the colony at Culver City, following her work as the featured member of the cast of the latest Select production. Both Miss Blythe and Miss Childers gained their early screen experience under the Vitagraph banner.

Not only does the repertory system benefit the player financially but it also gives the screen actor the same opportunity to develop his talents that are given to the star who is constantly appearing in new productions. Moreover, the director takes more interest and greater pains in developing the capabilities of his company under the repertory arrangement.

The repertory idea is expected to go even further. It is known for instance that the same minor characters appear in several of the novels of Eminent Authors. Rupert Hughes for example makes a point of keeping certain characters before his readers in succeeding novels. With a repertory company, the same actors will be employed to depict the same characters in the successive photodramas.

Three actors recently engaged by Rex Beach for Rex Beach Pictures are Curtis Cooksey, Edward Boulden and Fred Stanton.

Billy Shea to Assemble "Old Kentucky"

Louis B. Mayer, President of the Mayer Productions, Inc., and the Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., has engaged Billy Shea to take charge of the cutting and assembling of all future Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions. Despite his apparent youth, Shea has been engaged in film work for the past ten years. He resigned last week from the Douglas Fairbanks studio, where he directed the cutting and assembling of "Doug's" pictures, the most recent being "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo."

"Oh Boy" in Film Dress Gets Many Bookings

"A masterpiece of magic shadow and song" is how Alden Sedgwick has characterized Albert Capellani's "filmmusical" version of the hilarious Broadway success "Oh, Boy!" the first of the series of productions made by the distinguished director and released by Pathe. Added to the bookings of the big photoplay houses of the country, beginning with the two weeks run at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Chicago, The Opera House of Cleveland will begin a two weeks run of "Oh, Boy!" Aug. 3rd, contracts have just been closed for Keeney's Theatre, Brooklyn and the M. & S. circuit and the David V. Picker circuit. It also plays simultaneously in the Broadway theatres, New York—the Seventy-seventh Street, the Adelphi and the Symphony.

Scores of other important bookings are also scheduled.

Barriscale Feature Is Real Fashion Show

Exhibitors booking the Robertson-Cole feature, "The Woman Michael Married," starring Bessie Barriscale, which is being distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, are advised to exploit it as one of the biggest fashion shows of the year, in a statement issued this week. Miss Barriscale, who has always been noted for the exceptional gowns she wears before the camera, is said to outdo herself in "The Woman Michael Married." Beginning in an Annette Kellermann bathing costume, Miss Barriscale runs the gamut of fashions, in a remarkable display.

Director to Enter the Independent Field

John M. Stahl has completed direction of "Greater Than Love" feature with Mollie King for the American Cinema Corporation, and is now busily engaged in the editing and cutting of the picture. This is said to be one of the best things Mr. Stahl has done, and although the American Cinema Corporation offered him very generous inducements to direct the second King picture, he did not accept, as he intends to enter the independent producing field.

Sportsman's Wife Here on Antipodes Venture

Mrs. Snowy Baker, wife of the famous boxing promoter and physical training expert of Austarlia, arrived in Los Angeles July 1 to complete arrangements previously begun by her husband to take a company of players to Sydney, where three feature motion pictures are to be produced staring Mr. Baker.

Wilfred Lucas, who was seen recently in "The Westerners," produced by Hampton and from the book of the same name by Stewart Edward White, will go to Australia to direct Mr. Baker's pictures and to play leading roles in each production. He will be accompanied by his wife, Bess Meredith, who has been doing the stories. Each of the pictures, Mrs. Baker said, will have the Australian bush as its locale, and each will be produced along lines similar to American westerns. Mrs. Baker expects to return to the Antipodes, leaving San Francisco on August 12.

Mary Pickford Working on "Heart of the Hills"

Mary Pickford is filming "The Heart of the Hills" from the story of the same name by John Fox, Jr. The locale is laid in the mountains of Kentucky, and Miss Pickford, as Mabin Hawn, is a regular little daredevil who wears on her belt the biggest gun in the Cumberlands.

The picture is being directed by Sidney Franklin, and many of the mountain scenes are being filmed in the San Bernardino mountains near Redlands. As Mabin Hawn she is known as the best shot in the Kentucky mountains, and in order to be proficient in this part she has engaged an expert shot to teach her how to properly manipulate a revolver.

The weird character, Jason, is interpreted from youth to old age by Harold Goodman, Al Sears and Fred Huntley, respectively. Other members of the cast are Betty Bouton as Marjory; Claire McDowell, San de Grasse, Fred Warren, Fred Gilbert, Antrim Short and others.

Wanda Hawley is leading woman for Wallace Reid in "The Lottery Man," which James Cruze is directing at the Lasky studio.

Offer Post-Nature Specials

Paramount Will Release Twenty-six of Such Films During the Coming Season

ONE of the distinctive features of the Famous Players-Lasky offerings to exhibitors next season will be the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, a series of studies of Nature in her charming moods, acclaimed at private views and as most beautiful examples of picture photography.

These pictures, taken in various parts of the United States and Canada, are said to mark a new era in motion picture art, and, it is predicted, will open a new field of enjoyment not only to lovers of nature, but also to all other motion picture patrons who have a fondness for things of beauty.

Three of the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures were shown last season at special week engagements at the Rivoli theatre, in New York, and were well received by the surprised and pleased audiences. The critics of the New York City newspapers bestowed praise on them, for the beauty of their scenes and the delicate charm in which the subjects had been handled.

It is announced that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release twenty-six Paramount-Post Nature Pictures next season, the first picture to be released in the first week of September. Ten of the pictures already have been completed, and, although great care and time are spent on each production, the picture will be released regularly on a basis of one every two weeks.

Each of the twenty-six subjects deals with a distinct and separate theme, it is said. Each is complete in itself. The Paramount-Post Nature Pictures will be a single reel each.

The Post Pictures Corporation is a New York corporation with offices at 527 Fifth avenue. It has centered on the production of fine nature and travel pictures. The officers of the company are Albert Redfield, president, and Clyde E. Elliott, vice president and general director.

Author Approves Production

Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" Produced in Accord with Writer's Main Ideas

"BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON," says Zane Grey, the author, "is a motion picture producer with an author's idea." That idea is that a novel should be transformed to the screen containing all the elements that made it is successful book.

Benjamin B. Hampton's production of Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" is the first of that author's stories to be produced for the screen in accordance with the author's idea—the first to be produced under his personal supervision, and the first to receive his personal approval when completed.

After receiving letters from hundreds of people begging him not to allow any more of his stories to be filmed, the author decided never again to permit any of his stories to be filmed in such a way that readers of his books would be disappointed in their film version, but when he met Mr. Hampton and learned of his idea, he finally signed to have other stories of his filmed by Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., headed by Mr. Hampton.

"I knew exactly what I meant to do," Zane Grey said. "I meant to see that my book reached the public as my work, impressed with my individuality, and not with the conglomerate individualities of a dozen different scenario writers, directors, actors and producers. I felt that my novels had received the approbation of the public, and that if they were to be screened they should have my attention, just as they had in their original composition."

Mr. Grey chose the cast, engaged the director, hunted locations, designed sets and aided every one connected with the picture.

Intimate views of the South African bushman, nearest human approach to the Missing Link, in the privacy of his jungle mansion, is the feature of Novagraph slow-motion picture in Pathe Review, No. 14, released July 20th.

The Pathe Review also offers "Feathered Celebrities," which shows "Nature's Animated Fan," the Indian peacock, the most fascinating.

"Art in Silk," exposing in detail the Japanese artisan in weaving pictures out of gossamer strand of silk as fine as cobweb, is still another admirable Review offering shown in Pathecolor.

How a phonograph is made—everything, from the tuning up of the orchestra to the last high notes of the prima donna, or the fading sound of the speaker's voice,—constitutes a feature of the Review which will prove attractive to thousands of devotees of the speaking disc.

A Slavey's Trials, as Mabel Sees Them

Life as it is lived by the toilers below the street level in a modern palatial hotel, is presented from the comedy angle through five reels of laughter in Mabel Normand's latest Goldwyn production, "Upstairs." As a fitting successor to such comedies as "Sis Hopkins," "The Pest," and "When Doctors Disagree," Mabel Normand's new screen vehicle will add new admirers to the army of motion picture enthusiasts.

As the little slavey in the subkitchen of a hotel, toiling in overalls and cap, yet always hoping to share in the luxurious life in the hotel parlors "Upstairs," Mabel Normand runs the gamut of emotions from pathos to tears, and when she finally finds a way to play the "lady" for only an hour, her antics discloses hitherto unrevealed comic possibilities.

Victor Schertzinger was the director.

cepted until it has passed the editor and production manager. It should then go to the Director of Productions, accompanied by the written reasons of the other two men for their individual viewpoint. In passing upon it the Director of Productions should not only take into account the literary and production values of the story, he should also bring to his decision the special fund of trade knowledge, with which he should be possessed—information which is seldom accurately appreciated, even if possessed, by the present type of production heads. The Director of Productions thus not only becomes a court of review, he also acts as a balance wheel around which the policies and the methods of the company revolve.

After a story has been definitely accepted a conference between the Director of Productions, Production Manager and Editor, should determine the cast and select the Director to whom the "script" is to be given for production. It is then up to the Director, his assistant and cameraman, to go over the story and make further suggestions. When the working "script" is completed and approved a general conference should then be called, participated in by all the line department heads, and the combined intelligence of the entire organization brought to bear. It is then up to the Director and his personal staff, to breathe the spirit into the flesh and bone that has been so carefully prepared for him. Not having to divide his attention he is free to exert his creative genius to the utmost.

All working schedules thereafter should be adhered to as closely as is consistent with circumstances, and the attainment of the object desired. No alterations or additions should be made by the Director that would materially affect the "script," as originally decided upon in general conference, except upon endorsement of a majority opinion of, say, the Director of Productions, Manager of Productions, Editor, Writer and Director.

The system is based upon the principle that the play is fundamentally of first importance; that the collective trained intelligence of a scientific organization can be better trusted to recognize suggestions that are constructive, or to eliminate changes that are destructive, than any one man.

The value of the system proposed lies not only in its simplicity, or the fact that it places a responsible head in each department —there is nothing new in that except that it would, in this case, work practically instead of theoretically as is now the case in most studios—it excels rather because it does not permit genius to transend common sense, or commercialism to interfere with individual initiative and artistic expression, and that, in the making of a picture, each department shall have a share and a responsibility.

ONLY UNDER SUCH A SYSTEM CAN A PRODUCING ORGANIZATION ATTAIN THE MAXIMUM IN RESULTS, WITH THE LEAST EXPENDITURE OF WASTE, TIME AND MONEY.

In order to promote efficiency the heads of all departments should hold a general meeting twice a week, or oftener if necessary. If one department interferes with the efficiency of another, the matter should be taken up at these meetings and satisfactorily adjusted. As no chain is stronger than its weakest link, so no studio is stronger than its weakest essential department. These meetings would search out the weak links and eliminate or strengthen them.

While space will not permit a minute discussion of all the advantages of the system proposed, or the interlocking ramifications which necessarily extend to all the departments, sufficient has been touched upon to show conclusively the desirability of such a system of studio organization. The basis is laid. The balance is only a matter of systematization and detail.

The present criticism of directors is unfair. Give the director a competent organization, and compel it to do the work with which he is now saddled, and he will provide better productions. It is true that the intrinsic merit of an "idea" cannot always be foretold, and that stories and direction are, after all, a matter of viewpoint. When, however, that viewpoint does not take into consideration public intelligence, exhibitors' problems, and known and tested business economics, as well as technical and temperamental idiosyncrasies, it becomes untrustworthy, if not dangerous. Whenever "artistic temperaments" or "shoe-maker" methods are given free rein, and one is as bad as the other, productions are bound to get into a rut. With a dozen different studios, run in the same unscientific manner, we have a dozen different ruts, for all of which one hundred million people and twenty thousand exhibitors must suffer, not to say a word about the manufacturers themselves.

Lucy Cotton has been engaged to appear in "The Measure of Love," which Robert Z. Leonard will shortly begin filming. It is understood that Conway Tearle will play opposite Miss Cotton.

Good Report on Bulls Eyes

Mendolson Declares Billy West and Gale Henry Comedies Are Going Well

THAT the Billy West and Gale Henry comedies released by Bulls Eye Film Corporation, in No. 729 Seventh avenue, New York, have fulfilled every pre-release promise made for them is clearly indicated in the road reports forwarded to New York by James L. Mendelson, special representative of the company, who is on a visit to all exchanges handling Bulls Eye productions.

Mendelson is in Omaha, Nebraska, for a moment, visiting at the Fontenelle exchange. In his last letter he writes:

"I have changed my plans a bit, to meet some of the exhibitors, here and there, who have booked the Billy West and Gale Henry comedies. The general opinion is that our comedies have precisely the appeal necessary to keep an audience in the best of humor, and all the exhibitors I have talked with have expressed a wish for more of these offerings.

"The Middle West, as well as the Eastern States I visited, are enjoying a period of unprecedented prosperity, and this may be due to several things: the end of the war, the passing of influenza or our comedies. Figure it out yourself. Billy West comedies are popular with all classes of theatre-goers, and I find this is true of the Gale Henry comedies. Each one seems to be better than the last—this is what the exhibitors say.

"In the Middle West I feel sure we could sell one a week, or more often, if we could deliver them."

Conditions in the South are equally prosperous, Mr. Mendelson writes with a growing demand for good, clean comedies.

Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls Eye Film Corporation, said last week his reports from Mr. Mendelson indicate to him that the firm is on the right road and traveling at the proper speed.

Unusual Tribute to Picture

Houston Post Editorially Commends "New Moon," Expose of Bolshevism

IN view of the fact that one or two anarchist and socialist newspapers have seen fit to take execption to "The New Moon," it is interesting to note that in Houston, Texas, the Houston Post, considered one of the leading newspapers of the Southwest, defends this Norma Talmadge story,. not only in its motion picture sections, but also on its editorial page.

Mr. L. J. VanLaeys, the vice president of the Houston Post, recently wrote to Mr. Jos. M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Corporation: "Under separate cover I am sending to you a copy of the Houston Post. On our editorial page appears a story built around Miss Norma Talmadge ,and her new picture, 'The New Moon.' Space is not for sale on our editorial page, and it is very rare indeed, when a 'movie star' breaks in on the editorial page of the Houston Post, but we felt this picture merits unusual space."

This editorial has created so much comment in the South that hundreds of exhibitors are framing it in the center of a group of stills from "The New Moon," and using it for lobby display. Copies will be furnished exhibitors if they write to Beulah Livingstone, publicity director, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge Film Corporations, 318 East Forty-eighth street, New York.

The editorial lauds the picture's presentation of the more revolting orders of the soviet acting under authority of the Lenine government, and says "in no respect could the great moving picture interests of the country render more notable or more effective service to the nation at this time than by presenting in such productions as 'The New Moon' and by such artists as Miss Talmadge, an accurate portrayal of the life of Russia under Bolshevism."

which the Equity corporation will handle each year.

The new distributing company have taken offices in the Aeolian Hall, on West Forty-second street, New York, and Mr. Somborn and Mr. Schnitzer are already active at that address handling the mass of business detail which always develops when an organization of this size and importance is being shipped into shape. In the same offices there will be established a sizeable department for promotion, sales, and publicity, under the direction of "Bill" Rudolph who has represented the Clara Kimball Young interests in the East for the past two years.

In this preliminary announcement the personnel of the new company is represented by but two names, those of Mr. Somborn and Mr. Schnitzer. In the near future there will be added to the roster of vitally interested executives and employees the names of a number of other men who have long been prominently identified in the industry.

Dr. Holly Denies Story in Previous Issue

In the issue of May 17, an article was carried stating that the Bureau of Commercial Economics was to circulate labor films for the Government.

The facts of the matter are that the Bureau of Commercial Economics is not a governmental bureau. The U. S. Department of Labor, Motion Picture Section, of which David K. Miles is chief, attends to picture distribution. Dr. Holly, director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics has stated he gave no interview or statement to the press in this instance.

It therefore appears that our source of information, while undoubtedly well meaning, erred in mentioning the Bureau of Commercial Economics or Dr. Holly in this connection.

To Look Into the Porto Rico Import Film Tax

Paul H. Cromelin, Chairman of the Expert Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, expects to shortly call a meeting of the members of this division early in the week, when consideration will be given to the new revenue law of Porto Rico requiring duty of two cents per lineal foot upon all films imported into that territory.

Members of the Export Division have expressed themselves as being unable to understand why they should be compelled to pay revenue tax upon motion picture film imported into one of the possessions of the United States.

Increase Capital Stock

The capital stock of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of the South Eastern States (Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida) has recently been increased from $60,000 to $100,000, fully paid in. Business is reported excellent.

Blimp Carries Film and Letter from Actress

When the R-34 leaves Mineola, L. I., it carries a personal letter from Anita Stewart to Sir William Jury of the Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., 21 Tower street, Upper St. Martin's Lane, London, England, the exclusive agent for the Stewart-Mayer-First National Productions in the United Kingdom, and one from Louis B. Mayer, president of the Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., to the exhibitors of the United Kingdom. Most important, a film is carried.

Arrangements were made for this undertaking with Lieut. John D. Shotter of the Royal Air Forces, London, England, and chief engineer and officer of the crew of the R-34, whose base is at East Fortune, Scotland. In order to enable Lieut. Shotter to accomplish this achievement, he was forced to discard certain equipment which he is allowed to carry by the government. The motion picture film is a single reel showing various scenes from the different First National special productions Anita Stewart appears in.

Upon the arrival of the R-34 in East Fortune, Scotland, according to the statement of Lieut. Shotter to Joseph F. Lee, who arranged the details of the undertaking, Lieut. Shotter will be granted twenty-four hours leave.

and we don't howl when we are licked like he does.

"Let me tell you—the motion picture game will never get anywhere until we have honest, straight producers, exchanges and exhibitors. It's going to be a long, long time to get out the weeds, but some day let's hope it will come.

"My opinion of the picture game to day is that it is a free for all fight where producers, exchange men and exhibitors are all placed in the ring blind-folded and told to go to it. Some day the blind will be taken off and we will shake hands and walk out of the arena good friends. We will make the cinema a pleasure rather than a battle-ground. But till that time, 'God Be with Us!'"

"Dawn" Next Blackton Film

First Subject "Moonshine and Shadow" is Completed; Arranging Distribution

J. STUART BLACKTON has completed the cutting and titling of "Moonshine and Shadow," the initial release of his new company, The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., and has begun work on the first scenes of "Dawn," the second of the series, at his studios in Brooklyn.

Under the working plans of his new organization, production will be carried on continuously, and since "Moonshine and Shadow" will probably not be released until the beginning of the fall season, Commodore Blackton expects to have "Dawn" ready for showing shortly after, with the third of the list also then well under way.

Stanley Olmsted, chief of the Blackton script department, has written the scenario of "Dawn," Eleanor H. Porter's latest best seller for which Commodore Blackton purchased at what is claimed a record price exclusive picture rights soon after the novel was first put on the market. Eleanor H. Porter is also the author of the "Pollyanna" stories.

The complete cast for "Dawn" has not yet been announced but it is known that the roster will list six of the principals who will be seen in "Moonshine and Shadow." Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, the Blackton stellar team, will play the leading roles, with Eddie Dunn and Lefty Alexander, both of whom Commodore Blackton has under contract for a year, playing important roles, while the other two of the sextette are Fanny Rice, character comedienne, and Margaret Barry, the Russian actress, whom Commodore Blackton has just re-engaged for the new production.

O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, the producer's lawyers and commercial representatives, are now negotiating distribution arrangements for the entire product of the new Blackton company which promises to be an important factor in the industry during the big season at hand.

MacManus Planning Surprise

"Lost Battalion" Acclaimed, Producer Has Other Ideas for Future Pictures

AUDIENCES who have witnessed the two private showings of "The Lost Battalion" have expressed their belief that Edward A. MacManus has inculcated the trinity of art, technique and originality in this production.

Major General Alexander has officially recognized the value of the MacManus production for both education and recreation and military men who saw the first showing admitted that the military tactics carried out by the advance line, establishing runner posts and deploying in the tangle of thicket and almost impenetrable forest is one of the most practical lessons in military training ever visualized.

The romance of "The Lost Battalion" (and there is plenty of humor injected into the story of the camp life and training of the men) is that of the Melting Pot, the amalgamation of 42 different races, all of whom have their own respective sense of humor and chagrin. It is a joining together of all sorts and conditions of men who in the uniform of Uncle Sam are regenerated—where regeneration is necessary—and all made great Americans.

"The Lost Battalion" will be released shortly from the MacManus proving grounds at No. 2 West 47th street, where Edward A. MacManus is preparing other surprises not only to startle the eighteen million daily moving picture theatre goers, but the trade itself.

Madge Kennedy—the Modest Woman

WHERE'S Diogenes with his lantern? We understand he is now looking for an honest, quiet, unassuming woman, one who hasn't the least little bit of conceit. Tell him to put his lantern down and search no more, for we have found her. She is Madge Kennedy, one of Goldwyn's stars. And so quiet and unassuming is she that we want to bring her before the old man, put her on a pedestal and say to him there she is, gaze upon her for she is the best of her race.

When seen by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS at the Hotel Belmont and asked what her future plans were she answered: "I haven't any. I am living in the country with my husband amongst the green trees and vegetables and enjoying life to its fullest, playing tennis, rowing, swimming, etc. Why yesterday, I played thirty-six games of tennis with my husband and won every game," we think we heard her say. "I adore the country," she said, "and have no desire to live in the city again, but would always want to be near it.

"The country gives one a chance to rest up and get new fresh ideas and keep the mind in better condition.

"New York is the center of everything and one should always try to spend October, November, December and January there if possible.

"I am a California girl and love its climate, hills and waters and also have my full share of local pride but could not stay there all the time as I think it is not good for one to stay long in the same place. To visit other cities always relieves the monotony."

"What are your views on picture production?" asked the interviewer.

"I think the story is the main consideration, the director next and the star last. A star should dominate the story and should always be surrounded by capable actors. The director, star, and those concerned in the production should always be in constant consultation.

"The public wants anything that is good and a story with suspense and heart interest always appeals to it.

"Life is only a matter of viewpoint, some see it one way while others see it in another way. It is full of moods and color, light and shade and there is only a hair's breadth between comedy and tragedy.

"Costume plays have never been portrayed in a human way but I think they could be made tremendously interesting if handled right. Take for instance the lives of Marie Antionette and Mary Queen of Scots. I don't know whether pies were thrown in those days but they are also interesting.

"I have never undervalued the pie element or the element of wonderful humor in slapstick comedy."

And then she made a confession. "Do you know," she said, "I have always had a secret ambition to play with Chaplin."

And then we fainted and had visions of Miss Kennedy throwing pies and doing stunts never equalled by Chaplin.—Frank Leonard.

Censorship Again Topic in Cleveland

Censorship, the movie's biggest buga-boo, and its twin brother, the local license tax, has begun to walk in Cleveland again.

The City Council's judiciary committee entertained a debate on the subject of local censorship and the local license tax last week, in which the representatives of the Cleveland churches attempted to show why the entertainments of the city, both legitimate and motion picture, should have local supervision, and the representatives of the theatres stated the extent of the hardship such action would entail.

The debate arose following the introduction of the ordinance introduced by Councilman Harry C. Gahn, providing for the censorship of legitimate, vaudeville and motion picture attractions in Cleveland, and a theatre license tax of $25 a year.

This question of local censorship is not new in Cleveland. It was up before the council about five months ago. At that time, the subject was thoroughly thrashed out, and decided in favor of the theatres, and against censorship, through the efforts of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League.

The initial debate resulted in nothing definite. The president of the judiciary committee failed to render a decision. The discussion will be resumed again next Monday before the same body.

Finish Lone Star Drama

William Stiner has finished the first of his new series of two reel Westerns, to be known as the Lone Star Dramas. These will be released through the Arrow Film Corporation and will star Harry Myers, who was starred in "The Masked Rider," the Western serial also released by Arrow.

Theatre Man Resigns

David J. Lustig, who for the past year has successfully managed the Empire theater of Bridgeport, having in that period boosted business at that house more than one hundred per cent., has resigned that position and will sever his managerial connections on Saturday, July 19.

what these two men think of the Cleveland Board, I am glad to give their names and addresses, so you may write them. The men I refer to are Mr. Emery Downs, of the Knickerbocker theatre, and Mr. M. B. Horwitz, of the Fountain theatre, both of Cleveland.

As my friend, Joe Lee, says, "It was the difference of opinion which made horse racing a grand sport." This may be true of the particular question at hand. If so, I think everyone interested would be benefited by an open discussion in your columns of the whys and wherefors of Film Exchange Managers' Boards, such as the one which I know best, in its association with the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

Very truly yours,
W. E. LUSK,
General Manager First National Exhibitors Co.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Jane Novak has the leading feminine role in support of Earle Williams in "The Wolf," the picture version of Eugene Walter's drama, which is directed by James Young.

Gladys Leslie, who has been confining herself to light comedies and comedy dramas, has an emotional role in her new Vitagraph picture, "Belinda Puts Her Hair Up."

Mildred Harris is starred in the Universal-Jewel production, "Forbidden"

Completing First "Big Four"

Fairbanks Putting Finishing Touches on Picture; No Expense Is Spared

"THE lid is off" the cash box out at the Douglas Fairbanks studios, at Hollywood, California. September 1st will see the release of Fairbanks' first independent production through United Artists Corporation and Doug has promised to "show something," now that he can produce his pictures his own way.

There are innumerable evidences that the "Big Four's" first release will more than make good the claims that have been made for it. Fairbanks is producing his picture, bearing in mind that big theatres the country over have booked it for extraordinarily long runs, and he has set about to furnish the exhibitors of the country with a picture that will draw business on the same basis that legitimate stage attractions do. In other words, the motion picture theatres of the country are to be given a production, says Fairbanks, that cannot be measured by ordinary runs. This picture will be measured in terms of weeks, whereas pictures heretofore, have been measured in terms of days.

Just as an indication of the way Fairbanks is going about this production, it is interesting to note that he has spent $40,000 for the erection of one set alone.

The cast supporting Mr. Fairbanks, which includes Marjory Daw, Frank Campeau, Sam Sothern, brother of E. H. Sothern, and Albert McQuarrie, among many others, is a further indication of the way Fairbanks is "going to it," to make his first shot for the "Big Four" a real picture.

The actual filming of the production is well along toward completion.

Florence Reed Work Popular

West Follows East in Praise; Los Angeles Critics Like "Code of Honor"

THAT the popularity of Florence Reed and her drawing power as a screen artist are no less true of the West than of the East is evidenced by reports received from Coast exhibitors and by criticisms appearing in recent issues of the Coast newspapers.

Commenting on "Her Code of Honor," which ended its Los Angeles run last week, the Examiner says in part: "Florence Reed has found a vehicle thoroughly suited to bring out the splendid dramatic attainments of this charming young actress. The plot, daring in the extreme, is still so delicately written that no sense of shock is there. The play is constructed with great subtlety and the audience senses the tremendous situation of the climax only a few moments before the denouement comes. From that moment on the tensity continues until the end, when, despite the seeming impasse, peace and happiness comes to the hero and heroine."

"There is a powerful elemental appeal in 'Her Code of Honor,'" says the Los Angeles Express, "that proves quite irresistible as the story unfolds, and affords Florence Reed great opportunity to play upon the real chords of human nature. She realizes entirely one's ideal of the finest work the screen can give us. The critic of the Los Angeles Times has this to say of the same attraction: "Florence Reed is an actress with a large following. In 'Her Code of Honor' the star's emotional abilities are displayed to the utmost. In this production she excels many of her past efforts, playing two distinct roles and scoring heavily. Miss Reed's gowns, too, demand attention."

Wide Territorial Sale of "Masked Rider"

"The Masked Rider," the fifteen episode serial produced by William Steiner and released by the Arrow Film Corporation, has been sold for every territory in the world with the exception of three territories. "The Masked Rider" is a Western serial starring Harry Myers, Ruth Stonehouse and Paul Panzer.

Ambitious Plans for Paramount Magazine

Production plans made for the Paramount Magazine by Nathan Friend, head of the Educational and Industrial Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, contemplate, it is said, one of the most varied and interesting short subjects to be put on the market next season. Production already has begun on this series, it is stated, and releasing will commence September 1. Fifty-two numbers of the Paramount Magazine will be issued next season.

The Paramount Magazine will comprise a series of the best epigrams appearing in the Smart Set Magazine, the best of the epigrams written by Helen Rowland in the New York World and syndicated to more than 300 newspapers throughout the country, animated technical drawings of popular scientific subjects appearing in Popular Mechanics, and animated comic cartoons. Each issue of the magazine will run one full reel.

In producing the Paramount Magazine, Mr. Friend feels that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has made alliances that will insure a maximum of benefit to exhibitors. The scientific animated drawings will be made in conjunction with the editorial staff of Popular Mechanics, one of the most widely circulated of national magazines.

Redistributing Territory Adds Two Branches

A redistricting of much of the Southern territory heretofore served by four of the Famous Players-Lasky branch offices, involving the establishing of two new exchanges, has been necessitated by the increased demands already made upon these offices under the Selective Booking plan.

The new exchanges will be located at Oklahoma City, Okla., and Charlotte, N. C., and will effect the territory now served by the Kansas City, Dallas, Washington and Atlanta exchanges.

All data regarding the new territory is being segregated in the Kansas City, Dallas, Washington and Atlanta offices and will be transferred to the Oklahoma City and Charlotte exchanges when they are opened. No appointments have yet been made for the new offices.

George Norris, manager of M. E. Comerford Amusement Co., Scranton, Pa.

Twenty-six Paramount-Post Nature's Yearly

The trend of exhibitors toward good short subjects that lend tone and variety to their programs is exemplified by the heavy bookings of the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, which, according to a statement by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, have had an exceptional reception since the announcement that Famous Players-Lasky was to release them next season.

Aside from the originality of the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, the success which they achieved when shown at special engagements last spring at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, has been a large factor in their increasing popularity. Five of the pictures were shown at the Rivoli for week engagements.

The Paramount-Post Nature Pictures will be released on a basis of twenty-six a year, beginning September 1. Nearly half of the subjects already have been completed.

N. A. M. P. I. Meets Aug. 5 in Rochester, N. Y.

Notice is given that the Third Annual Meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., will be held at the Hotel Seneca, Rochester, N. Y., on Tuesday, August 5, 1919, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

Each member is urged to attend in person. If unable to do so, proxy should be properly filled out and filed at the Association's offices in New York on or before August 2, 1919, or, if proxy is to be filed thereafter, at the Association's headquarters, Hotel Seneca, Rochester, N. Y.

Universal Adds Players and Director

Two new "heavy" actors, one new lead and one assistant director have been added to the Universal forces lately. All are known widely in the screen world.

Val Paul, who will be remembered as the "heavy" in many of the old Universal features starring the late Myrtle Gonzalez has rejoined the Universal forces in the role of assistant director to Lynn Reynolds.

Arthur Carewe, who has been playing heavies in support of Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen, has joined Universal to play the genteel villain in "Auld Jeremiah," a new Mary MacLaren feature.

Spottiswoode Aitken, the veteran character actor, has been engaged by Universal to play the title role in the above production which was written by Henry C. Rowland.

Exchange Man Promoted

Following its set policy of advancing men from the ranks, the Fox Film Corporation has recently promoted M. H. Greenwald, former film salesman, to the position of assistant manager of the Cleveland exchange. Mr. Greenwald has been covering the Ohio territory in the Fox interests for the past year.

Directors for Metro Pictures

Conway, John Ince and Otto Named to Handle Three Stage Successes

THE directors who are to guide the Screen Classics, Inc., stars Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and May Allison in picturizations of the respective stage success, "Lombardi, Ltd.," "Please Get Married" and "Fair and Warmer" have been selected by Maxwell Karger, director-general of all Screen Classics, Inc., productions. The forthcoming productions are all to be distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Karger announces that he has engaged Jack Conway to direct Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd." Mr. Lytell will be starred in an elaborate screen version of Frederic and Fanny Hatton's smart comedy of foibles and fashions in the role of Tito Lombardi, Fifth avenue designer of women's wraps.

John Ince, who has a long list of Metro successes to his credit, has been selected to direct Viola Dana in "Please Get Married." In this farce, by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, which has just closed a six months' run on Broadway with Edith Taliaferro and Ernest Truex in the principal roles, Miss Dana will be seen as Muriel Ashley.

Henry Otto, another former Metro director, will direct the beautiful May Allison in a picturization of Avery Hopwood's side-splitting farce, "Fair and Warmer."

Finish Alma Rubens Picture

First Production of Star with Own Company Soon Ready As Pathe Release

WORK has been completed on the filming of the first of the Alma Rubens Productions to be distributed by Pathe, entitled "Paradise Annie," starring Miss Rubens under the direction of the author, Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman. Cutting and titling probably will be finished within ten days.

The final scenes were "shot" in the big Paragon Studio at Fort Lee, N. J. The set, representing a huge ballroom with a grand staircase at one end, was said to be one of the largest and most massive ever constructed for the comparatively few ballroom scenes called for by the script. The set covered an entire end of the studio and was provided with a firmly laid dance floor on which one hundred couples waltzed, fox-trotted and one-stepped to the strains of a large orchestra while the camera ground off the action. Some very unusual shots were obtained during the scene by Cameraman Harold Rosson.

In the title role of "Paradise Annie," the young star has what is probably the best opportunity of her career to exhibit her rare ability for sympathetic portrayal. "Paradise Annie" is a little girl of the poorer class, working in a boarding house.

A strong cast supports Miss Rubens in her initial production with her own company. Her leading man is Lumsden Hare, who supported Elsie Ferguson in her last three pictures. Others in the cast are Robert Williams, Mercita Esmonde, Gladys Valerie and Mathilde Brundage.

John Bowers, leading man for the past year in Goldwyn Pictures, has renewed his contract and is enjoying a holiday before resuming work at the Culver City Studios.

George H. Melford is employed in arranging details for his forthcoming production of "Everywoman" for Paramount-Artcraft, which he will direct and in which Violet Heming will have the title role.

Harrison Starts Well on Review Project

P. S. Harrison, who formerly ran "Harrison's Exhibitors Reviews" for Motion Picture News, is said to have started off with a bang on his new venture.

Harrison will furnish his reviews as a service, daily, to exhibitors who desire frank, unbiased criticism of current subjects.

Reports by wire if desired will be furnished, and the specific needs of the individual theatre will be catered to. Market advice will be practical, and brief statements of the picture's value to the exhibitor will be included.

Mr. Harrison has offices at 47 West 42nd Street, New York City.

To Syndicate Story of "Everybody's Business"

H. C. Witwer, one of the popular humorous authors of the country has written the story of "Everybody's Business." Mr. Witwer is a contributor to "Collier's Weekly," "American Magazine," Evening Mail Syndicate," "Cosmopolitan," and many other publications. His two recent novels, viz., "From Baseball to Boches" and "A Smile a Minute" have created millions of fans for him.

Arrangements are being made by W. H. Productions Co., to syndicate "Everybody's Business" by Mr. Witwer in the leading newspapers throughout the country.

Signed to Direct a Series for American

George Archainbaud, who has completed his contract with Albert Capellani, has just been signed to direct a series of pictures for the American Cinema Corporation and is now working on George Middleton's latest script, featuring Louise Huff. Mr. Archainbaud will be remembered for the pictures he made with such stars as Montague Love, Gail Kane, Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon, Alice Brady and June Caprice.

Trade Rules Obnoxious; Exchange Man Resigns

Because his views were not harmonious with the Trade Rules put into effect by the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, George Wilson has resigned as manager of the Cincinnati branch of the Standard Film Service exchange. The pre-payment of films was particularly obnoxious to Mr. Wilson, whose sympathies were all with the exhibitor.

Set in New Farrar Picture Is Massive

For four weeks one hundred and fifty men worked night and day to complete the most massive setting for the first Geraldine Farrar-Goldwyn production of the new season. The scene is a reproduction of one of the most famous streets in Petrograd. Its solidity and fidelity to the original have been vouched for by many of the 2,500 extra people, some of them Russian refugees, and the fact that 250,000 feet of lumber was used.

A photo in a million. This is probably one of the highest dives on record made for a motion picture. Charles Hutchinson made this one in the Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," distributed by Pathe

Jose Starts Work on "Mothers of Men"

Edward Jose, the director, who recently formed his own company, to be known as the Edward Jose Productions, began work on the first of his own pictures, "Mothers of Men," last week. "Mothers Of Men" is a screen adaptation by Charles Whittaker, from the well known novel of the same name, by Henry William Warner and DeWitte Kaplan.

Mr. Jose has engaged Lumsden Hare as leading man. The name of the leading lady will be announced later. Marguerite Courtot has an important role, Cesare Gravina will have a character part. Pierre Collosse, Julia Hurley and William Gaxton have also been engaged.

New Paper Necessary on "Red Lantern"

Metro Pictures Corporation has found it necessary to order a new supploy of paper and other advertising accessories to meet the needs of exhibitors now booking the great Nazimova super-production, "The Red Lantern," of which Metro is the sole distributor. This second order for paper had to be made, notwithstanding that in advance of the release of the spectacle-drama Metro made provision for what was figured to be record business with the quarter-of-a-million-dollar special.

Reports from Metro exchanges indicate an undiminished demand all over the country to see Nazimova in what has been called her greatest screen role.

Strike and Riots Hurt Winnipeg Theatres

The general workmen's strike in Winnipeg, Canada, together with the riots ensuing brought about a peculiar condition in motion picture houses.

Six of the leading theatres had week runs of their booked attractions whereas in normal days they follow the plan of splitting weeks.

Some of the new releases have been brought to Winnipeg from distant cities as the personal baggage of exchange representatives because of the uncertainty of express and mail service.

Youngsters in Briggs Comedies Entertained

As an evidence of their appreciation of the excellent work done by the children and adults who appear in the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, Clare A. Briggs, producer of the comedies, and Mrs. Briggs entertained the members of the company July 6 at a picnic at their home in New Rochelle. Others present included J. B. Gillespie, treasurer of Briggs Pictures, Inc., and Alex Yokel, vice-president and general manager.

Although the members of the company are used to seeing themselves on the screen in comedies, hereafter they will be able to see themselves in "off-stage" motion pictures, for a cameraman is going to be present with a motion picture camera and photograph scenes about the grounds of the Briggs home.

Canadian Concern Makes Novel Aero Pictures

A new Canadian moving picture institution has been established with the organization of the Canadian Aero Film Company with offices in Toronto, Ontario. This company is somewhat of a novelty in that its operation consists of a mixture of air and celluloid. The object of the concern is to make novelty pictures with the aid of aeroplanes and several well-known moving picture men are behind the proposition.

The sales manager is Sidney B. Taube, a former and widely known exchange manager of the Dominion. Another official of the company is Blaine Irish, formerly with the British-Canadian Pathe News, who has become the director of the Canadian Aero Film Company.

Sails to Join Rowland

Harry J. Cohen, newly appointed manager of the foreign department of Metro Pictures Corporation, has obtained passports and booked passage for himself and Mrs. Cohen on the White Star Line steamship Baltic, sailing July 12 for Liverpool. Mr. Cohen is making the trip abroad to join Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, who is making a survey of the motion picture field in Europe.

The Insurance of Common Sense

Fire Insurance for your theatre--a Surety Bond for your Treasurer--but how can you insure yourself good pictures --particularly when you have to show more than you, personally can view?

You can do it by first viewing the "wildcats"--the "long shots"--the "scoops." These are the pictures that need careful estimating, not productions like Universal Special Attractions, which are uniformly of the very highest quality.

Insure yourself of at least one super-picture each week by booking a Universal Special Attraction. View it, if you can--but, if you can't, put in your time viewing the productions that you're not so sure of.

Choose First of Series for Blanche Sweet

Jesse D. Hampton announces that the first of the series of special dramas, in which Blanche Sweet will be starred for Pathe releases, is "A Woman of Pleasure," a famous English melodrama by James Willard. It was for years at the Adelphia, London and has been shown all over the world. It was purchased specially as a vehicle for Miss Sweet.

The production is to be both elaborate and spectacular. It will be costly but Mr. Hampton has issued orders to the heads of the various departments at the Hollywood studios, to make every act absolutely correct and locations must be true to the locale described in the story. Wallace Worsley will direct. The story was picturized by George Elwood Jenks of the Hampton Scenario Staff.

Foreign Rights Bought on Texas Guinans

Sidney Garrett, acting for J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., closed a contract with The Frohman Amusement Corporation acquiring the thirteen Texas Guinan two reel productions for the entire foreign market, and within a few hours after the signing of that contract Mr. Garrett disposed of the entire series for South America and part of the Continent.

Mr. Garrett's concern has also acquired for the foreign market the special feature production "Once to Every Man" and the twenty-six Mack Swain single reel comedies, also released the The Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Supplementary Push Is Aiding "Common Clay"

"Common Clay," A. H. Woods' screen production of the Harvard prize play by Cleaves Kinkead, is being pushed beyond all previous records by the supplementary campaign inaugurated by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The intention to have it shown in all of the film houses of the United States is said to be within realization. In some instances return dates have been played and the reception in large cities have been more than equalled by its appreciation in smaller centers.

Russia Wants Film Learning

Commercial Representatives on Visit Tell of Nation's Reconstruction Plan

THE place of the motion picture in Russia's reconstruction plans was clearly defined by her commercial representatives to the United States a few days ago during the visit of M. and Mme. Gennady Alexandrevitch Bersenyeff, Miss Mary Woodyard of Sydney, Australia, and Howard D. Hadley, American consul in Russia for the last two years.

M. Bersenyeff is president of the Sincredsoyoz, one of the world's greatest cooperative credit systems in the world. It is an organization of 1,000,000 members, serving 6,000,000 Russian people and new methods of agriculture, manufacture and business will be demonstrated to Russia's huge population through the cinematographic medium.

While at Universal City, M. Bersenyeff met Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company. Mr. Laemmle told the Russian official and Consul Hadley, representing the American government, of Universal's entire willingness to serve American interests and humanity's progress in applying the motion picture to Russian conditions.

M. Bersenyeff said that the Kolchak regime which he believes has established itself as successor to the Lenin-Trotsky-Bolshevik influence or will have, conclusively, within a few months, strongly favors the introduction of the cinema as an educational force in Russia and a number of cameras and projection outfits have already been ordered. While at Universal City M. Bersenyeff and Mr. Hadley inspected methods of productions and through the good offices of Mr. Laemmle learned much of the commercial science of distribution.

Name Comedy for Viola Dana

Metro Star to Appear in "Please Get Married," a Big Broadway Play Success

VIOLA DANA'S first starring vehicle for Screen Classics, Inc., in the inauguration of its "fewer and better" productions scheduled to begin in the early fall, is "Please Get Married," the farce by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Brown, which is now in the sixth month of its New York run and going strong.

Miss Dana has just completed her work at the new Metro studios in Hollywood in "The Microbe," Henry Altimus' Ainslee's Magazine story, which was adapted to the screen by June Mathis. "The Microbe" is the last of Miss Dana's Metro program pictures, and upon finishing her work before the camera in this production Miss Dana decided to take a rest in preparation for her forthcoming appearances in "Please Get Married."

For a fortnight, therefore, the comedienne will seek rest and recreation—dividing her time between her cosy cottage, "Heartsease," in Hollywood, which she occupies with her mother and sister, Shirley Mason, and motoring over the endless miles of wonderful roads that are the pride and boast of Southern California.

Meanwhile Mr. Kargar, who as director general of all Screen Classics, Inc., productions, will personally supervise every detail of Miss Dana's forthcoming appearance in "Please Get Married," is whipping things into shape to make a picture that will surpass anything she has ever done.

Miss Dana was directed in "The Microbe" by Henry Otto, who also directed her in "Some Bride." Her cameraman was again John Arnold. Kenneth Harlan plays the leading male role and the cast includes Arthur Maude, Ned Norworth, Bennie Bill and Lucy Donahue.

Kiewert Imports New Carbon

Robert W. Kiewert, president and general manager of the Carbon Imports Co., of 110 West 42nd Street, New York, has returned from Europe after completing arrangements there for his firm to handle the new Kinarko carbon. Mr. Kiewert states that the carbon, which is manufactured by the General Electric Co., Ltd., will prove to be a great surprise to the projectionist who tries out the samples which he may obtain on request.

Mr. Kiewert, who has been engaged in the importation of carbons for 14 years, has associated with him Mr. Herbert Schiff, who until recently was in the U. S. Service as a lieutenant in Naval Aviation.

"Open Your Eyes" Shows in Philadelphia

The State Health Film, Inc., producers of "Open Your Eyes" at the Central theatre, have made arrangements with the Messrs. Shubert for the presentation of their picture in the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia. The film concern will take possession of the theatre the last of this week, and after a private showing to the Penna. Board of Censors, plan to present the propaganda feature film in the Quaker City. With this theatre, "Open Your Eyes" will be shown in three cities, New York, Boston and Philadelphia in as many first-class theatres.

Desmond in Another Picture of the West

The success attending William Desmond's dip into Western comedy dramas under the management of Jesse D. Hampton, has led the latter to star him in another attraction along the lines of "The Prodigal Liar" and "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," each of which is a Robertson-Cole feature distributed by Exhibitors Mutual. "A Sage Brush Hamlet" is the title of the Desmond Picture which will follow "Bare-Fisted Gallagher."

George Elwood Jenks, well known author and scenario writer, wrote "A Sage Brush Hamlet." Joseph J. Franz directed it under the supervision of Jesse D. Hampton.

After all—for honesty—for sincerity—for the plain, straightforward language that convinces, you've got to go back to the small town

"Well—I got thru with 'The Heart of Humanity.' Had the biggest crowd that this town ever had since it started in 1882. I advertised it well, as you can see by the bill of advertisements I used. The best part of it was—the show backed up everything the advertisements represented.

"Ex-Congressman Frank M. Eddy introduced 'The Heart of Humanity' to the crowd, as he had seen it in the Twin Cities this last winter. After he had made the introduction, the theatre doors were thrown open to the crowd with a dollar ticket in their hand.

"After the show was over the outstanding crowd questioned the outgoing crowd as to the picture. Some of them were laughing—others had tears in their eyes. The general answer was that it was not a matter of the dollar—'Go and see it and you will see something you can never forget.'

"Everybody now stands on the streets talking about 'The Heart of Humanity' and asking me whether or not I can get it back again. I promised that I would try my best to get it back later if possible.

"The crowd on the 17th filled the theatre twice. It could have filled the hall once or twice more but it was late in the evening before we were through. Sunday, the 18th, it rained all day but 'phone calls came asking if the show would run, provided the rain

" Everyone who saw it expressed themselves by saying that it was not a matter of the dollar it cost. They would not have missed the show for any $10 bill—for it is something that can never be forgotten. I am sorry now that I did not order the show for at least four or five days. I am sure that the way the weather is now I could fill the house three times a day.

" When I come to the city I will call on you and see if I can make arrangements for the return of the film in 60 or 90 days from now."

Yours truly,
A. G. ENGLUND.

WHY did the Rialto Theatre of Butte, Montana, publish a full page ad on Elmo Lincoln in " ELMO THE MIGHTY? " Why did they get up their novel " Masked Rider " stunt. Why did they electrify their entire country?

WHY have hundreds of the best theatres booked ELMO THE MIGHTY? Why is it that all the Universal has to do is merely announce a new serial and bookings fairly flow in like a tidal wave?

WHY is it that exhibitors prefer Universal serials to any other brand of serial productions on the market? Why do they boost them harder? Why do they scramble to get their booking FIRST? Just read the letter on the next page (one of hundreds) and you'll see WHY.

Gentlemen:—

Your challenge serial, "ELMO THE MIGHTY," is a whale. I opened Thursday, June 26th at noon and I never saw such a rush in my life. The kids jammed and packed their way into the theatre for the noon performance and at 1 P. M. when I started my regular performance I did capacity and it continued all day long and not with children but with grown folks.

The whole town is talking about "ELMO." They pestered my attendants eagerly asking when the next episode would be shown. I have had other serials but never had a serial that brought me such a rush of business as "ELMO THE MIGHTY" and I appreciate it for hot weather here usually retards business. My tip to every exhibitor in the country is book "ELMO THE MIGHTY." I expect it to smash every former serial receipts of my house and believe me that will be going some.

This is the kind of a serial that gets the crowds and the money and the Universal is to be congratulated for producing such a serial with such fine profits to exhibitors.

Yours truly,

JOE MARTIN SOLILOQUIZES

I'm seriously thinking of having my own distributing company.

If other stars can get away with it, why can't I?

Has Charlie Chaplin got anything on me? Can Fairless Dougbanks do the stunts that I can?

Can either of these guys that gets a million dollars and ten cents every Saturday noon act with four hands the way I do?

Show me the human bean actor who can play a mouth organ with two hands, drink ice water with another hand, slap the director in the mush with a fourth hand and pull the plug outa the bath tub with his tail--not only all at one and the same time but simultaneously, as I do?

Balls!

If I couldn't be funnier than any human bean actor who has only two hands and no tail at all to be funny with, I wouldn't have the face to draw my salary!

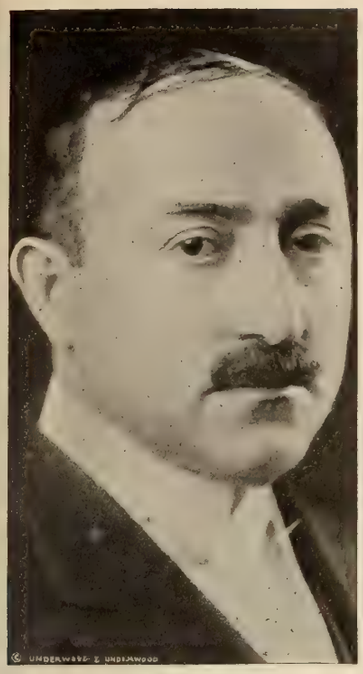
And what is the princely salary that the Universal boss pays me? I ask you, what is it? And I'll tell you what it is. It is simply one bone per day and there's dam little meat on the bone at that.

And now the boss is boosting me as a star!

All right, let him go to it. And when he has spent a fortune advertising me and making me known all over the world, I'll fool him. I'll form my own distributing company, soak the beloved exhibitor several times as much for my pictures and try my darndest to put him outa business.

When that time comes, mebbe, I can ooze a laugh out of my system. But under the present circumstances the only ones who get anything like that from the stuff I do are the movie fans. Meanwhile the Universal boss is getting rich offa me. I ask you, wouldn't your head ache, too!

Every Problem Met by Fox's Plans



William Fox,

President

Fox Film Corporation

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, in announcing his plans for the coming season said:

"I believe in the Fox policy of 1919-1920 as I believe in Gibraltar's rock. Our plans are definite, they are comprehensive, they meet the conditions created by the most active market in the history of motion pictures.

"We do not believe that the small theatre should be neglected in favor of the bigger house or that the bigger house should suffer from insufficient attractions, and a careful reading of our schedule will satisfy exhibitors throughout the world that we have provided for all.

"The day for purely local productions is passed. The day of international, world wide appeal pictures has dawned, and I naturally feel gratified that Fox Entertainments have set a pace that will keep the rest of the industry in a healthful state of activity.

"We are proud only of our chance and of our ability to serve exhibitors and the public as we ourselves like to be served. This is a golden rule that is golden in all respects. The absolute line of profit and success for producer, distributor and exhibitor is the giving to the public what the public wants to pay to see.

"Having prepared ourselves to meet the greatest market by presenting an absolutely complete line of entertainments—great production specials, big theme dramas, comedies, cartoons,

Small Exhibitor Is Not to Be Neglected for the Big a great serial and a news weekly that will surprise the world—we propose to reinforce this line with an advertising campaign of wide scope, prepared and carried forward by the best advertising brains in motion pictures.

"The production high spots include eight big productions with William Farnum, eight big productions with Pearl White, eight big productions with Tom Mix—all made from big success themes, books, plays or acknowledged box office attractions. There are now ready three Super-Bara Productions with Theda Bara, and three great specials, namely: 'Checkers,' the Henry Blossom racing play without a parallel in stage history; 'Evangeline,' from the immortal poem of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and a 1920 cinemelodrama 'Should A Husband Forgive?' In addition there are other specials in preparation, and these will be announced later.

"There will be twenty-six Victory pictures with William Russell, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh, and the success of these productions will be increased because of the fine dramas which we have been able to secure as vehicles for these capable and popular stars.

"Of the Excel group there also will be twenty-six pictures, with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, who delight the public in plays of a lighter vein; Madlaine Traverse and Peggy Hyland, all stars that fully satisfy their audiences.

"Of the popular Mutt and Jeff Cartoons there will be fifty-two, in which Captain Bud Fisher will excel his previous successes; and twenty-six Fox Sunshine Comedies of an entertainment value even better than before. These comedies are now shown in eight thousand theatres in America and have achieved a success unapproached in their field.

"Then there will be a fifteen-episode serial of which we will have more to say a little later. It is so big that we want to discuss it all by itself.

"A surprise is promised in the new Fox News, a novelty offering that will give a quality attraction to the theatres of the world, and this also will be fully discussed in a short time. For obvious reasons a surprise, to be a surprise, must await its time for a complete announcement—which probably will come on the screen itself.

"In closing I want to thank our many splendid friends for their co-operation in the past and to assure them that their fine confidence will be fully justified by our complete line of splendid entertainments, accompanying which is an advertising campaign that will enthuse even Fox Exhibitors."

Biggest Fox Year Looms Ahead, Says Winfield R. Sheehan

Production and Selling Organizations Are Now Operating at High Pitch; Branches Girdle Globe

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, views the season of 1919-1920 in motion pictures as far and away the best in all the years of Fox success for Fox exhibitors.

"Having a complete line of fine entertainments for all types and kinds of motion picture theatres throughout the world, we will reinforce our selling campaign with direct consumer advertising on a scale that the magnitude of our plans makes necessary," Mr. Sheehan said:

"All of our campaign material for the exhibitor will be new. From slides to lithographs, from press sheets to advertising copy, the Fox exhibitors will have the advantage of the service of proved experts in the motion picture industry.

"All of our line of helps, specialties, novelties and accessories are the best that mind and money can produce. They will be distinctive and based solely on their picture selling value. They will be the work of showmen who have specialized in the motion picture field after wide experience elsewhere—men whose record is one of an absolutely demonstrated series of successes in this industry.

"Two million dollars have been appropriated for this exploitation campaign, reaching round the world and directed to the motion picture going public.

"Having a product that surpasses all others in genuine box office value, we propose to carry the message of Fox Entertainments to the classes and the masses, because the best time in the world to advertise is when your product has reached a stabilized standard of attraction perfection.

"Our selling organization is the best equipped, because it has the goods to sell and the added advertising force which helps the exhibitor to make additional money on popular pictures.

"An alive exhibitor is entitled to make more money than the careless man, and Fox exhibitors will be given the material with which to make that money.

"We believe the best way to make a happy exhibitor and a regular patron is to make sure that he is prosperous. First we provide the productions, and then we back them up with genuine advertising that stimulates his market so that he gets the final dollar out of his field.

"We don't claim to have built the pyramids, but we do claim that our organization as it stands today is the best equipped, the best organized, the best founded, the most united and the most successful in all the history of motion pictures past or present.

"Our branches now girdle the earth, and the slogan 'Throughout the world, wherever there are human eyes, they see Fox Entertainments,' is literally true.

"Through our own branches the exhibitor is enabled to deal directly with Fox Film Corporation, and the advantages of this direct contract need not be elaborated upon.

"No year in motion pictures ever has been so great as will be the season now rapidly approaching. No market has been so active as this will be. For this reason the Fox policy of a full and complete line for big and little theatres, backed by supreme advertising, will give exhibitors that sense of security and that feeling of certainty which—and I say this with due modesty—no other motion picture organization can guarantee."

Add to Publicity Staff

The William Fox staff of publicity writers has been strengthened this week by several additions, under direction of Arthur James, supervisor of advertising and publicity of the Fox forces.

The staff is now under the immediate supervision of Merritt Crawford, a well-known journalist and editor. Mr. Crawford comes to Fox Film Corporation from the position of contributing editor of the Exhibitors' Herald. Prior to that he was managing publisher of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Crawford succeeds Jay A. Gove.

Under the supervision of Mr. Crawford the staff is being enlarged. Two of the new faces have been seen before at the Fox offices, but not recently. The men are Arthur B. McGinley and Jay Voorhies, each of whom has been in war service for the past two years. They have recently been discharged, and each has been given his old job by Mr. Fox in pursuance of the latter's policy of reinstating all men who answered their country's call.

Fox Announces Extraordinary Schedule

FOX FILM CORPORATION, founded five years and six months ago, announced for the coming season what it considers the most amazing producing and marketing schedule in all its history, and steps out definitely for the leadership in the film industry.

It flings its banner to the breeze with the battle cry, "Not for One, but for All." This embraces the Fox policy of providing pictures suitable for big theatres, for little theatres, for theatres of medium capacity.

There will be presented one hundred and sixty-two productions, in addition to the Fox News Weekly, a departure in a service of this kind in that it will be a news weekly in fact as well as in advertising intent and suggestions.

The production and distribution schedule will be reinforced by an advertising campaign, national in scope, of the highest selling value.

This schedule, briefly presented, will be:

Eight tremendous productions grouped as a star series with William Farnum. These screen plays will be made from recognized big books and stage successes already acquired, and they include E. Lloyd Sheldon's "Wolves of the Night," Zane Grey's "The Last of the Duanes," Louis Tracy's "Wings of the Morning" and others of similar size.

There will be eight great productions from famous plays and books, with Pearl White—without question the most important box office figure today on the screen. Four hundred million eyes have seen Pearl White, and from the pictures which are to be her vehicles tremendous results may be expected.

There will be a series of eight pictures with Tom Mix, productions that will eclipse his already big record as the foremost dare-devil actor in the world. Tom Mix stands in a place by himself, and full play will be given to his amazing talents.

Production and Distribution Reinforced by Advertising

There will be three Theda Bara plays, including "La Belle Russe," by David Belasco "Lure of Ambition," by Julia Burnham, and another great picture, the title of which has yet to be announced, although the work now is approaching completion.

The Victory series of twenty-six pictures will include the newly acquired Fox star - William Russell - Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh, a very strong combination of box office drawing power. It is confidently expected that the great success of Victory pictures during the present season will be at least doubled.

The Excel group, of which there will be twenty-six, will include Madlaine Traverse, Peggy Hyland, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair as the stars, and the productions, all finished for this season—and ranging from serious drama to lightest comedy—warrant the utmost confidence in their money success of the exhibitor.

There will be fifty-two Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons and no exhibitor needs to be told of their fun-making value. The fact that the big theatres in New York City, including the Rivoli and Rialto, use Mutt and Jeff regularly is convincing evidence of their universal attraction quality.

There will be twenty-six Fox Sunshine Comedies, a new series that will be funnier and more elaborately made than ever before. These comedies which show at the big theatres throughout the country as well as at the smaller ones, of actual record showing in more theatres than any comedies with the exception of the Charlie Chaplin, have proved so popular as to justify not only the guarantee of a maintenance of the high standard set in the past, but a further elevation of the standard.

Three great special productions already made and ready for early release are "Checkers," the greatest racing play in the world, founded on Henry Blossom's unparalleled stage success; "Evangline," based on Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal poem, and a 1920 cinemelodrama, "Should a Husband Forgive?"

With this extraordinary assemblage of box office values, having the great advertising campaigns and the stability of Fox Film Corporation behind them the Fox season of 1919-20 will unquestionably be the most brilliant in the history of the company, if not in the history of the screen.

It takes time to do things well.

In any industry but that of the motion picture five years and a half is but a trifle.

In the development of the film it is a cycle.

Today the Fox Film Corporation is the greatest film organization either here or abroad—its ramifications extending into practically every part of the civilized world.

Little more than half a decade ago it was barely an idea.

The basis of that idea is giving the public what the public wants and is willing to pay for.

It is the hallmark of true showmanship.

The tremendous success of the Fox Film Corporation is entirely due to this fact.

Before he is anything else, Mr. Fox is a showman.

He was a showman before he became a disributor before he became a producer.

Consequently, he has realized the needs of the exhibitor from the beginning—the necessity for real entertainment, because entertainment is the only thing that the exhibitor's public wants and will pay for—because from the beginning he was an exhibitor himself.

For the same reason he has realized that unless he could assure the individual exhibitor attractions with which to make increasing profits, he might just as well retire from the producing field.

It is strict adherence to this policy which has brought the Fox Film Corporation to the success which it enjoys today and upon which it bases its expectation of even greater success during the coming season.

When most of the producing companies are decreasing their production in order to make big features, which only the biggest theatres can handle with profit, the Fox organization sets out to make provision, for theatres big and little, of attractions that will satisfy the public and make money for the exhibitor.

In doing this there is no hint of criticism of any other company's policy. It is simply recognition of what every one in the industry has already recognized—that the present is the most active market in the history of motion pictures—and the further realization that the insistent demands of that activity must be supplied.

It is for this reason that Mr. Fox's plans for the coming season take in the needs and requirements of all types of houses.

With one hundred and sixty-two productions announced for the 1919-20 season specials, dramas, comedies, cartoons and a News Weekly that is the real article—the widest selection is given to the individual exhibitor, the demands of every theatre are amply provided for.

William Farnum Films on Independent Basis : :

WILLIAM FARNUM Pictures, so long a predominant feature of William Fox releases, are to be placed next season on an independent basis. There will be eight productions, and they will be booked as a series.

For several weeks—since the adjournment of the Fox annual convention, in fact—there have been persistent rumors that William Farnum pictures were to be taken off the program basis. Official confirmation has been awaited anxiously by many exhibitors who now are making up the programs for next year.

The announcement of the star series was one of the most important that has come from the William Fox offices since Mr. Fox became a producer. It would be a matter of great interest to the trade even were the name of Mr. Farnum not included; but that addition affords to exhibitors a booking opportunity which very many of them long have sougth.

William Farnum productions are a staple in the motion picture market. Second editions have been made of a great many of them. Even the earliest Farnum pictures have been active sellers almost constantly since their release.

Mr. Farnum's total of productions under the management of William Fox is about thirty, and there is not one title on the list which is not familiar to everyone in the trade. "A Soldier's Oath," "Figthing Blood," "The Bondman," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Conqueror," "When a Man Sees Red," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "The Rainbow Trail"—these are but a few of the William Farnum productions which have been recognized as big winners by the exhibitors of the country.

Announcement has been made covering the first three of the Farnum releases for 1919-20. These will fall in August, October and November at intervals of about six weeks. All are based on stories by the best known and highest priced writers who are contributing to motion picture literature.

"Wolves of the Night," a thrilling story of a mining engineer's experiences in South American Wilds, and later with the sharks of Wall Street, will open the Farnum program. This story, a romance of a sort different from anything Mr. Farnum has done

Pearl White Pictures to Set New Mark : : :

BACK of the signature of Pearl White on the new contract with William Fox by which she will be starred in big productions, lies an interesting tale of the circumstances leading to this important affiliation.

This contract, negotiated and closed by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is due to the desire of Mr. Fox to have who he believes to be the best known motion picture actress in the world on his roster of stars. When he wanted to find out which motion picture actress is best known in Americt he had his many scouts investigate the matter. Their answer was unanimous; "Pearl White," was the reply from each and every one.

So much for America. But how about Europe?

One very important matter leading up to the recent trip abroad by Mr. Fox was his desire to glean first-hand information as to how Miss White is regarded by foreign audiences. He found everywhere that she is second to none in popularity. Leading exhibitor of the British Isles told him that their audiences know Pearl White better than any other screen actress; and the verdict was the same in continental Europe where Miss White's daring and beauty established her several years ago as the leading favorite.

There need be no apprehension about the class of productions in which Miss White will appear. Mr. Fox will build a producing unit around his new star which will exploit her to the utmost. She will be provided with the very best material obtainable. She will be presented in screen adaptations of well-known plays and books, though original stories which give her talents full latitude also are being considered. Miss White's director will be a man at the top of his profession. The productions in which Miss White will be starred will be staged with a prodigal hand. All the resources of the Fox organization will be at her command.

To state the matter briefly: Pearl White will be presented by William Fox in special productions of six or more reels which ——————

Miss White's screen history is known perhaps by all fans and exhibitors alike. Aeons ago, as time is measured in filmdom, she started in Crystal dramas and comedies. Thence she went to Pathe and has been steadily featured in Pathe serials for years. It is estimated $25,000,000 has been paid in the world over in admission fees to see Miss White in her serials.

Pearl White, unchallenged serial queen, the newest Fox luminary

Tom Mix Featured in Independent Series : : : :

TOM MIX is to be featured in an independent series of pictures—pictures to be released at six-week intervals and to be booked as a group—such is an item of the William Fox plans for 1919-20.

Tom Mix has had a unique and spectacular career as a star. It is difficult to realize it was only eighteen months ago that Mr. Fox announced his intention of featuring Mix in western dramas. He had been a comedy star—a favorite in two-reelers. Many persons thought the change to drama was too radical. Lengthening 2,000 feet of cyclonic action to 5,000 feet, sustaining it throughout, and then, after that, proceeding from picture to picture without falling into the deep rut where so many Western stars have been buried—well, that, the pessimists argued, was a job for a Goliath, backed by a federal mint.

Hence, today, many exhibitors speak of the rise of Tom Mix to international renown in dramas as one of the miracles of the screen. Not often does it happen thus—not often does a man deliberately turn his back on acquired fame, deserting it absolutely, and undertake to win a new reputation in another sort of endeavor.

But "Cupid's Round-Up" settled matters so far as the future of Mix was concerned. The picture was a whirlwind. Nine other productions have followed, but ere the third production, "Western Blood," had been marketed the whole industry was convinced that Mix was a success. Nine months ago Mr. Fox began receiving urgent requests for permission to lease Mix pictures on an independent basis.

These requests persisted. They became demands. And when the condition is realized, there is nothing for a producer to do but acquiesce. It was practicable to make a change of policy in the middle of the present season, but it is safe to assume that when Mr. Fox decided to place some of his stars on a star series in 1919-20, he had Tom Mix chiefly in mind.

What star popularity of this sort means to the exhibitor could not be better evidenced than by the fact that during the present summer exhibitors in all parts of the country have been exploiting Tom Mix two-reel comedies—those of a season or two ago—on a basis of feature pictures. Some of the largest theatres have heralded these comedies as they would the most pretentious productions—and have found the procedure profitable.

And this past links up most definitely with the future. The Mix success is due, Fox interests assert, largely to the fact that this actor is "one who never fakes." No one has yet doubled for Tom Mix. He is a dare-devil who is gifted as an actor—not an actor undertaking to be devilish. His own explanation, given wide publicity by Mr. Fox, is that "you can make an actor out of a cowboy, but you can't make a cowboy out of an actor." Cowboys, it appears, grow only on horses.

Half of the eight Tom Mix pictures to be released during the next twelve months are completed, and it is reported as an incident of business that the whole Fox organization is now engaged in an animated discussion as to which of the finished four is the best. The pictures are being shown successively to squads of Fox employees and each member of each squad makes a written report.

Two of the new pictures have been titled. One, called "Rough Riding Romance," is said to differ radically from any other production ever given a Western setting. It is developed along strictly romantic lines, the numerous sensational stunts growing logically out of the dramatic situations. Story in no sense is subordinated to spectacle; the emphasis is constantly on the unusual love theme.

"The Speed Maniac" is the other title announced. Advance information regarding the plot is withheld, but it is the concensus of opinion of those who have seen the production that it is one of the swiftest-moving and strongest of all the dramas in which Tom Mix has been featured. A wreck in which two persons are hurled fifty feet through the air and driven against railroad rails constitutes one of the tensely exciting moments of the play.

A novelty of the series from an advertising standpoint is a production in which Mix has the triple role of author, director and star.

Theda Bara on Schedule for Three Fox Films : : :

THEDA BARA has been felicitously called "the Sara Bernhardt of the Screen." Her name suggests the weirdly alluring in dramatic expression. Her fame is limited only by the circumference of the earth. She is a Fox star for whom the claim is consistently made that the exhibitor who books her takes no chances.

Three Bara super-productions will be released in the new Star series created by William Fox.

These three photoplays bring out some entirely new Bara possibilities. Hitherto she has been known as the greatest vampire in drama. She has slain man's hearts by the dozen (on the screen). She has triumphed in the characters of Cleopatra, Salome—snake-like women whose charm and allurement are like draughts of poison. It is in the role of woman whose love is deadlier than hatred that Miss Bara has excelled. Such, at least, is the popular conception and the popular tribute to her abounding talent.

Now the "Bernhardt of the screen" will play the bewitching woman still—but a bewitching woman of a new type. When "La Belle Russe" and "Lure of Ambition" are released this fall, Miss Bara will astound the public with her interpretation of the leading characters. The world's greatest vampire will prove that she can play the part of loving wife just as effectively as she can play the she-devil.

Imagine lovely Theda Bara as the Sunshine in an artist's garret! Her husband in "La Belle Russe"—an adaption of David Belasco's great play—is a nobleman whose family has disowned him. He paints pictures to keep the wolf from the door. Theda Bara, the faithful wife, smiles bravely at the bare cupboard, determined not to allow it to banish happiness. The famous vampire dons the fluff of a ballet dancer and dances divinely. No one guessed the latest possibilities of her dainty feet until she came forward to screen a big ballet scene in "La Belle Russe." Then and there she convinced her director that she was a match for the best of dancers.

In this remarkable play Miss Bara appears in a dual role and more remarkable still—the two women she impersonates appear simultaneously in one big scene.

In "Lure of Ambition" Miss Bara steps into the role of a public stenographer with a grace equalling that with which she dances in "La Belle Russe." But when the demure working girl is led into the clutches of a heartless man, there begins the tremendous story of a woman's revenge. The little girl of the East Side becomes a woman of vigor and power. Step by step she ad-

Fox Victory Pictures Make Good Score : : : : :

VICTORY pictures have conquered the public. During the part season the Tom Mix-George Walsh-Gladys Brockwell trio made millions of new friends for William Fox—the kind of friends that wear well.

The amount of Victory film that has been shown during the past nine months would stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Many miles of it has been shown in every state. Exhibitors all over the country wait with impatience for the next Brockwell release or the next Walsh comedy—for Mix has entered the new Star series.

But there is a new name on the Victory list—the name of William Russell. He is strong in athletics, and as a swimmer, a boxer, a diver and a runner will make a big appeal to both young and old. In addition, of course, Mr. Russell is an actor of exceptional talent, and has been starred on the speaking stage as well as on the screen. It is confidently predicted that he add much to the prestige of Victory Pictures.

George Walsh the fun-maker and Gladys Brockwell the magnetic personality will continue next season in plays of a high order adapted to their special talents. There will be more Walsh pictures like "Never Say Quit," "On the Jump," "Putting One Over," and "Help! Help! Police." "On the Jump" kept the folks standing in line for hours outside many theatres—especially in the middle west—waiting to see the picture; while inside every seat was occupied. "Never Say Quit," Mr. Walsh's "jinx" picture has won millions of laughs all over the country and is good for millions more.

Gladys Brockwell will be seen in a number of strongly emotional character parts such as she has developed in "The Sneak," "The Strange Woman," "The Call of the Soul," "Pitfalls of a Big City" and "The Divorce Trap." Miss Brockwell always draws the crowds and never fails to repay them for coming. Whether in the role of a reformed woman crook ("Pitfalls of a Big City") a poor girl struggling against the machinations of a rich husband who plots to get rid of her ("The Divorce Trap"), a gipsy princess ("The Sneak"), or a mother battling for her child, ("The Call of the Soul"), Miss Brockwell always gives evidence of the big sympathetic nature and the versatile talent which enable her to assume any role that has distinction. Unerringly she touches the heart and sets people thinking. She can strike at the root of tragedy or fall into a charming whimsical mood with equal felicity.

The promise of the Fox organization is that the Victory Picture output for 1919-1920 will establish a new standard for this attractive series.

Thumb Nail Biography of "Bill" Russell : : : :

WILLIAM RUSSELL, affectionately known as Billy, or even as "Big Bill"—handsome, an athlete always trained to the minute, and the possessor of a winning smile and prepossessing personality—is now starting work on his first Victory picture for William Fox.

With the addition of William Russell to its already formidable list of male stars, the Fox Film Corporation acquires a player who, though comparatively young in years, is old in popularity and has been a favorite screen artist for more than five years, during all of which time he has steadily advanced in public favor.

From the days when he first became associated with the old Biograph company Mr. Russell's motion picture career has been one of continual progress. From the Biograph studio he went with Thanhouser as a featured player. He was speedily made a star and "Big Bill" Russell productions were among the most popular films of their time.

After a brief sojourn with Famous Players, in support of stage stars, Mr. Russell went to Santa Barbara to play the part of Blair Stanley in "The Diamond from the Sky," a serial. Mr. Russell's personal success in the serial was so great that he remained at Santa Barbara to star in Mutual Masterpictures until February, 1918, when the William Russell Productions, Inc., was formed. As the star and active head of his own company Mr. Russell has been making five and six reel feature productions which have reached the public through Exhibitors' Mutual and Pathe, and today would continue at the head of his own company had it not been for the attractiveness of the offer made by William Fox to star him in Victory pictures.

Mr. Russell will remain in the East for his first two Fox productions at least; and this temporarily robs the Pacific Coast of one of its best known entertainers. For the Russell ranch near Santa Barbara was always an open house, and scarcely a Sunday passed which did not see a week-end party with screen celebrities as guests. Mr. Russell's hospitality was proverbial, and "Let's run up to Santa Barbara over Sunday and see Bill Russell," was a catch phrase in the big motion picture colony of Los Angeles.

The addition of Mr. Russell to the Fox roster—already containing the names of William Farnum, Tom Mix, George Walsh and Albert Ray—creates what the Fox organization declares to be the greatest array of male stars presented today by any single motion picture company.

George Walsh Prepares for New Triumphs : : :

GEORGE WALSH is unquestionably one of the most popular screen stars presented to the public today. To see him is to like him. To see him again is to like him more. He is the optimist supreme of filmland—a welcome guest with every audience—a sure cure for the blues. And he is preparing for a record-smashing season.

"Fun" can be spelled in two different ways: F-u-n or W-a-l-s-h.

Anyone who adopts the latter will be kept laughing in defiance of hot weather grouches and cold winter sulks. Ever since he joined the Fox organization as a Victory picture star, Mr. Walsh has been a tonic for millions of stunts and general wholesomeness.

Mr. Walsh has kept multitudes of men and women in good spirits by his clever antics in "I'll Say So" and in "On the Jump." By way of a gloom chaser there is nothing to equal his infectious smile. He fairly bubbles over with youthful enthusiasm and activity, and it is this which makes him beloved among vigorous boys and by men and women who appreciate "pep." He is a "live wire" all the way through—always clean, always delightful.

Walsh comedies are devoid of all things that might be condemned as crude or coarse. They are simply a batch of wholesome incidents which keep the hero on the go from beginning to end. George Walsh plunges through adventures at a pace which keeps his audiences in a constant state of merriment.

"Luck and Pluck" brought more luck to exhibitors who showed the picture than they could have expected from a barrel of four-leaved clover. Dozens of exhibitors wrote to the Fox Film Corporation asking that their lease on the film be extended because crowds still were clamoring to see it when the closing dates were announced.

Walsh's bad luck play, "Never Say Quit," spelled not only fun, but enormous success. In this picture the athletic star is always out of luck—and the more unlucky he is, the more he makes one laugh. The hoodoo pursues him and never lets go. He sticks so close to George that he leaves the coast clear for good luck to pursue the exhibitor who books the picture.

In his latest release, "Putting One Over," Walsh plays the part of a double—and this fact is the basis of sensational stunts and uproariously funny situations that pack the production throughout.

William Fox is preparing to cut over next season a bunch of George Walsh Victory pictures of which it is predicted that they will force the hinges on the box office safe.

Gladys Brockwell's Remarkable Development : :

TO mention the name of Gladys Brockwell is to inspire mental pictures of one of the most potent and fascinating personalities on the screen. In the portrayal of strongly defined character parts, especially, she is a favorite in every state of the Union. Her rapid rise as a Fox star has been a subject of comment among the most astute exhibitors. During the past season she added materially to her reputation as a delineator of types.

Critics who saw her work in "Pitfalls of a Big City" hailed her as a woman of remarkably broad sympathies and individuality, and one who throws herself heart and soul into a part. Every muscle in her sensitive face is brought into play and aids in achieving a realism which rarely has been equalled in film drama.

Miss Brockwell despite her attractions in "society" roles, gladly discards her silks and her jewelry to don rags and act the part of a beggar maid. In "Pitfalls of a Big City" she did not flinch at playing a woman crook who fights her way out of the sordidness of her evil life; and the fidelity with which she presents the mannerisms of the underworld astonished even her ardent admirers. The very movements of her lips as she speaks are true to type, and her gait and her gestures are perfect.

Her performance in "The Sneak" might lead one to suspect that Miss Brockwell was born and bred to gipsy life. She glides through the part of a gypsy princess with the ease of one accustomed to traveling with the iron caravan, squatting before a tent of tatters and watching the iron boil over a camp fire, loving passionately as the gipsies love, and hating fiercely.

In "Kultur," "The Strange Woman," "The Forbidden Room," Miss Brockwell endows her work with a striking individuality that becomes indelibly stamped upon the memory of the spectator. In "The Call of the Soul" she feels so strongly the emotions she depicts that she sweeps an audience with her on the torrent of feelings. She is the embodiment of mother love, and lives her part.

There is nothing superficial in any portrayal by Gladys Brockwell, for her heart and soul is in all she does, effaces herself to become the person she impersonates.

And this is the star for whom William Fox is to furnish, during the coming season plays even stronger than those in which she has recently appeared.

Theatres Change Hands

The Portola theatre in Los Angeles has been sold by Mr. F. J. MacDonald to Vincent Russo who recently came to Los Angeles from Petersburg, Virginia. Russo is a former exhibitor in the east.

The La Tosca theatre at 30th and Vermont Aves., Los Angeles, one of the larger suburban houses, has been bought by Mr. C. F. Parker, former owner of the Crown theatre in Pasadena.

Excel Pictures to Have a New Star : : : : : :

OF all the features planned by William Fox for making 1919-20 a big year for the exhibitor, none is considered more interesting or gives greater promise than the outlook for Excel Pictures.

The Excel group, with three stars, and late four, of unusual strength and variety, has come through its first year with a splendid record. It is beginning its second year under conditions that assure bigger and better things. Excel has more than made good the initial announcement that its pictures were to be "more than a program." Excel has been, and will be, Fox promises, all that its name implies. And a new star of recognized drawing power is to be added to the list.

A series of the best stories obtainable has already been chosen for Excel Pictures for the 1919-20 season, are under consideration. Many of these stories are by authors whose names alone are sufficient to attract an audience.

The fact that, notwithstanding the material changes in the Fox prospectus as outlined for the coming year, Excel pictures are to hold their place, is emphatic assurance that the expectations of William Fox at their inception have been fully realized. It is, moreover, proof that exhibitors throughout the country demand them and that, most vital of all, they have scored heavily with public—the court of last appeal.

In the Excel series 26 pictures will be released during the new year—pictures covering a broad and unusually varied field; fast, snappy, clean comedy by Albert Ray and Elinor Fair; virile, gripping drama by Madlaine Traverse; light drama by Peggy Hyland; and work by a fifth star selected by William Fox as a most fitting complement to the quartet named who will be one of the big surprises of the year.

Early in the fall Excel will launch Madlaine Traverse in "Her Splendid Sin." The advance of this actress under the direction of William Fox has been rapid. A woman of great ability, grace and charm.

Peggy Hyland, pert and gay, will probably be seen first in "The Merry Go Round" in the new year. All her stories, it is announced, will be selected with care to conform with her artistry.

A carefully arranged program has been perfected for Elinor Fair, and Albert Ray, that pair of fun makers whose clean, lively comedy has sent them humming into favor and is going to keep them there in this new scheme of things.

Not the least of the winning features, from the exhibitor's point of view, of the Excel pictures for next year will be the co-operation of directors who have become acquainted with these stars, who know how to register on the screen their best points of acting and of personal attractiveness.

Madlaine Traverse an Important Factor : : : : :

THE announcement that Madlaine Traverse pictures are to form one of the most noteworthy features of the Fox organization plans for the coming year, continuing as an Excel star, draws attention anew to the meteoric rise of this beautiful woman—one of the most remarkable development in the entire range of motion picture stars.

A series of powerful pictures has been selected for Miss Traverse—pictures that center on her supreme ability in emotional appeal. One of the main attractions of the motion picture is the vicarious emotional experience that starved lives draw from the story on the screen; and no actress is more gifted than is Madlaine Traverse in satisfying this intense human craving.

In "The Splendid Sid," a story of great beauty and pathos, Miss Traverse is scheduled to open the new Excel series with Howard M. Mitchell as her director.

In Madlaine Traverse exhibitors have recognized a prize ever since her remarkable performance in "The Caillaux Case"—her first appearance under the William Fox banner. Her work then stamped her as an actress of rare talent in plays appealing to the deepest emotions, and her prestige has increased with every picture in which she has been featured—such striking pictures as "Gambling in Souls," "The Danger Zone," "The Love that Dares" and "When Fate Decides." Her power to gain the sympathy, draw the tears, and grip the heart strings of an audience is unsurpassed.

Madlaine Traverse, featured in William Fox productions

Miss Traverse's exacting experience in spoken drama and her training in photoplays before joining the Fox forces bring to her work a satisfying finish that in the past few months has led to an increased booking of Excel pictures.

Miss Traverse's classic beauty set like a jewel in an irresistible personal magnetism, is accompanied by rare ability to make every pose, gesture and slight facial expression put across the point extended. She is her own most severe critic.

It is said of Miss Traverse that in addition to her great histrionic talent, best dressed actress on the screen. Her costuming, directed by equisite taste, gives the last touch of refinement to her intense emotional work. She has made a close study of line and color that best suit her and the part she plays.

There is practically no limit to the box office possibilities of Madlaine Traverse during the coming year.

previously, was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. For a considerable part of this picture Mr. Farnum enacts the part of a man bereft of reason in consequence of long imprisonment in an abandoned copper mine.

Zane Grey is the author of the second Farnum release—"The Last of the Duanes." This famous story—a novel of which the publishers have sold hundreds of thousands of copies—is declared by many critics to be the best product of Zane Grey's pen. It deals with a man who is driven by force of circumstances to lead the life of a bandit—who evades men and yet is hunted and hounded by men—an outcast who undertakes to hide in the great fastness of the remote Southwest, and becomes one of the best men in all the wide region through which he ranges. It is an absorbing story, ending happily reformation—an unusual story—a story and a picture that people will remember and that will make money for exhibitors everywhere.

Another book—a Louis Tracey novel "Wings of the Morning"—furnishes the basis of a photodrama of the same title. It is the story of a Robinson Crusoe among the cannibals of the South Seas, and it actually was screened on one of the islands of the Pacific.

The remaining five William Farnum pictures have not been titled. They are largely productions on the work of novelists and writers of fame.

Fay Tincher One Star at Convention

Immediately after the filming of "Dangerous Man McGrew" a Christie Special which is now in preparation, Fay Tincher will leave Los Angeles for Seattle and Tacoma, Washington, where she will be one of the featured picture stars at the convention and ball of the Allied Motion Picture interests of the Pacific northwest. Miss Tincher will leave Los Angeles July 12 and be in Seattle for the big convention from the sixteenth to the nineteenth.

Five Companies Make Sunshine Comedies : : : : :

A MAMMOTH mirth factory! A huge plant for the conversion of the raw comical idea into the finished screen laughter. Acres devoted to a great mill where the tools and lathes are fun-making apparatus, the workers are eccentric comedy stars, and the foremen are the directors and creators of the funniest situations that imagination can devise.

This, in brief, describes the Fox Sunshine Comedy studios in Hollywood, Cal., where today five companies, guided by the most noted comedy directors in the world, are, simultaneously at work under the supervision of that past master of broad comedy construction, Hampton Del Ruth. The plan is to issue, during the coming season, the greatest broad comedy program ever put out.

The acquisition by William Fox of Hampton Del Ruth, as director-general of Sunshine was the signal for keen anticipation. Exhibitors awaited eagerly the product of his genius, knowing his remarkable gift for expression on the screen of what is really comedy for the million. Mr. Del Ruth believes that clean comedy of the broadest kind is as vital to a picture theatre's well-being as the big feature and he predicts that it is on the high road to universal recognition as representing an art not less elevated and important than that expressed in the serious drama. His idealism ran parallel with the determination of William Fox to make his Sunshine comedies the standard for production in this field—every comedy a challenge not only to a laughter-loving public, but to motion picture censors who are inclined to be hypercritical of screen comedies.

Not only as a writer and director of comedies was Hampton Del Ruth known. He was regarded as a man of exceptional executive ability—one who knew well how to co-ordinate the complexities of a production and to handle directors and artists. When he assumed control of the Fox Sunshine Comedy lot he immediately began to plan a series of productions and to add to his list of directors and star performers in a way that caused the exhibitors to take notice and aroused enthusiasm among branch managers and salesmen. His list of directors is a truly remarkable one, including such impresarios of the motion picture laugh as Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Mal St. Clair, Vin Moore, Jack Blystone and Frank Griffin. Each of these is a man with years of experience, yet young and energetic; gifted with an unerring sense of what is funny on the screen, and backed by an enviable record of achievement.

These comedy directors can set to work with the assurance that they have the co-operation of the best acting talent in the business-artists who know exactly how to put a comedy situation across. Chester Conklin, known the world over, is one of the Sunshine stars. Others on the star list are Polly Moran, versatile and clever; Slim Somerville, whose toothpick appearance and grotesque mannerisms have made him a universal favorite; Jack Cooper, Ethel Teare, Glen Cavender, Harry McCoy, Bobbie Dunn, Tom Kennedy, Ed Kennedy, Billy Franey, Harry Booker, Laura LaVarnie and Alice Davenport—all with established reputations in the broad comedy field.

In every one of the pictures on which the five companies are at work on the Fox Sunshine lot there is something new and original. New stunts are constantly being evolved, and with the aid of an experienced mechanical engineer of an inventive turn of mind, original fun-making devices are being produced.

The Sunshine Comedy Beauty Brigade is declared by Del Ruth to be the most captivating bevy of femininity ever assembled. However, he does not employ girls who are merely pretty. He stands for a combination of beauty and cleverness, and he believes his comedies now under way will demonstrate his success in this direction. It is the conviction of both Mr. Fox and Mr. Del Ruth that while exhibitors want pretty girls in their comedies, they do not want those girls to be mere automatons. The members of the Beauty Brigade in Fox Sunshine Comedies take an active part in the development of the entertainment. Among them are found expert divers and swimmers, daring acrobats, clever toe-dancers, several who can fence with amazing skill, and a number who will take daring chances in motor-cars, motor-launches, motor-cycles or anything else mechanical.

And no part of this collective cleverness is going to waste. All of it will have place in the Sunshine Comedies now being and to be produced. No stone is left unturned that will aid in supplying to the exhibitor pictures that cannot be denied—that will set the town laughing and keep it laughing—that will deal gloom a "solar plexis."

Three Fox Sunshine Comedies just completed under the supervision of Mr. Del Ruth are said to be the most extraordinary trinity of mirth-makers ever projected on the screen. They are Mr. Hampton's "pace-makers," as he calls them. "A laugh a minute" was the order issued to the directors; but it seems the directors disobeyed orders and in many places produced a laugh every thirty seconds.

"Chicken a la Cabaret" is the title of an uproariously two-reeler prepared by Director Victor Heerman and featuring Chester Conklin, Billy Armstrong and Dorothy Lee.

"The Yellow Dog Catcher" is the title of a scream directed by J. G. Blystone, featuring Jack Cooper, Glen Cavender and Billy Franey.

Millions of people should take a plunge into an ocean of uncontrollable laughter when they see "Wild Waves and Women," directed by Frank C. Griffin, and featuring Ethel Teare and Slim Somerville.

"Mutt and Jeff" Backed by Advertising : : : : :

MUTT and Jeff, in their grouch-killing Animated Cartoons, will be a big feature in the Fox 1919-20 schedule—and they'll be funnier than ever, is the pledge of Bud Fisher, their creator.

The biggest and most expensive advertising campaign in the history of merchandising cannot measure of public attention and interest than has been won for Mutt and Jeff cartoons.

Day after day, with the regular drive of a triphammer, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, for the last ten years, Mutt and Jeff have appeared conspicuously in hundreds of leading newspapers of the country. Millions of people have learned to love them and laugh at them.

A suit which will not be seen on New York's beaches, but may be viewed in a Fox Sunshine comedy

Mutt and Jeff have been utilized in social entertainments; their statuettes stand in thousands of homes and offices; they have been bill-posted for the Mutt and Jeff musical comedies and finally they have received extensive exploitation by Fox Film Corporation in their Animated Cartoons.

All this gigantic stream of publicity and public interest—increasing by leaps and bounds during the past ten years—has been estimated by a leading expert at from ten to fifteen million dollars in advertising value for the exhibitors of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

William Fox at once became interested in these Animated Cartoons when recognizing their extreme cleverness, he realized also the enormous advertising strength they possess. Their success was instantaneous. The quality of these 500 foot subjects has been rising month by month.

In thousands of theatres the country over Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons are regarded today as a vital factor in the program. Big theatre owners have frankly confessed, and often, that Mutt and Jeff subjects have been the means of saving feature offerings from failure. As "first aid to the injured" in motion pictures they are invaluable. A Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon always fits into the bill, and constitutes a welcome relief from the nerve tension of the serious drama shown.

It has been attested by exhibitors that vast numbers of people enter theatres where Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons are announced, impelled solely by suggestion due to the years of advertising behind the Bud Fisher creations—thus drawing a large volume of extra business for the program feature.

Exhibitors have expressed themselves to the effect that the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons posters are among the cleverest and most effective put out. They are always genuinely amusing and original. They compel universal attention. No one is immune from their definite command to halt and take notice—which in turn reacts to the benefit of the feature advertising.

In a recent interview Bud Fisher speaking of his war experiences in the British army, disclosed the interesting fact that a whole Canadian Division had been using Mutt and Jeff as the official insignia of the division. These on all the division trucks and road transports. He found the British army, rank and file, acquainted with Mutt and Jeff, and at Arras, when he entered the town with the victorious British he found German posters advertising Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon showings. Mr. Fisher said the Huns evidently obtained these films through Sweden and Denmark.

German prisoners greeted Fisher with smiles and a happy light in their eyes when they learned that he was the celebrated cartoonist.

At the close of the interview referred to Fisher said:

"Tell every exhibitor who uses Fox pictures that 'Bud' Fisher is with them for a finer Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon service than ever before. Tell them that 'Bud' has some Mutt and Jeff things up his sleeve that will surprise the old-timers and put pep into the box offices of all of 'em. I'm fit as a fiddle, my sense of humor is hungry for knockouts, and I think we are going to deliver."

A bevy of William Fox producers

Fox Corporation Boasts of a Competent Directorial Staff

Edwards, Del Ruth, Millard, Stanton and Other Leaders in Varied Lines

ANSWERING the roll call of the expanded producing scheme of the William Fox organization for the coming season, here are the Fox directors, the "men behind the pictures" whose brains contribute to the quality of Fox productions. Upon their work depends largely the question of success or failure. They make up a carefully tested, remarkably balanced and versatile directorial staff.

Each of these men is master in his own peculiar line; each has made a study of his public and knows his star like a book. Hence each, in his own field of production, is the most fitting agent for bringing to the public what best will meet its demands.

Dean of motion picture directors is J. Gordon Edwards. Long associated with William Fox as director of dramatic companies at the Academy of Music, and the first director for Mr. Fox when the latter entered the motion picture field, Mr. Edwards brings to his work as thorough and varied an experience as ever fell to the lot of any screen director. He is an indefatigable worker, most exacting with his stars and his company, as with himself. In his high ideals for the art of cinema presentation, he epitomizes all the best that is embodied in Fox productions.

To the credit of J. Gordon Edwards stands a long record of big box office successes, including the best work of Theda Bara. Most noteworthy, perhaps, among these, were the Bara productions "Cleopatra" and "Salome." Mr. Edwards has just directed William Farnum in several productions taken from famous novels—a field in which Mr. Edwards shines particularly. These pictures will be released early in the coming season—making the enviable combination of famous stories, a famous star and a famous director.

Hampton Del Ruth, with his corps of assistants, is the man who makes the sun shine on the screen—the creator of Fox Sunshine Comedies, those laugh provokers that are one of the biggest features of the Fox output. Under the general direction of Mr. Del Ruth five comedy companies are now working in the Fox studios in Hollywood, California, each company under the guidance of a noted comedy maker.

Mr. Del Ruth's experience makes him par excellence a director-general of comedy, for before joining the Fox organization he was both a writer and a director of merrymaking photoplays. Moreover, he has long demonstrated his gift to see things in the large, to handle a corps of sub-workers and stars, and through them to present to exhibitors and to the public the clean, side-splitting comedy that constitutes the best medicine possible for the human race.

Hampton Del Ruth has built up his corps of directors till it is generally conceded to be a truly remarkable one. As chief co-operators under his able lead he counts such widely known directors as Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Vin Moore, Jack Blystone, Frank Griffin, Mal St. Clair—each, like every other Fox director, of record achievement in his line; each possessed of youth, of vim, of the enviable ability to visualize the funny situation and set it unerringly on the screen.

The entire Sunshine Army, directors and companies, under the Del Ruth generalship, are now busy with a set of Fox Sunshine Comedies, each new and original. Three other pictures, just hot off the Del Ruth bat, are said to be the funniest pictures ever made. They are "Chicken a la Cabaret," "The Yellow Dog Catcher," and "Wild Waves and Women," all reflecting the master intelligence that has created fun from San Francisco to Capetown and from London to Sydney.

Far famed for smashing big pictures, R. A. Walsh, the director behind such pictures as "The Prussian Cur" and "Every Mother's Son," has assumed responsibility for a forthcoming picture that will tax his directorial and artistic ingenuity to the uttermost—a work of art both as film drama and as literature, for it is founded on the work of one of the greatest of modern writers and will mark an epoch in motion pictures.

Harry Millarde, with a long series of Fox successes to his credit, is a man who never fails to divine the greatest possibilities of his star and to set them lifelike on the screen. Among the pictures he has directed are those fine emotional dramas featuring Madlaine Traverse, "Gambling in Souls," "The Love That Dares," and "When Fate Decides," and he has just completed an early release that shows this clever and beautiful woman in a different but equally brilliant light.

Richard Stanton is a director rarely gifted in handling big themes. He is responsible for the great American picture, "The Land of the Free." He also brought forth "Why I Would Not Marry," and "The Jungle Trail," with William Farnum. He is now putting all his energy into a new Fox masterpiece, with the story from a celebrated novel with an all-star cast, that promises to be a sensation.

The fine artistic discrimination of Edward J. Le Saint made his magnificient production of "Kultur" world famous. After three successes with Tom Mix, "Hell Roarin' Reform," "Fighting for Gold" and "The Wilderness Trail," Mr. Le Saint has just produced a forthcoming Mix picture, which, in the opinion of practically all who have seen it run, is the best and biggest the cowpuncher star ever has done.

Some of the authors who contribute to the Fox collection of photoplays

Exhibitors Assured of Stories of the Highest Quality

Many Well Known and Big Names in the Realm of Letters Will Lend Their Work for Fox Productions

GREAT authors as well as great stars, the best stories the whole world of literature affords, writers whose names will be a real asset in exhibitors' advertising—that is the announced policy of William Fox for next season.

It is not a policy to be confined to any particular class or pictures, but one that will extend to all—to the big special features, the star series, and to Victory Pictures and Excel Pictures. Practically all the productions thus far completed for next season are based on stories by writers of international renown. Henry W. Longfellow, Zane Grey, David Belasco, Henry M. Blossom, Jr.—it is the works of such writers as these that Mr. Fox has turned in his quest for the best material.

But these are not all. Arrangements have been made for the picturization of novels and stories by Frederick S. Isham, Agnes and Egerton Castle, Justin McCarthy, Clarence E. Mulford, Forest Halsey, Louis Tracy, Jackson Gregory, Karl Edwin Harriman, editor of The Red Book, Dion Boucicault, H. H. Van Loan, Ralph Spence, E. Lloyd Sheldon and others.

A reputation established in the last three years by such big productions as "Les Miserables," "Cleopatra," "A Daughter of the Gods," "Salome," "Queen of the Sea," "The Prussian Cur," "The Land of the Free" and others will be materially enhanced by the release early this fall of "Evangeline," based on Longfellow's classic poem, and "Checkers," a picturization of the play which brought fame and fortune to Henry M. Blossom, Jr.

The publicity and advertising value of names such as these is beyond computing. Longfellow, Evangeline, R. A. Walsh—author, story, director—is a combination that, in the opinion of the Fox organization, will fill any theatre anywhere at any time, if reasonably well advertised. Henry W. Longfellow, poet, novelist, Harvard Professor, whose highest ambition was to be a perfect man and to help others toward the same goal—this man, whose writings are known to every schoolboy, is represented in the Fox offerings for 1919-1920 by what the Encyclopaedia Britannica calls "the greatest of all his works."

Every exhibitor, and everyone else, knows "Checkers." It holds a place in the front rank of great successes of the spoken drama. It established Henry Blossom as a playwright and novelist. It is associated in the public mind with such other Blossom Winners as "The Yankee Consul," "The Red Mill," "Mlle. Modiste," "The Prima Donna," "The Velvet Lady" and others. The name of Henry Blossom spells profits for the exhibitor.

The greatest surprise, perhaps, that exhibitors will find in the whole Fox policy announcement is contained in the statement that David Belasco is one of the great authors contributing to the 1919-20 program. This producer of many of the great dramas of modern times and author of many stage plays, wrote "La Belle Russe" in which Mr. Fox has cast one of his greatest actresses, Theda Bara. This picture, made under the direction of Charles J. Brabin, is said to be notable for the masterly manner in which its many tense dramatic scenes have been developed. "La Belle Russe" is well known as a great stage success which is typically Belascan.

The fourth Zane Grey picture produced by William Fox will be released this coming season with William Farnum, as usual, in the leading role. It will be called "The Last of the Duanes." The wide popularity of Zane Grey novels—his publishers report a sale exceeding 1,000,000 copies a year—and the general and timely interest in Western stories will be of enormous value to the exhibitor in the exploitation of this picture.

George Walsh is shortly to begin work on a Benjamin F. McCutcheon story, "The Seventh Person;" William Farnum has made a picture based on Louis Tracy's well-known novel, "The Wings of the Morning;" Dion Boucicault's "Kathleen" has been completed by Theda Bara and other stories of similar merit—the best works of popular authors—have been purchased by William Fox for production in the immediate future.

The William Fox announcement respecting authorship is a pledge to exhibitors of the highest obtainable quality of stories.

A full list to date, given out by the Fox offices, of the works of the varied authors in course of production, or ready, follows: "Evangeline," Longfellow; "The Last of the Duanes," Zane Grey; "Wings of the Morning," Louis Tracy; "La Belle Russe," David Belasco; "If I Were King," Justin H. McCarthy; "Checkers," Henry M. Blossom, Jr.; "The Seventh Person," Benjamin F. McCutcheon; "Kathleen," Dion Boucicault; "The Orphan," Clarence E. Mulford; "Chasing Rainbows," Karl Edwin Harriman; "The Speed Maniac," H. H. Van Loan; "Joyous Troublemakers," Jackson Gregory; and "Wolves of the Night," E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Fox Merrymaking Team

That everyone must laugh heartily at least once a week to keep well, is one of the soundest of reasons for Albert Ray, that clever young comedian, and his pretty co-star, Eleanor Fair, to go merrily along, adding to people's happiness, in Fox Excel pictures of 1919-20.

In "Words and Music By——," "Be a Little Sport," and "Married in Haste," Ray and Fair have spread what one reviewer has called their "contagious cheerfulness" — have caught audiences in the grip of laughter and held them there. These pictures have set forth clearly the Fox scheme for Ray and Fair of clean, snappy comedy, full of ginger and rapidity—comedy that brings the smile and the laugh and at the same time is hung on the golden thread of romance, "the sweetest stories ever told."

In October Ray and Fair will go laughing and leaping forward in a characteristic comedy—as yet untitled—said to be filled with the delightful humor, the fun and the sentiment that have made the success of the pictures in which they have been featured during the past few months.

William Fox presents Peggy Hyland in "Cheating Herself"

Peggy Hyland Looms Large in Fox Plans

PEGGY HYLAND goes soaring into another successful year with William Fox, carried onward by and helping to carry onward the expanded and improved 1919-20 plan for the Excel series of pictures, in which Miss Hyland has made a record success in the past year.

"The Merry-Go-Round," based on the story of the well-known author Richard Washburn Child, is the first of the new series of photoplays that William Fox has selected for Miss Hyland. It presents her in the sort of role in which she is unequalled—fresh, wild and breezy, filled with wholesome humor and spirited action. "The Merry-Go-Round" is directed by Edmund Lawrence, a tried and experienced Fox official who understands and makes the most of the qualifications of his star.

Following this picture will come a brilliant series, to every one of which piquant Peggy Hyland will bring all the charm and dash that mark her personality and her exceptional ability to register on the screen sparkle, sprightliness, daintiness—to romp through a picture like a breeze of spring and to handle the more serious moods with a firm grasp.

These pictures will include society drama and light, bright, merry stories of the sort in which Peggy Hyland has made herself a box office power. Pegg's share of work in the wonderfully balanced Excel group of stars will be a big share during the forthcoming season.

Hall and Miller Back from Toledo

Charles Miller, Charles Miller Productions, Inc., returned to New York July 7, after spending a week in Toledo, O., where he assisted in the direction of the taking of the pictures of the Willard-Dempsey boxing contest. Mr. Miller was representing Frank G. Hall who controls the exclusive rights to these pictures.

Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager for the Hall interests and who superintended the work of the cameramen and others instrumental in getting the pictures, will remain in Ohio for several weeks, to personally supervise the exhibition of the pictures in this State. Mr. Hall returned to the New York offices July 8, and reports a big demand for these pictures.

Another Snow Picture Ready

"Man's Desire," Recently Purchased by Robertson-Cole for Early Release

THE psychology of "snow stuff" in motion pictures during the summer months has been taken advantage of by Robertson-Cole in arranging their schedule of releases for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual during the hot months.

Following the issuance of "The Mints of Hell" starring William Desmond, a production marked by some stirring snow scenes, Robertson-Cole have listed "Man's Desire," a special attraction for early release. "Man's Desire" was purchase a fortnight ago and is claimed to be a pulsating human interest story of life in a lumber camp of the Northwest. Lewis Stone has the featured role and is surrounded by an all star cast which includes Jane Novak and other prominent players.

Like "Mints of Hell," the Stone feaure was filmed in the Sierra Mountains near Truckee, Calif., where it is possible to obtain the best "snow stuff" for film purposes.

Snow pictures have been proved most enjoyable attractions for motion picture audiences during the summer months.

Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual have already found out the truth of this statement through "The Mints of Hell" which has been heavily booked. "Man's Desire" which is listed as one of the Robertson-Cole specials, is expected to have even a more popular vogue. "Man's Deside" is a series of stirring punches.

vances in her pursuit of revenge, until a ducal coronet rewards her perseverance.

The plot moves with amazing rapidity, and Theda Bara does some of the most splendid work of her screen career. One sees her sudden emergence from obscurity. Her quick development into a woman of the world, and the impelling force in an ambition for greatness and wealth—which is satisfied at length by her own planning and endeavor.

The third of the Bara super-productions scheduled is even more radically different from anything Miss Bara has done than are the two already mentioned. She assumes the part of a merry Irish colleen. Flying pigtails, clumsy shoes and roguish eyes are her badge of introduction.

As one of the Irish peasantry, among the thatched cabins and the cows and the chickens, Miss Bara is as much in her element as in the drawing room. In this picture, which has not yet been titled, Miss Bara is full of girlish roguish—and in this new type of characterization she is certain to make an extraordinary appeal.

Selecting Studio Site for Benj. Hampton

George W. Yates, comptroller for Zane Grey Pictures, Inc. and Great Authors Pictures, Inc., arrived in Los Angeles last week. He immediately plunged into the work of selecting a site for a new studio which Mr. Hampton is going to build for the production of features for his various producing units. Mr. Yates is one of the best known and most expert accountants in America. He held the position of comptroller of the American Tobacco Company for a number of years.

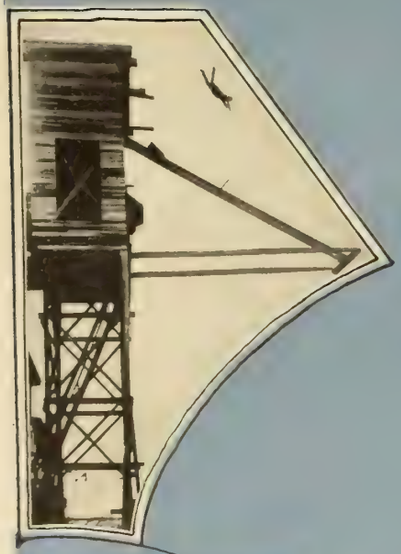
CHARLES HUTCHISON

in the new fifteen episode serial, dynamic in its action and high-voltage situations

THE GREAT GAMBLE



Mr. Hutchison does "stunts" that do not seem humanly possible. He takes his life into his hands time and time again. He jumps from heights well over a hundred feet; he scales the side of a tall building without the assistance of a rope or anything else; he leaps from one of its high windows into a clothes line; he is carried over a boiling waterfall; he does a hundred such death-daring deeds.

This serial holds the interest every minute. Your audiences will be anxious to see every episode.

Atlanta Court Admits "Auction of Souls"

After the Atlanta Board of Censors had stopped the showing of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian, and of which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, Judge G. L. Bell of the Supreme Court of Georgia, June 27, issued an injunction restraining the local board from interfering with the run of the picture at the Atlanta theatre.

Judge Bell's decision followed a private screening of the production.

"The picture seems to me to be an appeal to Christianity to rise up against the crimes of the Turks," he said. "Its effect on me, as I believe it would be on most people, was to arouse a feeling of sympathy for the Armenians and a hatred for the Turks. It is a portrayal on the screen of the things we read of every day in print.

"While the picture shows a great deal of immorality and crime, the evil is not presented in an attractive form. This is the principle that would seem to govern the admissibility of this sort of a thing."

Latest Semon Comedy Is Well Received

A two weeks' pre-release run in New York has demonstrated that Larry Semon has again struck the right note in his latest Vitagraph comedy, "His Home, Sweet Home." Flattering reviews were given by the Metropolitan critics to this picture, which in a new guise, deals with the mother-in-law problem, although the antics of a monkey gives the comedian the best basis to work on.

As in Semon's previous comedies "His Home, Sweet Home" has a well-defined plot, with situations worked out in logical manner.

Add Scenes to Willard Film

Pictures of Fighters in Training Go with "Challenge of Chance" Picture

WITH the acquisition of the world rights to the pictures of the Willard-Dempsey boxing contest, Frank G. Hall believes that with these pictures and the feature "The Challenge of Chance," featuring Willard, combined in one special, he has one of the best bets on the film market today.

Although the Interstate Commerce Law forbids the transporting of fight pictures from the State in which the contest took place, this law does not forbid the showing of the preliminary work incident to the contest. Of this phase of the big sporting event, Mr. Hall has more than four thousand feet of film, every foot of which shows interesting scenes of the two boxers preparing for the big event that gave Jack Dempsey the world's championship title.

It is Mr. Hall's plan to combine the two-feature, "The Challenge of Chance" and the pictures of Willard and Dempsey in training together with interesting "Shots" of the big arena before and after the big contest. The feature starring Jess Willard is now being re-edited and cut to about four thousand feet and together with the pictures of Willard and Dempsey in training will be released as a big special.

Contrary to the opinion that prevails in many sections of the country, the Jess Willard picture is not a fight picture. It has no bearing whatever on the Willard-Dempsey fight.

Mr. Wilke, the producer of "The Challenge of Chance" and Frank G. Hall, the distributor, are most anxious that the exhibitors and the public understand that the picture is not a fight picture. Mr. Wilke who spent approximately $200,000 on this production has the following to say in reference to this phase of the production: "With Director Harry Revier, I made every effort to give the public a photo-drama free from any suggestion of pugilism.."

Animal Life Films Presented

THREE special pictures produced at Universal City are to be given pre-release showings at the Rialto theatre on Broadway, New York, within the next two months. The three pictures are of the educational type, but they are said to be more than entertaining also.

Although previously unannounced and unknown the pictures are expected to bring forth wide comment and praise. They are the animal pictures known as the Major Allen productions. Major Allen directed the productions as well as taking the leading role in them.

The pictures show how wild animals in their native haunts are captured without the use of a gun. No doubt many have wondered how many of the animals in the zoos throughout the country have been caught without harming them. This series shows in detail just how this is accomplished, and each of the pictures are true illustrations. Many exciting chases are pictured and those who have seen the production have agreed that they are indeed novel.

The titles of the three pictures and the weeks in which they were and will be shown at the Rialto follow: "The Leopard Hunt," week of July 6, "Bear Hunt," week July 20, and "The Lion Hunt" during the week of August 3. The Morning Telegraph of July 7 spoke of the first showing at the Rialto as "a remarakable piece of film."

Counties Vie to Aid in Filming "Kentucky"

All Kentucky has been aroused by the filming of "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart, and to be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, judging from the scores of letters from leading citizens of that state to Marshall Neilan, director and to Alfred Green, assistant director.

S. E. Lee, secretary of the Middleborough Board of Trade, has offered the cooperation of that body to the company in a letter in which he stated that living participants of Kentucky feuds are living close at hand and moonshine stills may be found in these parts in active operation.

Major J. G. Pulliam has written to Mr. Green asking that the possibility of taking scenes in Harrodsburg be considered because of its great historical past. Aaron Burr, according to Major Pulliam, plotted many schemes against the government there.

Universal Adds Trio of Directors to List

Three new directors have been added this week to the already large staff at Universal City.

William C. Dowlan, formerly with Metro, Fox and Triangle, has been engaged to produce "Loot," the Saturday Evening Post story by Arthur Somers Roche. Douglas Gerrard, best known as the director of "Playthings" starring Fritzi Brunette, and "The Cabaret Girl" with Ruth Clifford, has returned to Universal to direct Monroe Salisbury in his next production.

M. W. Testa, a veteran stage director, who has been playing character roles on the screen, was assigned to direct Florence Turner in one-reel comedies.

Meyers to Direct Rogers Film Publicity

Maurie Meyers has been engaged as director of publicity and advertising by Lou Rogers of the Roger Film Corporation, presenting the Lee Kiddies, Jane and Katherine.

An exploitation campaign to exhibitors and the public is being planned which will make these young stars more popular than ever.

Metro Begins a Big Picture Drive

METRO'S new million dollar studios in Hollywood, now the home of Screen Classics, Inc., productions de luxe, are tuned up to the highest production pitch for the "fewer, bigger and better" picture drive that is scheduled for the early fall under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Screen Classics, Inc. Director General.

Since their virtual completion last November the studios have been put through a finishing process that has brought the plant now to the highest point of efficiency. Even before the studios were built plans were maturing in the minds of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc.; W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro and Director General Karger for the fall expansion which was to see the discontinuance of Metro's program policy and the inauguration of a policy of special superproductions to be made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed solely by Metro.

Screen Classics Studio Made Ready for Production

To carry such ambitious plans to fulfilment requires studios of great size and equipped with the last word in modern power plants, laboratories, properties and organization. All of these essentials are now available in fullest measure and at the hand of Director General Karger, so that he can go ahead in the production of quality pictures.

The first of the Screen Classics, Inc., "fewer, bigger and better" specials to be started are the three comedy successes, "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's farce; "Lombardi, Ltd.," the comedy by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, which scored heavily when produced on the stage by Oliver Morosco, Ltd., and "Please Get Married," by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Brown.

These three hits are among the thirty-six stage plays and famous novels recently acquired by Screen Classics, Inc., for its stars. The beautiful May Allison will star in "Fair and Warmer" in the role of "Blanny" Wheeler, the deceived wife who gets "square" with her gay husband by imbibing a cocktail of many ingredients to her own sorrow. Bert Lytell will be starred in "Lombardi, Ltd.," taking the novel part of Tito Lombardi, Fifth avenue gown designer, the role created on the stage by Leo Carillo. Viola Dana is to star in "Please Get Married," in the character of Muriel Ashley, the little bride whose honeymoon is spoiled by meddlers.

As these three productions will be surrounded by a wealth of pretentious settings, the lighting of the lavish interior "sets" will be a problem of the utmost importance. In this regard Director-General Karger has reason to rest content, as the Screen Classics, Inc., studios boast of one of the largest and most complete studio lighting equipment to be found anywhere.

Universal Films "Loot"

"Loot" the Arthur Somers Roche Saturday Evening Post story is to be made into a feature production by Universal with Darrel Foss and Ora Carew in the leading parts. Both the story and the two stars are well known to the public and Universal expects to make this one of the best pictures of the year.

Lee Kiddies Finishing First Rogers Film

Jane and Katherine Lee, picture stars, are now completing work on their first picture at Fort Lee, New Jersey. If one would see them work on the lot outside the Solax Studio, they would be reminded of a veritable circus, for it holds a conglomeration of all the freaks imaginable, such as the fat lady, bearded lady, the giant, dog-faced boy, living skeleton, the dwarf, animals and other essentials of a big circus.

The first story was supplied by Phillip Bartholomae, the playwright, and is in following of the plan which Lou Rogers, president of the Rogers Film Corporation presenting the Lee children has in mind, that of using only stories by leading authors, and such that will appeal to adults as well as youngsters. They will be known as comedy-playlets and will consist of two reels each. The release will be announced shortly.

Zukor to Oversee Minter Films

COUPLED with the announcement that Mary Miles Minter is to appear for the next three and a half years in Realart Pictures was the statement that all the attractions were to be made by Mary Miles Minter Productions Company.

It now transpires that this modest reference to Mary Miles Minter Productions covered an affiliation of import which was not disclosed.

Adolph Zukor, the star maker, has been interested in the producing concern and will give the benefit of his great ability, wide experience and the vast resources of his affiliations to further Miss Minter's flight to the very top of stardom.

There is said to be more in this disclosure than appears on the surface. Wiseacres have been saying for many weeks that Miss Minter was anxious to interest Mr. Zukor in her fortunes because she believed, from his many achievements in putting stars to the fore, that with the benefit of his counsel her future would be assured. On the other hand there had been whispers that Mr. Zukor regarded the young star as the one preeminently fitted to occupy a foremost place among the world's screen favorites.

Will Aid Realart Player to Climb Stardom's Ladder

"I have taken an interest in Miss Minter's Productions because she is an artist who already stands at the very front and will go far," says Mr. Zukor. "In my opinion she has as great possibilities as anyone in pictures today. Because of this faith I shall do everything I can to help secure great stories, fine directors, scenarioists and entire productions in keeping with her transcendant ability. I am very happy over the association and feel we can do things of which all will be proud. A contract has been placed with Realart Pictures Corporation to release Mary Miles Minter Productions throughout the world, and I am assured they will be handled in a style that befits their importance."

The director selected is Mr. William D. Taylor, who has directed many photoplay successes. He is coming on from the Coast especially to direct Miss Minter. The scenarioist is Frances Marion, who wrote or adapted "Johanna Enlists," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "M'liss," "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley."

Work is to begin on the first picture on July 14 instead of June 30, as previously announced.

Miss Minter expresses herself as delighted at her association with Mr. Zukor, and feels that by earnest work she will make better pictures for Realart than she has yet made.

Director Frank Crane has begun work at the World Studio on "His Father's Wife," in which June Elvidge will be the star. The story was written by Helen Christene Hoerle and was scenarioized by Philip Lonergan.

A setting, mindful of Spain or Mexico, reveals dimpled Lillian Walker and J. Warren Kerrigan. From Robertson-Cole's "A White Man's Chance"

Director Mackenzie is Man of Varied Talent

Donald Mackenzie, who is directing Helen Holmes in her latest serial, being made for the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, has had a long career in the cinema business, and in addition lays proud claim to having had a musical career. He sang in a number of light operas and was with Richard Carle in "The Mayor of Tokio."

Mr. Mackenzie entered pictures in the early days, beginning with the Camerphone Company. Later he started with the Pathe Company and directed Pearl White in her first serial, "The Perils of Pauline."

Mr. Mackenzie believes that in the new serial with Helen Holmes he will make the best and most thrilling serial of his career. "I do not say this in a boastful manner," said Mr. Mackenzie in speaking of Miss Holmes' serial, "but it must be conceded that the serials that I have made, were exceptionally successful and brought in big money. I believe that in this new serial we will be able to reach a higher mark than ever before. With Helen Holmes and Jack Levering and such a well balanced serial cast, I feel certain of turning out my best effort."

Press Agent Covers Two Cities by Aeroplane

A press agent from Boston, John W. Luce, comes forward with the claim that he is the first to do publicity work by aeroplane. He has made two trips between Boston and New York directing the publicity in both places for the motion picture, "Open Your Eyes," presented at the Central Theatre here and the Shubert Theatre in Boston. It simply had to be done, he says, for besides being the general press representative of the five Shubert houses in Boston, he is press agenting for two other feature films in Boston, as well as looking after the publicity for several summer amusement parks, among these Paragon Park at Nautasket.

United Artists Booking

Announcement has been made by management of the California theatre Messrs. Miller and Leonhardt, of the booking of subjects made and released by the members of the United Artists Assn. the first offering will be shown in September.

"Blue Bonnet" Finally Is Finished

First Hodkinson Feature Which Stars Billie Rhodes

AFTER two months and a half of work Billie Rhodes and her director Louis William Chaudet attained the photographic completion of her National Film Corporation production, "The Blue Bonnet," which marks her first appearance nationally through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The making of this production involved bringing Miss Rhodes and a company of fifty players with her director and a complete technical staff from Los Angeles to New York for the making of certain Salvation Army scenes and their return to the Coast to complete the picture in Los Angeles.

The month of July and most of August will be devoted to the task of assembling and editing "The Blue Bonnet," which will be released during the latter part of August.

Prominent in the cast of "The Blue Bonnet," supporting Miss Rhodes are the following players: Ben Wilson, with a reputation for many successes as both leading man and director, Stanhope Wheatcroft, long a favorite on the stage and screen, and Allene Hale and Irene Rich, screen players of recognized ability.

The story of "The Blue Bonnet," which is the work of E. Magnus Ingleton, is laid entirely in the United States and it shows a phase of the Salvation Army which reveals the reason why that organization won such a place in the affections of the world during the recent war. "The Blue Bonnet" has no war phases at all, being announced as "a story of Over Here."

"The Blue Bonnet" has been advertised and exploited throughout the spring and early summer and at the time of its release will have been advertised consecutively for five months thereby gaining recognition in every part of the country simultaneously.

Though tense dramatic scenes are said to abound in "The Blue Bonnet," Billie Rhodes has no end of opportunities to sustain her reputation as a leading screen ingenue comedienne, her role of the waif who becomes a Salvation Army worker giving her talents even wider scope than did any of her previous five-reel successes, "The Girl of My Dreams," "Hoop-La," "The Love Call" and "The Lamb and the Lion."

Following a week's rest at her Hollywood estate, Miss Rhodes will begin work on her second W. W. Hodkinson release, which will also be produced under the supervision of Chaudet, director of all Billie Rhodes productions since her transition from the two-reel field to big feature pictures.

Costly Feature of the Old West

No Pains or Money Spared to Make "A Man's Country"

HERALDED as one of the most spectacular pictures released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, "A Man's Country" is also claimed to be one of the costliest subjects ever turned out by the Brunton studios. The construction of the town of Huxley's Gulch for the film alone was said to have cost more than $30,000. A perfect "forty-nine" atmosphere is claimed to be created, and when the picture is released Robertson-Cole believes the exhibitors will consider it one of the best Western pictures made.

Streets and buildings were erected for this big setting, complete inside and outside structures built for this story of the golden west that was. The main street in this phantom town of filmdom was more than a thousand feet long, with stores, bank, post office, church and the big Washington Hotel of 1850 barring the lower end of the street looming up as an impregnable reminder of the California that has ever been absorbed in the progress of civilization.

Oliver Kemp's Dance Hall, an excellent reproduction of a structure of the early days, covered an area of over eighteen hundred square feet, with a fifty foot bar and a long rail that breathed an environment of the early days when guns were notched to the hilt, and an exceedingly wide gulf existed between the good and bad of a community.

Everything in the staging of "A Man's Country" was it is said accurate in detail. Nothing was neglected. Even the hitching posts outside the general merchandise store, church and dance hall were hewn out to imitate the cribbing of an impatient horses' feet to bring out the desired natural teeth, and the ground pawed by horses' effect. Deep ruts in the roadway were driven to mark the traffic in this mock town of movie creation.

Henry Kolker directed the production. Kolker has a wide reputation on the dramatic stage and in the picture field. After playing in a number of screen productions Kolker became a director, and his work in the new Robertson-Cole features esablishes the fact that he is indeed a master hand when it comes to bringing a scenario to life.

No expense was spared in combing all California for early settlers to play in this unique startling feature. Men were brought from the mountain and mining districts. Some of the old settlers are over ninety years of age, gray and grizzly and bent with age. But they were full of pep and spray as crickets in the dance scenes in Oliver Kemp's dance hall. The lively tunes of so long ago caused the red blood to flow again in their veins, and they swung their partners around in the Virginia Reel with a glint in the eye that gave an assurance that they lived again for the moment in the memories of the good old days that have passed leaving them bent and old, but unforgetting.

Exhibitors Visit the Universal Studios

A. B. Cook of Jackson, Miss., Bert Tiller of Lake Charles, La., and G. T. Dureau, Jr., of New Orleans, La., all prominent motion picture exhibitors, recently spent a day of their vacation visiting the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York and at Fort Lee, N. J.

The visitors were greatly pleased by the activities at the studios, for every available foot of space in both studios was occupied with production work.

Broadway Houses Feature Select Films

Forthcoming weeks in Broadway's leading photoplay theaters will find Select Pictures well represented. The Rivoli theatre has booked "The Better Wife," Clara Kimball Young's latest Select, for the week commencing July 20.

Norma Talmadge comes to the Rivoli also; her latest Select, "The Way of a Woman," adapted from Eugene Walter's famous stage play, "Nancy Lee," will be the feature attraction at this leading theatre during the week commencing August 10.

At the Strand theatre Constance Talmadge represents Select during the week commencing July 6, with "The Veiled Adventure," in which, as in all her Select pictures, she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick.

Lasky Coast Activities

Lasky companies are all busy out on the coast. Cecil B. DeMille, who is directing Thomas Meighan in Sir James M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Chrichton," has returned from shooting outdoor scenes at Santa Cruz Islands. The trip was an exciting one, Meighan being almost drowned during the taking of a scene showing the wreck of a yacht.

Houdini, star of "The Grim Game," has had the misfortune to break one of the small bones in his left hand while doing a comparatively simple stunt.

Selznick Trade-Mark

Starting with "The Perfect Lover" a special introductory title will be used on all Selznick productions. It will resemble the front of a theatre in night time and a large electric sign bearing the words, "Selznick Pictures, Myron Selznick presents Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," or whatever the name of the production might be.

Mrs. Drew in Golf Comic

Mrs. Sydney Drew appears as "Polly Dexter," a woman golf champion in "Bunkered," her latest Paramount-Drew comedy which is a July release. The story was written by Emma Anderson Whitman and Mrs. Drew whote the scenario and staged the production for the V. B. K. Film Corporation.

Rare Views of Life in Turkey

Pictures Taken by Red Cross for Release by Educational Enlightening

THERE are many unique "camera shots" to be found in the new single-reel subjects now being photographed by the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross for release through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America. Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the latter organization, announces that no negative yet received in New York has been so unusual as the recent shipment from Constantinople.

It goes without saying that "shooting" things with a moving picture camera has been a very precarious pastime in the Turkish empire up until the last few months. In war-times it was utterly impossible, and before that the Turkish officials simply did not believe in allowing film men to go around with their cameras. Nothing but the extraordinary influence of the American Red Cross could have gained the necessary permission to make pictures in Constantinople.

Among the most unique subjects are the first photographs of the Sultan going to church—a very elaborate and complicated affair, as it is done in Turkey. Interesting scenes that show the preparations and the grand street parade that seems to be a very necessary part of his trip to the Mosque, are concluded with the "movie" debut of the Sultan himself—his first appearance before the camera.

Another of the features of the subject will be pictures of the famous Mosque "Sancta Sofia"—which has been called the most interesting building on the world's surface. For five hundred years it has been a Turkish Mosque, the last Christian service having been held in 1453. The Turk, not being a builder, has added a minaret or two to convert the edifice into a Mosque, otherwise the building stands exactly as it did centuries ago. The teaching of Islam forbids the True Believer to destroy the face of a picture, the statue of man, or any writings, because religious meanings may be hidden therein. The building is therefore a veritable treasure house of paintings and sculpture, that have been concealed from Christian eyes for centuries.

Big Night Scenes in Goldwyn

Rex Beach Production, "Girl from Outside," Example of Artistry of Cinema

WHAT are perhaps the most remarkable night scenes made in any Goldwyn picture have been taken by Director Reginald Barker in Rex Beach's production of "The Girl From Outside" at the Goldwyn Studios. They are said to incorporate every phase of cinema artistry in their tenseness, dramatic value and magnificence.

During the making of the production four hundred extras have been at work to people the town of Nome, Alaska, as it was populated in 1900. Every detail is claimed historically correct. The main thoroughfare of Nome has been reproduced accurately, embodying such places of historical interest as Denton's saloon, the North Star Hotel and the Nome warehouses.

As the action in "The Girl From Outside" transpires during the so-called Alaskan "rainy season," the mud scenes of the production are of paramount interest. The camera has caught the vast flood and the fierce beating of the waters against the buildings; the flashing lightning, and the terrible wind storm,—a production of the catastrophe storm that in 1902 wrecked a part of Nome.

Rex Beach incorporates a fight into the action of "The Girl From Outside," with the same skill with which he developed climatic struggles in "The Brand," "The Crimson Gardenia" and "The Auction Block." The battle in "The Girl From Outside," however, takes place in the mud in front of Denton's dance hall during the black hours of the night.

The screen adaptation of "The Girl From Outside" was made by Lawrence Trimble.

Expect "Undercurrent" to Be Long Popular

Wilfrid North, who directed the filming of "The Undercurrent," Select Pictures Corporation's special attraction starring Guy Empey, recently expressed himself in highly enthusiastic terms over this production. He is of the firm belief—and he bases his estimate on many years of experience in the motion picture field—that the theme of "The Undercurrent" is so strong and vital that the picture will remain a live, drawing attraction long beyond the average period of popularity enjoyed by even the best photoplays.

Other officials who have seen portions of "The Undercurrent" are equall yenthusiastic over the long life and success which they agree with Director North will be the lot of this Select Special.

Bracken Not to Hurry with "Confession"

Bertram Bracken, who is directing "Confession" for the National Film Corporation returned to his studio in Hollywood after a two weeks stay at Lake Tahoe.

After the usual studio preliminaries, work was immediately resumed. In this production it is not the intention of Mr. Bracken to hurry matters, for both Mr. Bracken and Henry B. Walthall consider "Confession" to be the biggest and most important production that either of them have even been identified with.

Taking Exterior Scenes on "Love Wins"

With the interior scenes of "Love Wins," Violet Mersereau's new production for the H. & H. Productions, Inc., practically completed, Director Herbert E. Hancock has gone on location this week. Major and Mrs. Rupert Hughes have tendered the use of their beautiful estate at Bedford Hills, N. Y. to Mr. Hancock for several scenes.

Corbett's Picture Idea Undergoes Change

From laying sewer pipes to jumping off the Majestic theatre building in Los Angeles has changed the view of James J. Corbett, former world's boxing champion, regarding the "easy" life of a motion picture actor.

"If I had known," Mr. Corbett said recently, "the real work connected with playing a star role on the screen, I'm afraid I would have retired before I started. I had an idea that a movie actor's life spelled arriving at the studio at 10 o'clock in the morning and quitting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, with an hour off for lunch and no Sunday work. As a matter of fact, in five and one-half months, which it required to make "The Midnight Man" serial, I had just one Sunday to myself and that was spent in bed because I was too ill to get to the studio."

Christie, Ill, Directs from Bedside

Stricken by a sudden attack of acute indigestion, Al E. Christie, director in chief of Christie pictures, directed the making of scenes for a Christie Special during two days from his bedside. A large western street had been constructed in the San Fernando Valley and arrangements made for the filming of important scenes beginning on the day on which Mr. Christie was taken ill. Rather than delay the production Mr. Christie borrowed Scott Sidney from Strand Comedies to handle the direction in person while telephone communication was established from the location in the valley to the Christie home in Hollywood.

Gail Kane Slightly Injured During Scene

A little drama was enacted at the Norma Talmadge studio, the early part of the week that was not in the script, when during the taking of a particularly dramatic scene in Ivan Abramson's new drama "Somebody Must Pay," Gail Kane who plays the lead opposite Edmund Breese, fell in a faint and missed death by only an inch or two as in falling her head just escaped striking the projecting corner of a bank of Cooper-Hewitts. It was fully ten minutes before Miss Kane could be revived.

Robertson-Cole Publication

"Cinema News," Devoted Exclusively to Foreign Interests, Issued Monthly

THE progressiveness of Robertson-Cole is again manifested in the publication of the Robertson-Cole Cinema News, a house organ which is to be devoted exclusively to its foreign interests. The first edition of the Cinema News is just off the press, and it is a model in printing neatness and make-up appeal. It contains a wealth of information about Robertson-Cole subjects, and the Bell and Howell Cinema machinery which Robertson-Cole handle throughout the world outside of the United States and Canada. The publication is in eight pages. An attractive two color portrait of H. B. Warner, in the garb of the Arab chieftain which he wears in "The Man Who Turned White" adorns the front cover. In style the magazine is modeled after the Saturday Evening Post.

A mailing list that comprises virtually every organization and individual in the world outside the United States and Canada who is interested in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, has been complied by the foreign department of Robertson-Cole. Every person on the list will receive a copy of the Cinema News free.

Latin-American exhibitors and film importers have exhibited a keen interest in the organ, and have replied in large numbers to an advertisement asking them to apply for the magazine.

The first issue contains clear, concise statements of what Robertson-Cole is doing in the way of production, and distribution; what its pictures have done the world over; brief sketches of all its stars and much data that will be of interest to all foreign film folk.

The publication will be issued monthly, and Robertson-Cole is laying every stress on making it the most substantial, information-giving foreign organ in the film world.

Pioneer Gets Jennings' Film

"The Lady of the Dugout" Taken for Two States; Big Circuits to Show It

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has acquired the rights of "The Lady of the Dugout" for New York State and New Jersey. The release date set by the Pioneer officials is August fourth, and already bookings are coming in unsolicited to the New York and Buffalo exchanges.

It is hoped to have Al Jennings, the author, producer, and star of "The Lady of the Dugout" in New York on the day of the picture's first showing, and to have him address the audience of the houses enjoying the first run. The matter is still in abeyance, and if the work now under way at the Jennings studio in Los Angeles permits, he will be the guest of the Pioneer during his visit to New York.

"The Lady of the Dugout" is based upon a thrilling and humane episode in the career of Al and Frank Jennings, when they were bandits operating in the Southwest a few years ago. Both were caught and were sentenced to a long prison term. Through the good offices of former President Roosevelt they were pardoned, and began their life over again.

While Al Jennings is a product of the west, he is a man of high intelligence, and academic education. This fact is evident all through "The Lady of the Dugout." Some of the most prominent picture authorities, and many others representative of the business and professional life of the country, have seen this picture and have given it their whole hearted approval.

The entire Marcus Loew Circuit and the William Fox houses are said to be planning to make "The Lady of the Dugout" a special attraction.

Merritt Film Official Tendered a Dinner

Friends of I. E. Chadwick, of the Merritt Films, gave him a surprise dinner last Friday at Tappen's, Sheepshead Bay. All the exchanges were represented.

About thirty in all, sales managers and members of their staffs, met in Mr. Chadwick's office from which he had been temporarily enticed away by John Hammel. When he returned he found the gathering and a brand new desk outfit which had made its appearance in his absence. Then the entire party motored out to Sheepshead Bay for a shore dinner.

Among those present besides the guest of honor and Mr. Hammel were Sam Zierler, Jules Burnstein, Arthur Abeles, Joe Klein, Lester Adler, Charley Moses, Phil Hodes, Joe Schaefer, W. R. Wilkerson, W. C. Herrmann, I. Schmertz, Fred E. Baer, William Raynor, L. Willis, H. Siegel, Frank Gersten, Joe Unger, George Uffner, Nathan Hirsch, George Baldston, Jr., and Messrs. Gilford, Connors, Harris, Bellman, Kaplan, Hoy, Lenehan, Von Tilzer, and Clark.

Success in New Jersey

"The Unpardonable Sin" which is owned by the N. J. Rolfe Film Co., Inc., for the State of Jersey is reported showing big returns at every theatre in which it plays.

It recently opened the Virginia theatre at Atlantic City, to the biggest Sunday's business ever done in that theatre, since its erection. The business at the Garden theatre, Elizabeth, was also tremendous last week through both heat and heavy rainstorms. At the Strand theatre, Hoboken, all records of the house since its opening, were broken. In Bayonne, where "The Unpardonable Sin" played for an entire week at the Opera House, there has been no such business done in over three years.

Pathe Serial Players are Named

Well-Known Stars Lead in Forthcoming Productions

WITH the announcement of a vastly increased serial program for 1919 and 1920; Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has made public the names of the players who will be featured in six of the serials to be released through Pathe during this period.

The fact that Pearl White, world famous as a serial star, has retired from serial work and is hereafter to appear in features, lends peculiar importance to what will be her last serial, "The Black Secret," based on stories by Robert W. Chambers and produced by George B. Seitz.

Chief in support of Miss White will be Walter McGrail who has had a successful stage career.

Warner Oland and Eileen Percy are the featured players in the Louis J. Gasnier serial, "The Third Eye," by H. H. Van Loan.

Mr. Oland has gained wide fame as a portrayer of Oriental roles and is probably the most noted "heavy" on the screen. He has gained his greatest picture success in serial roles.

George B. Seitz, long known as author, director and producer of serials for Astra, Pathe and his own company, George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., adds to his list of accomplishments by playing the lead in his forthcoming serial, "Bound and Gagged," by Frank Leon Smith. Marguerite Courtot is cast in the leading feminine role.

"Stuart Holmes, villain of the screen, and Frances Mann are the featured players in the Arthur F. Beck serial, "The Isle of Jewels," by Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky." Mr. Holmes has won a big reputation for his portrayal of polished scoundrels and is known also for his character work.

Charles Hutchinson and Ann Luther are the co-stars of the Western Photoplays serial "The Great Gamble," written and directed by Joseph A. Golden. As a "Stunt" man Mr. Hutchinson has no equal on the screen. He is a trained athlete, boxer and wrestler, and his work on the motorcycle is said to surpass anything ever attempted by a speed-demon. He had a long stage experience and entered pictures several years ago with the Crystal Film Company.

Miss Luther is another youthful screen beauty. She entered pictures under Griffith direction and supported George Walsh in two Fox pictures.

Ruth Roland, who now heads her own producing company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., is the author of the serial her company is now making for Pathe release. It is entitled "The Adventures of Ruth," the scenario for this was prepared by Gilson Willets, Miss Roland has been starred in many successful Pathe serials, among them being "The Neglected Wife," "Who Pays?", "Price of Folly," "The Red Circle," "Hands Up!" and "The Tiger's Trail."

Pettijohn Features "Better Times"

Exhibitors Mutual Representative Active at Convention

AN aftermath of the convention in St. Louis, now going the rounds of the trade, is the able manner in which C. C. Pettijohn of Exhibitors Mutual handled an exploitation campaign on "Better Times," the Robertson-Cole feature.

Here's how it was done:

On the second day of the convention, the exhibitors adjourned from the Statler to the Mississippi where they transacted their business while sailing down the river. In the interim, Mr. Pettijohn was busy, with a corps of assistants, covering the hall with a sign card, about 6 inches by 14 inches, lettered purple on violet background, containing merely the words, "BETTER TIMES." This sign was posted in every advantageous spot in the hall. Back of the speakers' dais, the cards were arranged in pyramid effect and attracted widespread attention. On the palms which decorated the Statler lobby, the signs were also posted. The registration table in the convention room was surrounded by the slogan which was nailed to all the posts. The card was stuck in every elevator and on the entrance to the elevator on every floor, in the dining rooms, and in the bar room.

They were even placed, it is said, in the headquarters of Paramount, Goldwyn, Select and Universal.

On their return from the boat trip, the exhibitors found the slogan everywhere and immediately adopted it, not realizing that they were promoting a picture the while.

Pettijohn then had distributed hundreds of what were apparently calling cards, on one side reading "We met at St. Louis, June 26, 27 and 28." On the other side they read, "Yours for Better Times," which was followed by two blank lines, upon which to write names.

These cards were used largely for memorandum purposes, from ten to fifteen cards were issued each exhibitor, while hundreds were left in the headquarters of the rival organizations. Rival salesmen were making memorandum for exhibitors on cards that were advertising another concern's product.

But that was not all.

Pettijohn was still busy during the night, and when the convention was called to order on the third morning, all the original Better Times Cards had disappeared and in their place was a card similar in design and size, but reading

Yours For Better Times, Exhibitors Mutual, Robertson Cole.

Then it dawned upon all what a scheme had been put across on behalf of "Better Times," the picture. The same signs were placed on every chair in the hall, and they made ideal fans for the sweltering exhibitors who for the first time realized why they make so much beer in St. Louis.

Rival representatives, recognizing they had something put over on them, proved good sports by letting the ads remain in their headquarters.

Actress Needs Month to Assemble Wardrobe

Betty Blythe, who recently signed a contract to appear in a Rex Beach production, has been permitted a month in which to assemble the elaborate wardrobe required for her part. Each gown must be put to the camera test before it is definitely accepted. All of which presagees a fashion revelation for the fans of the country.

Active Week Reported at Universal City

The highlight of the current week's activities at Universal City was the completion of the James J. Corbett serial, "The Midnight Man" and the launching of the new six-reel feature production, "Common Property," which will star Robert Anderson.

"The Midnight Man" was produced by James W. Horne from a story upon which he collaborated with Frank Howard Clark. Joe Brandt supervised the production.

"Common Property" is a story written by Elliott W. Clawson, author of "The Man in the Moonlight" in which Monroe Salisbury is the star. The action of the play deals with nationalism of women in Russia. Paul Powell is directing.

"The Right to Happiness," the latest Dorothy Phillips' vehicle, has received the final cutting at the hands of Allen Holubar.

Marie Walcamp is now resting after the completion of the first four of the "Tempest Cody" Western two-reelers.

Ford Educational Trio

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announce the three latest Ford Educational Weeklies as ready for general distribution. They are "At the Crossroads," a story of the life led by the inmates in the Federal Prison, at Leavenworth, Kansas; "School Days," a trip through a modern industrial school, where vocational training goes hand in hand with academic High School work; and "The Fable of the Olive and the Orange," in which the culture and marketing of the olive and the orange are presented in full detail.

Revival of "Custer's Last Fight"

The Weestern Photo-Drama is one of the few things in moving pictures that seems to make a permanent appeal to the public. The subject itself predisposes the film fan in its favor and when the name of Thomas H. Ince is coupled with it as the producer, its success seems assured. That is the combination offered in the revival of "Custer's Last Fight."

The Tower Film Corporation are disposing of this production on the independent market and have prepared a big advertising campaign for this subject.

Pioneer Is to Enlarge Its Sales Force

The warm reception and success which the sales force of the Pioneer Film Corporation have enjoyed during the last few weeks has been most gratifying to the Pioneer executives, so much so that it has been determined to increase the number of representatives in the field so that the entire country can be reached.

The list of pictures now being disposed of by the Pioneer are "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthall; "The Sins of the Children," with Alma Nanlon and Stuart Holmes; "The Girl From Nowhere," with Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas; "Virtuous Sinners," with Wanda Hawley and "Suspecion" with Grace Davidson.

Among the productions slated for exploitation during the early fall may be mentioned Henry B. Walthall in "Confession," "The Long Arm of Mannister," and "Parted Curtains."

"The Hidden Code" will also be placed upon the market.

Kerrigan's Latest Said to Hit Right Note

J. Warren Kerrigan's admirers have a treat in store for them in "A White Man's Chance," which W. W. Hodkinson has announced for release this month, according to Robert Brunton, the producer.

"Without question 'A White Man's Chance' is the greatest of all Kerrigan pictures," wrote Mr. Brunton in informing the Hodkinson organization that the first prints have been shipped East.

It is the first of a series of ten productions by Mr. Kerrigan and his own company, to be produced by Robert Brunton. Mr. Kerrigan and his producer have resolved to make the series of adventure and romance type of stories. Lillian Walker has the leading feminine role.

Premier of "Wild Oats"

Samuel Cummins' special seven reel production "Wild Oats" was shown at the Belasco Theatre, Wednesday, July 9th, to the officials of the Navy, Army and Health Dept. as well as to prominent senators and congressmen.

The picture features William Jefferson and was produced under the auspices of the City of New York, State and Government.

An Exchange of Letters

A NEW YORK film company received an interesting letter from Japan the other day, and before an official answer could be sent it was discovered that the office boy had taken it upon himself to indite a reply. Following is the correspondence:

8 Sancho-me, Hama-che,

Apl. 5th, 1919.

Dear Sir

Although being without the pleasure of your personal acquaintance, I venture to wait upon you these few lines.

We cannot help confirming that there is no company comparable to your's, and has brought together the most highest players in america.

Once we had published a Motion Magazine, and so we had fear being behined another who is engrossed in money-making, and then we emulated furiously. But unfortunatele we were dispersed lacking of photo unavoidably.

Lately we have desire to restore our magazine, and prepering now.

But the thing indispensable for doing this purpose, is photo.

If you have any pity and kindly heart who will assistance upon us, and give a supreme honour to me.

Trusting that you will favor us with your esteemed reply.

Faithfully yours,

Dear Mistur Dennosuke Tateishi,—

I am Irving who is the offis boy at the place where you rote for picktures of owur stars. You didnt rite to me Xactly but ever since a feller took me out to Conie island and set me up to a Chop suey handout in the Jap gardun i bin wanting to meat sum representatif japs. So im glad to no u. I can put you wise to inside stuff in the moveies.

I cinched this job about 4 months ago. And im stil here and when ever marshul kneeland comes into the offis he talks to me first. He was here once and ast me where the bossus offis was. You don't know what it means to stay in one place in the fillum.

Im a nite school hero to and that is ware i go after offis ours to lern tiperiting and shorthand which is what u do before u tiperite see.

My honest opinun is that you got my inglish teacher all outklassed when it comes to gramer because youre letter has got more gigantik words in one line than she can find in a dickshunary. Yessir im sending u a pickture of mary Pickfurd and I want to urdge u—get the gramer Denosuke, get that gramer—urdge is what my main boss Mr. J. D. Williams dictates. And take it from me Denne he is some dinamic as he can give u a shok like a big burtha if he finds u asleep. But going back to the subject I want to urdge u to see mary Pickfurd in her new pickture Daddy Long Legs.

Another one of my friends who you can see in picktures is Anita Stewart in marry regan. You see marry as a dame whose old man is in the stir and she is loved by a dick, krook stuff for deteckatif.

If they have my frend Chaplins Sunnyside down in that part of the world be sureen see it as it is funny enuf to mak you fellos smile and rest your faces some. CharlE hast to go to woik at 6 a. m. but I dont haft to be here till 9:30 a. m. but for goodness sake Dennosuke keep this sub rosta.

Ull get the picktures soon and i no u will take more interest in my friends chaplin Stewart and pickferd since u now no me and anyhow I want u to always feel u have got a frend at hdquts.

Waiting your ferther favors,
Im yours 1st nashunaly

Lavish Sets in Farrar Film

"The Golden Song" Is Pointed to By Goldwyn as Result of New Policies

GOLDWYN'S recently announced policy of booking every picture individually, and on merit alone, has already resulted, it is said, in the production of pictures of a magnitude impossible under the old star series system. Under the plan of showing a series of pictures to prospective exhibitors, and permitting them to book one, two or all, together with the announced intention of making fewer and better pictures, the Goldwyn organization has been free to spend more time and money on any story which warrants it.

The immediate result is the production of Geraldine Farrar's screen play, "The Golden Song." Lou-Tellegen, the star's husband, plays the leading male role opposite her.

Geraldine Farrar, operatic and film luminary, in a scene from her new Goldwyn production, "The Golden Song"

The story of "The Golden Song," is laid in Petrograd and the surrounding country, with the seething political and social unrest of the day forming a dark and ominous atmospheric background for the development of an exquisite love story.

An idea of the vastness of the settings and the realism achieved by Director Frank Lloyd in picturizing the story of Thompson Buchanan, can be gleaned from the fact that a street in Petrograd has been reproduced after tireless research by the Goldwyn archeological department. In this scene, 2,800 extras were used. Another big moment in the story reveals the interior of the Petrograd Opera House, which was duplicated in the Culver City studios. The scene in which Miss Farrar scores her operatic triumph was taken at night; and seven hundred and fifty supers were engaged to applaud the triumph of the new singer. The opera around which Miss Farrar's play within a play centers is "Thias."

Christies in the South

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, with office at New Orleans and Dallas have secured the rights to Christie Specials in two reels for the entire territory of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. This new contract with the Lynch Enterprises will make Christie Specials available in a very large number of high class theatres which have heretofore been unable to secure them.

Bessie Love in "Over the Garden Wall"

Now that she has completed "Cupid Forecloses," Bessie Love has begun work on "Over the Garden Wall," her next Vitagraph feature, which was written by Millicent Evison and is being directed by David Smith. "Cupid Forecloses" was made at Vitagraph's Western studio and will have an early release, the completed film having already reached here.

In "Cupid Forecloses" Miss Love has a role in accord with her name and personality. The play is based on "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine," the magazine story by Florence Morse Kingsley, and the winsome star assumes the character of Geraldine, the daughter of an old, but impoverished Southern family who helps out on the family larder by teaching school and raising shrubs. David Smith directed the picture and the supporting cast includes Wallace McDonald, Dorothea Wolbert, Frank Hayes, Jim Donnelly, Aggie Herring, Jake Abraham, Anne Schaeffer, Gordon Griffith and Otto Lederer.

Broaden Distribution of "Topics of Day"

All English speaking countries of the world will soon have the opportunity to enjoy the timely paragraphs selected for screen presentation in "Topics of the Day" by "The Literary Digest." The success of this entertaining screen subject in the British Isles has attracted the attention of Australian, South African and other buyers from British domains. It is said that there are two prominent film men from Australia bidding for the rights.

Already the "Topics" are an established feature on the programs of leading theatres in Canada where they are distributed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., who are also handling the subject in the United States. Timely Films, Inc., are the producers of "Topics of the Day."

Bulls-Eye Picture Cast

Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager for Bulls Eye, has announced the following cast for the "Adventures of Mrs. O'Grady" series, now being filmed by his company: Phyllis Allen, Evans Kirk, Paddy McGuire, Blanche White, Harry S. Griffith, H. LaBelle, Patsy O'Byrne and Frank Ferguson. Leo White will direct.

Church Property Purchased for Setting

Christ Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, which has for some time past been the center of mortgage tangles, and legal fights, lost its identity as a place of worship when on Friday, June 20, a deal was consummated whereby all of its furniture, fixtures and interior decorations became the property of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and were moved and stored in the property rooms of the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

These furnishings will at once be used by the studio as the dressing for a chapel setting wherein the wedding scenes will be photographed for "Why Smith Left Home," a new Paramount-Artcraft picture being produced under the direction of Donald Crisp—an adaptation of the stage farce by George Broadhurst, in which Bryant Washburn stars, with Lois Wilson as his leading woman.

Apfel Chooses Cast Off "Oakdale Affair"

Oscar Apfel announces the cast to support Evelyn Greeley in "The Oakdale Affair." Mr. Apfel, pursuing the policy of engaging the best talent obtainable for the productions that he is making for World Pictures, has secured the services of Eric Mayne, Maude Turner Gordon, Charles MacKay, Eric Dalton, Mona Kingsley, Reginald Denny, Frank Joyner, Albert Hart, Eddie Sturgess, Frank Nelson, Jack Drumier, Edward Elkas, Nick Long, Jr., Jules Cowles, Ben Johnson, Corrine Uzell, Charles Dewey and Dick Collins.

Condon Out of Service

Charles R. Condon, well known in the motion picture trade paper field, received his honorable discharge from the army this week. Condon spent one year in service, being stationed in Georgia and Massachusetts. He left for the coast on Monday for the purpose of associating himself with one of the production companies in California. Condon was manager of Motography for more than three years, leaving that organization to take charge of the film advertising department of Photoplay Magazine.

Mountaineers Appeal by Film

Universal Depicts Woman's Attempt to to Aid in Bettering Their Condition

THROUGH the efforts of a Boston woman, who has established a busy community center, inhabitants of the mountain regions of Kentucky are being brought happiness and a knowledge of the world, heretofore denied them.

Through the efforts of a group of philanthropists interested in her work, a motion picture has been made to place the life of these people before the American people and impress the importance of the move.

"Hope of the Hills,' which will have its first New York showing at the Savoy theatre on July 15th, is that picture. It was produced under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager of the educational department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is being distributed free of charge to exhibitors because it is the wish of its sponsors that the story of the Boston woman and her great work become known to those who may desire to offer support.

Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the production is the fact that every character, except one, is portrayed by a native of the region in which the picture was taken. The film was made at the Canty County Community Center, Pippapass, Knot County, Kentucky.

There is nothing "typical" in the story. The community center operates in a section of the Kentucky mountains where it has influenced the living conditions of perhaps 11,000 persons. It is becoming broader in scope, and while the response to direct appeals for assistance have been generous, there is so much to be done and so little to do it with, that the woman, at the behest of those who have aided the movement, consented to enlist the aid of the films.

Her work in fighting the scourge of trachoma, which in the country in which the picture was taken, is the enemy of childhood, hundreds of them nearly blind from its evil effects, is depicted on the screen in a manner which cannot help but touch the heartstrings of those who witness the picture.

Universal Technical Director

George H. Williams Who Staged Bigger Hippodrome Plays Is Named to Post

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS, who was obtained from the Hippodrome in New York, where he has had charge of all the mechanical details and construction of sets for the past eleven years, has been appointed chief technical director at Universal City. Mr. Williams supervised practically all the attractions and fitted all the theatres for the Shubert enterprises. The spectacular productions for which the Hippodrome has become famous were the work of Mr. Williams. "Sporting Days," "America," and "Hip, Hip, Hooray," in which the first indoor ice skating rink on the stage was ever seen, are a few of the successes for which Mr. Williams is responsible.

Since 1897, when he was in charge of Fanny Davenport's "Desdemona" when it played in Los Angeles, Mr. Williams has not been out to California.

The new technical head of Universal City is inaugurating some radical changes at Universal City. Not having been connected with the movies before this, Mr. Williams is not tied down by any old precedents of the films, and is in a splendid position to install some entirely new effects into the silent drama of today. A large library with reference books on all the architecture from the earliest era down to the present day is being acquired.

A large permanent theatre, so arranged that the interior and exterior may be altered in order to fit any type of architecture will soon be under constructions at Universal, under the direction of Mr. Williams.

Simplex Notes

Detroit Simplex Booster Touring East

Bert Weddidge, who is the head of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, of Detroit, Simplex Distributors for the State of Michigan, has been making an auto tour between the "Automobile City" and the East, together with his family, and has visited the various important cities and pleasure resorts. His itinerary included a trip to the Simplex factory.

Mr. Weddidge, who is known throughout Michigan as "Square deal Weddidge" is highly enthusiastic over Simplex prospects in his territory and states that he is perfectly satisfied with the results obtained during his activities in behalf of the Simplex Product since becoming distributor for same. His company maintains a complete theatre equipment establishment, including a Simplex Service Station and Repair Department. As an indication of the results accomplished by Mr. Weddidge around Detroit he reports that two years ago in that city there were but two Simplex machines, but today there are forty-eight Simplex Projectors in the one city, while the State of Michigan is rapidly becoming "Simplexized" quite as thoroughly as are many of the Eastern States.

Month of June Breaks Another Record

When April and May figures were computed and the remarkable number of Simplex orders were made known, it was discovered that both months were record breaking months. Now on top of these figures comes the compilation of June Simplex orders with the results that figures which a year ago would have been considered impossible are apparent, making the month of June a record-breaking montr, far in excess of anything ever heard of at the Simplex factory.

Foreign orders are pouring in, putting the working force to the straining point.

The Simplex distributors everywhere have been notified of this condition in order that they might guide their orders accordingly.

Harry K. Lucas of Atlanta, Ga., the sole Southern distributor for Simplex, reports that he is advising his trade to place its orders for Simplex one month ahead in order to make certain the deliveries of same.

Ballad Published for Hughes' Drama

An intensive and far-reaching exploitation campaign is now under way for the nation-wide promotion of Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury," the first production made by the Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., and released through Goldwyn.

By special arrangement with McCarthy and Fisher, Inc., one of the leading music publishing houses, Goldwyn's Service Department will exploit a popular ballad entitled "The Cup of Fury," and will circulate copies and orchestrations gratis among all exhibitors who book the picture.

The McCarthy-Fisher concern have submitted the music and lyrics of the song. The theme deals with a woman's "fury of love," and the music embodies the "light" ballroom melody well calculated to win popular public favor. The song will be featured wherever there is life and music and will also be recorded by the Columbia Phonograph.

Nazimova Opens Famed Bowery Theatre

From the standpoint of tradition and historical association, perhaps the most famous motion picture theatre in the United States was opened on Saturday, June 28, with a presentation of the Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern" supplemented by Charlie Chaplin in "Sunnyside." The theatre is the New Atlantic Garden at No. 50 Bowery, near Canal street, around which the theatrical life of New York centered for several generations.

Nazimova from the shadow screen had the honor of reconsecrating a spot made artistically holy through the appearance of Edwin Booth, Charlotte Cushman, Lawrence Barrett and all the great stars of other days. But time and invention have wrought great changes; and now it is the motion picture that has brought the higher forms of dramatic art back to the Bowery.

Signs Goldwyn Contract

T. Hayes Hunter, who has recently completed directing Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," has signed a long term contract to direct Goldwyn stars. Previous to Mr. Hunter's recent work, he made another Zane Grey feature, "The Border Legion," which Goldwyn produced with Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth.

Succeeds Sans Billboard Ads

Newark Theatre Manager Puts Over "Auction of Souls" in Novel Manner

WITHOUT an inch of billboard space, A. Johnnie Mack, manager of the Hill theatre at Newark, N. J., recently put over a special feature attraction as one of the biggest successes in the history of the theatre because he tried an original method of advertising.

Three weeks before the coming of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian, and of which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, Johnnie Mack began practicing speeches. Before every audience at every performance he spoke, announcing the coming of this attraction.

Mack's speech was never the same. He got so familiar with his subject that it was second nature for him to make a good box appeal with little or no effort. He is unable to estimate just how many persons heard his talks. But every one who attended the show for three weeks was told of the advantages of seeing "Auction of Souls" before he left the theatre.

Not an inch of billboard advertising! This was one of the most unusual of all Mack's plans for putting his attraction over. Daily hundreds of Newark people who took an interest in theatricals waited to see the local poster boards become a flaming mass of wording and illustrated matter for "Auction of Souls." But this never took place.

"On a nice day 100,000 people pass my house," Mack said. "A good lobby splash is one of the best advertisements I could have. On this special production I had the ushers dressed as Armenians. I had a big boy out on the street in front of the house as an Armenian ballyhooer. For a while people didn't know whether I was trying to sell a new make of chop suey or leading a Bolsheviki revival or something. But finally they recognized it as an -up-to-date motion picture exploitation.

Mack's week run of "Auction of Souls" was a complete success. The Armenian atmosphere he created about his theatre seemed to generate an appealing influence. And the appeal took form in the nature of a box office investment.

And the picture was playing its second run.

Role Fitted to Vita Player

Corinne Griffith in "A Girl at Bay" Said to Excel Work in Past Pictures

VITAGRAPH'S conviction that in her latest feature, "A Girl at Bay," Corinne Griffith had done quite the finest work of the three years she had been under its direction, has been, it is claimed, seconded by all who have had an opportunity to see the picture before its formal release, as Miss Griffith has spent her entire career under the guidance of Vitagraph, this means that she has never done anything finer. Her friends and the critics agreed that in "A Girl at Bay" she has gone a long way toward her goal.

As Mary Allen, a daughter of fortune who did not know herself whether she was guilty of a crime of which she was suspected, and who was hounded by the police and friends and relatives of her supposed victim, Miss Griffith had extraordinary opportunities to display the technique of her acting. The story of "A Girl at Bay" is the first Joseph Gollomb has provided Vitagraph, but the leading character could not have fitted Miss Griffith more perfectly had the author had her in mind. Katherine Reed, familiar with the star's personality, furthered the fit in writing the scenario. Then, too, Miss Griffith was ably assisted by an excellent supporting company which included Walter Miller, Harry Davenport, Denton Vane and Walter Horton.

Mystery starts at the very beginning of the picture when Mary Allen, as played by Miss Griffith, is shown sinking back in a chair with a blood-stained knife in her hand. The camera turns slowly to show the body of a man on the floor. Immediately questions arise in the minds of the spectator as to when, why and how she committed the murder. In the mind of Mary arises the question: Did she do it?

Rex Beach Early Foresaw Longer Pictures

Rex Beach is credited with blazing a trail for Goldwyn in his Eminent Authors Pictures. His present work is, however, but the development of ideas held a long time.

Away back in the dim past when Thomas Edison was making one-reel films he called on the author for his stories, and Mr. Beach then suggested longer pictures than one-reelers. Step by step Mr. Beach went ahead until now through the Goldwyn organization he has developed the production of his own stories to the point marked by "The Crimson Gardenia."

He considers the organization of Eminent Authors, in association with Samuel Goldwyn, his crowning achievement.

Mr. Beach is now in the West and expects to return in the fall for the picturization of one of his popular novels, "The Silver Horde."

Pauline Frederick in a Story on Jealousy

Jealousy, working madly to its own destruction and the happiness of others concerned, is revealed in "The Peace of Roaring River," a new Goldwyn picture, soon to be released, with Pauline Frederick as the star. The story of the "Peace of Roaring River" is said to develop dramatically from a tenement to the open western plains, and each step in the progression of the tale is an interesting, inevitable one.

Miss Frederick plays the part of a girl weakened by illness and poverty. Out of work and desperate, she permits her friendly, romantic landlady, played effectively by Lydia Yeamans Titus, to answer an advertisement for her in The Matrimonial News. What neither the motherly boarding-house keeper nor her unfortunate guest suspect is that the advertisement is a hoax placed in the paper by a viciously jealous woman in the western town where a young man, played by Thomas Holding, had proven invulnerable to her charms. Many complications ensue.

Interest in Film Version of Glyn Story

Few photodramatic productions in many months it is claimed, have aroused more curiosity than the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Career of Katherine Bush," which is announced for release July 20. This is a picturization of the novel of the same name by Elinor Glyn, author of the much-discussed "Three Weeks."

Catherine Calvert has the stellar role.

The production was directed by R. William Neill. John Goldsworthy is Miss Calvert's leading man. The supporting cast includes Craufurd Kent, Mathilda Brundage, Helen Montrose, Ann Dearing, Augusta Anderson, Norah Reed, Claire Whitney, Albert Hackett, Earl Lockwood, Walter Smith, Robert Minot, Edith Pierce, Allen Simpson and Fred Burton.

Production Started in Lehrman Studios

Production work was started at the Henry Lehrman studios at Culver City July 7th, it was stated by Mr. Lehrman himself. Since leaving the Fox Sunshine organization, Lehrman has kept his producing organization which includes Billy Ritchie and Lloyd Hamilton as comedians and Jack White as director, and these people will be the principals for the First National. Gertrude Selby is to be the featured woman of the comedies.

The new Lehrman studios that have been in the process of construction for the past two months are nearing completion.

Edward C. Thomas has been engaged as publicity director for the Lehrman organization and has taken up this work.

Picturesque Settings in "Desert Gold"

The quaint ruins of an adobe shack once the lair of the notorious Mexican bandit, Otilla, and known as "The House of Thieves," was used by Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner in filming Zane Grey's famous novel, "Desert Gold," which is scheduled by W. W. Hodkinson for early release. The hut is in the Colorado desert on the Moronge Indian Reservation, at the foot of mighty San Jacinto mountain.

Films Now Available to Chile

Big Change from Conditions Several Years Ago Due in Part to Paramount

AN excellent example of the world-wide popularity enjoyed by Paramount and Artcraft pictures is to be found in Chile, where the Famous Players-Lasky product is playing an increasingly important part in the life of the amusement-loving public of the far Southern republic. In fact, Chile is an important link in the chain which has given a realistic touch to the adage "Paramount and Artcraft Pictures Encircle the Earth."

Two years ago the lot of the Chilean motion picture lover was deplorable indeed. Today, thanks to the entry of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into Chile with its own distributing organization—the South Pacific Paramount Company—the Chilean motion picture fan is enjoying the same high grade pictures as are shown in the theatres in the United States which make it a practice to feature Paramount and Artcraft productions. And he is becoming as thoroughly familiar with the productions of the numerous Paramount and Artcraft stars as is the American fan.

The South Pacific Paramount Company was formed nearly two years ago for the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in Chile, Peru, and Bolivia, an immense territory on the Western Slopes of the Andes mountains.

The tremendous hold motion pictures have upon the people of Chile is indicated by the fact that there is scarcely a town which does not have at least one or more motion picture theatres. The larger cities—like Santiago and Valparaiso in Chile, Lima in Peru and La Paz in Bolivia—have splendid motion picture palaces in which the latest films are shown in settings which compare favorably with those in the largest and finest North American theatres.

Tale of North is Completed

Mitchell Lewis Ends Filming of Fourth Select Film, "La Rue of Strong Heart"

WORD has just come to the offices of Select Pictures Corporation that Mitchell Lewis, noted for his characterizations of rugged heroes, has completed the filming of his fourth Select, tentatively titled "La Rue of the Strong Heart." This picture follows "Jacques of the Silver North" in Lewis' Select Star Series, and is a story of the great Northwest, in which he plays the role of an unlettered French-Canadian who comes to learn the worth of a good woman when he meets and later saves a motherless little girl waif who falls into many perils at a mining camp. The story gives Mitchell Lewis ample opportunities for the delineation of another of those great-hearted men of the wilderness.

"La Rue of the Strong Heart," which is the working title of this production and which will be changed in all probability before the distribution of this picture, was directed by Robert North Bradbury, well known as a writer and director of stories of this nature. The exterior scenes for this photoplay were taken along the Columbia River and in the Yosemite Valley, and the film reveals many shots of these wonder-spots.

Mr. Lewis' leading woman is Gloria Payton. The other important members of the excellent cast include Patricia Palmer, as the ingenue, and Frank Whitson, as the "heavy."

Finishing Touches Put on Pearson Picture

Virginia Pearson and her company have returned to the Yonkers Studio after an absence of three weeks, which they spent in the vicinities of Lake George and Lake Champlain, taking exteriors for her second production, "Impossible Catherine."

The few remaining scenes are all interior ones that will be taken in the studio, and when these are finished John O'Brien, director-general of the company, under whose direction the production was made, will supervise the final cutting and assembling of the picture.

American Talent Welcomed in England

The reports which have just reached this country of Herbert Brenon's plea in London for tolerance to "invading" Yankee directors, are apt to be misleading in the opinion of an Inter-Ocean official in close touch with the British situation.

"Brenon told the Londoners that the capable artist should be welcomed, regardless of nationality," said the exporter. "The fact that he made a plea for such a welcome indicated to American minds that American directors are not especially wanted in Britain.

"But the reverse is the case. The English industry is too broad to hold such views. Besides, the English industry is anxious to make pictures as good as ours and the American directors who might come over are a means to this end.

"Producer Brenon no doubt made his plea as reported, but it was not necessitated by any general condition. No substantial section of the British trade or public frown on Yankees who come to work in English studios."

Goldwyn Player Roster Augmented by Four

Four important additions have been made to the roster of Godwyn players. Naomi Childers, Kate Lester, Sydney Ainsworth and Herbert Standing have each signed a three years' contract after distinguishing themselves in productions made at the Culver City studios and now will be given every opportunity to further add to their respective reputaions. Sydney Ainsworth and Kate Lester have appeared with practically every star, while Naomi Childers was engaged on the strength of her work as Lady Algy with Tom Moore in "Lord and Lady Algy" and Herbert Standing was recognized immediately he played with Madge Kennedy in "Through the Wrong Door."

Joins Brentwood Staff

Sheldon Johnson has joined the scenario department of the Brentwood where work on the next story to be picturized is actively proceeding under King Vidor's supervision.

Alice Brady stars in "His Bridal Night," released through Select Pictures Corp.

H. & H. Production Stars Violet Mersereau

"Love Wins" is the title of a five-reel picture play of rare merit, with Violet Mersereau as the star, which is nearing completion in the studios of the H. & H. Productions, Inc. Herbert E. Hancock is directing the production.

The play is one of love, intrigue, and a bride's battle for her hero-husband. It is taken from the story by Edna and Herbert Hancock, the theme having been suggested by R. J. Huntington.

Miss Mersereau takes the part of a young woman office worker whose sweetheart goes to war and returns disabled. He offers to free her from her troth, but she insists that they be married. Then new complications arrive in their lives—complications brought about by the misunderstandings of the young husband who, just back from the fields of war, has not adjusted himself to conditions out of the army.

A strong cast supports Miss Mersereau.

Melodrama Aids Absent in "The Volcano"

"The Volcano," Augustus Thomas' story released by W. W. Hodkinson, and starring Leah Baird, is said to be forced home without over-reliance on knives, pistols, bludgeons or other of the usual melodramatic reliables.

"The Volcano" is a story of American life under the menace of the red flag. It reveals how a horde of rabid propagandists from the darkened byways of Moscow and Petrograd, weave their spells in the humble homes of New York's poorer folk, while sons of the men and women they seek to corrupt are pouring back from the fightfields of France on every transport.

W. H. Gibson, Elvira Amazar, Jacob Kingsberry and Betty Bruce are leading members of the cast.

More Bookings on "Sahara"

Hodkinson Feature Reported to Still Be Taken by Theatres for Long Runs

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S., production "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum in a C. Gardner Sullivan drama supervised by Allan Dwan, had another big week over the Fourth of July, contracts being signed during the past seven days by Marcus Loew's Stillman theatre for first run in Cleveland, by the Parkway theatre, Baltimore, through the managing director, Bernard Depkin; with the Jefferson theatre, Galveston; the Liberty, Houston; at Jake Wells' Atlanta Strand theatre, and many other important houses in the larger cities. Bookings for the smaller communities of the country are not yet acceped on "Sahara," except for later play dates.

A significant evidence of "Sahara's" proved drawing power is found in the booking of this production which is distributed exclusively by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, by exhibitors who already have tested its power at one or more points.

For example, following the engagement of "Sahara" at the New York Strand, the management of that organization, through its treasurer, Walter Hays, booked "Sahara" for full week engagements at the Strand, Buffalo, and the Strand, Syracuse, as well as for subsequent neighborhood runs at the four Strand Company outlying houses in Buffalo.

Jake Wells' Atlanta Strand full week booking follows the playing of "Sahara" at the Wells theatre, Norfolk, Va., and the Colonial theatre, Richmond, for a full week.

A first run contract on "Sahara" has also been closed in Moontgomery, Ala. Other Texas bookings on "Sahara" are the Orpheum, Waco; the Alhambra, Eastland; and the Crescent, at Temple.

Actress is Also a Dramatist

Nazimova Said to Show Knowledge of Playwright's Technique in "The Brat"

IN the opinion of Maxwell Karger, director-general of Screen Classics, Inc., special productions, who, with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, presents Nazimova of the screen, the forthcoming photo production of the recent stage success, "The Brat," with this actress as its star, will not only serve to establish more firmly her emotional talents, but will also acclaim Nazimova as a dramatist.

"Adhering to our policy of 'credit where credit is due,'" said Mr. Karger, "we are glad and proud to announce that Nazimova herself in responsible for the adaptation of her latest vehicle, 'The Brat.'

"Through all the successive stops from the selection of the play itself, the consideration of its motion picture possibilities which were weighed on the severest scales, and the decision to produce the play on the screen, Nazimova has shown herself not only conversant with the most minute details of production and picture values, but also a keenness of vision seldom exhibited even by producers."

Charles Bryant, playing opposite Nazimova, heads a supporting cast which includes Frank Currier, Amy Veness, Darrell Foss, Henry Kolker, Bonnie Hill, Millie Davenport and Ethelbert Knott.

"The artistic settings and backgrounds of the play, which was directed by Herbert Blache with Eugene Gaudio at the camera, were all designed by M. P. Staulcup, of Nazimova's art staff.

Desert Scenes Cause Expense and Trouble

The expense to which a motion picture company will go in their efforts to get the proper atmosphere, is shown by the fact that a load of camels and their keepers were transported from Bridgeport to Roslyn, L. I. to make just one scene in the third Olive Thomas production, the working title of which is "Duty and the Woman." For this one scene a load of extra people representing Arabs and a load of properties were used.

"Auction of Souls" Star Honored in West

Aurora Mardiganian, native Armenian whose appearance in "Auction of Souls" released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, created nation-wide favorable comment, and Governor J. A. A. Burnquist of Minnesota, were the leading figures in a reception tendered the sole survivor of a half million young Christian girls in Minneapolis recently.

"I have cabled President Wilson urging him to do all in his power toward a prompt readjustment of conditions in the Near East," Governor Burnquist declared to Miss Mardiganian, "and I hope that the showing of "Auction of Souls" throughout this country may serve to awaken the greatest Christian nation to the needs of the oldest Christian nation."

As a token of his esteem the Governor presented Miss Mardiganian with an autographed photograph and wished her Godspeed on her humanitarian and self-sacrifing mission.

Records Expected from "Fair and Warmer"

A prediction that "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's record-breaking farce, should be as great if not a greater success on the screen than it was in the theatre, is made in a letter from Selwyn and Company, stage producers of the comedy, to Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc.

Selwyn and Company originally put on "Fair and Warmer" and reaped a harvest of dollars. The farce was universally acclaimed, and set a record in continuous runs for other stage comedies to shoot at.

S-L Feature Sold For Four More States

The sales record being made by S-L Pictures in disposing of "Virtuous Men" was given further impetus this week through the closing of four more states namely; Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming and Utah. The sale of this territory was made by Bert Lubin, traveling representative for the S-L organization. The Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver, Colorado has acquired the state rights production starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince for this block of territory.

Jean Paige, who recently renewed her contract with Vitagraph, is spending all her between picture vacations at West Chester, Pa., where she enjoys all the popular country sports. Of course she spent the Fourth there, and is now back at work on a new picture with Harry Morey.

Virginia Pearson and her company have been taking exteriors at Lake George for the last three weeks. This second production for the Virginia Pearson Photoplays is titled "Impossible Catherine." It sounds like an unusual role for Miss Pearson.

Alice Brady's latest picture "Sinners" has an unusually good cast, including Jas. L. Crane, who recently became Mr. Alice Brady, Craufurd Kent, Frank Losee and Wm. Carleton, Jr. Kenneth Webb is directing the picture.

R. William Neill has just begun work on a picturization of Joseph Vance's "The Bandbox," starring Doris Kenyon. Mr. Neill recently directed Catherine Calvert in "The Career of Katherine Bush" for the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., which picture has not yet been released.

Helen Weer is to be leading lady for Montagu Love in his next World production "A Broadway Saint."

Violet Blackton had a birthday party last week at the Brooklyn home of her parents, Commodore and Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton, and, having achieved the dignity of nine years, she feels that she will soon be graduated from juvenile to ingenue roles. Her small co-player and best pal, Charles Stuart Blackton, will celebrate his sixth birthday next October.

George Baker, directing Marion Davies in "The Cinema Murder," declares that one of the most necessary factors for successful productions is a congenial cast. If the players and director aren't happy, he says, the camera infallibly registers the inharmonious atmosphere, and the audience is instantly aware that something is wrong with the picture. Mr. Baker is sure that no such disaster will occur with his present productions.

Tom Moore is one of the principal players in "Brown of Harvard," which is being state righted by Film Specialties, Inc.

Selznick Pictures Corp. have offered a prize of $100. for the best title suggested for the picture that Olive Thomas has just completed. Miss Thomas says it is all about a Duchess and England and a much wished for heir to some title or other, but as for naming the story—she throws up her hands in hopeless despair.

Robert Leonard is directing Lucy Cotton and Conway Tearle in "The Miracle of Love" at the Biograph Studio.

Elsie Janis, who has had so vastly much more experience on the legitimate stage than in the movies, is having the greatest difficulty finding out how to put on just the right makeup for the studio lights. To date she has had three tests before the camera, none of which has quite suited her very particular self.

Major Reginald Barlow is doing his first motion picture since his release from the Service. He has an important part in "The Cinema Murder" with Marion Davies, and says that he is awfully glad to be back in familiar work again. His last appearance as an actor was in "Old Lady 31" on the legitimate stage.

E. K. Lincoln is still vacationing in the Berkshires, and declares he is enjoying it far too much to come back and go to work these hot summer days. There are many rumors afloat as to what he might do if he chose, but we can't induce him to confirm any of them.

Francis X. Bushman is reported to be going to Europe to make pictures in the near future, while Beverly Bayne will be starred in this country alone.

Virginia Pearson declares that the motor accident she met with last winter has increased her daring in picture stunts rather than lessened it. Having faced death successfully, once, she now feels ready to snap her fingers at Fate, as it were, and her forthcoming production will show her as a veritable female Douglas Fairbanks, playing polo and making a flight by airplane, and affording her audience plenty of thrills in lots of ways. The picture is called "Impossible Catherine."

United Theatres Claim Largest Circuit

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is said to serve the largest circuit in the world with its feature films. The organization is co-operative and has increased from less than five hundred theatres last October to its present list of more than 2,700. Sixty two additional theatres were reported as affiliating with United last week.

Film "Luck in Pawn"

Marguerite Clark, star of Paramount-Artcraft is in the midst of "Luck in Pawn" with Walter Edwards at the helm. Miss Clark is doing splendid work in this picture, it is stated, for she has a particularly pleasing role. Marvin Taylor wrote the play from which the film was adapted.

Marion Davies—An American Beauty: : : :

WE feel ever so much better, not only because the temperature is back to normal again; but because we have settled an even more disturbing fact to our entire satisfaction. We know all about that trite old saying, that appearances are often deceptive, and we are perfectly willing to agree with it in the abstract; but when we carefully observe Marion Davies' naturally curly golden hair, and appealing blue eyes, and beautiful, diminutive, ineffectual looking hands, and feet that certainly couldn't be useful for anything but dancing, and then someone springs the report that she is going to learn to fly, it annoys us beyond words. We simply can't have all the rules of psychology and philosophy that have guided our judgment of human nature upset like that. It bothered us for weeks. Marion Davies and an airplane! It's like talking about Mayor Hanson and Bolshevism, a press agent and the truth. New York and solitude. The subjects are incompatible. We knew it; and yet that report hung over us to refute all our inmost convictions; until—we met the little star.

It's true, she has the airplane, and she says she thinks it great sport, and she fully intends to put this latest transportation facility to practical use some day, when she has really had time to become a skilful aviatrice; but we'll wager anything you like that that time never comes. Miss Davies is much too beautiful and much too feminine, in spite of anything she says to the contrary, to waste her time in the air, where nobody could see her, and even if they could, they'd know it wasn't the proper setting.

As we entered the all-rose dressing room that has just been decorated for her at the Biograph Studio, and found her curled up on the rose-colored divan, with a huge bunch of American Beauties on the table beside her, and sunshine flooding the room, we breathed a sigh of relief.

"Now, this," we thought, "is Marion Davies. She's enjoying life as it is far too much ever to take anything like aviation very seriously." And her happy smile absolutely confirmed our opinion.

"I shan't dare to fly myself until I know all about the motor there is to know," she declared. "When you're in the air, and something goes wrong with your engine, it won't do you a bit of good to stop and look helpless, and trust to some gallant man to come to your rescue. You've simply got to rely on yourself, you know. And there's a great deal to learn about an engine." With which statement we heartily agreed, so we asked about her other hobbies.

"Oh, I love to dance," she assured us, "not ball room dancing, but real dancing, and I love musical comedy. I'd rather work in pictures, though, because when you're in front of the camera, you have to do something. When I was trying to make a success in musical comedy they never wanted me to do anything but stand around like a statue."

"You should have been flattered," we interrupted, "if you hadn't been so disturbingly beautiful, you know perfectly well they'd have given you plenty to do. There aren't many people paid just to be looked at."

Miss Davies covered her face with her hands. She was really embarrassed.

"That isn't my fault," she murmured, "and I did everything in my power to get even tiny parts. Once I remember one of the principals in my company was ill, and they didn't know who could take her place. I told them I knew her songs perfectly, and I told them so often and so emphatically that they finally tried me out. After that I was allowed to sing those songs and you can't imagine how grateful I was." She smiled again. "That's all ancient history though. I have plenty of action now."

"Is there anything else about my past that you'd like to know?" she inquired.

We laughed. "It can't be very dreadful, Miss Davies, since you're so ready to disclose it."

"Well, I'm not sure about that. I always gave my teachers enough trouble at school. I don't remember a single thing they ever tried to teach me, and I certainly never was interested in anything I was supposed to learn. I used to run away and go to the movies every time I could, and I always had novels hidden behind my school books when I should have been studying. I greatly preferred the novels, you see. I expect some of them were the very stories I'm doing now, by Robert W. Chambers. If people like my pictures as well as I did the stories, everything will be spendid."

As we were leaving, Miss Davies pinned one of her beautiful big roses on us, and it reminded us of her all the rest of the day. She is so like a beautiful big rose herself.

Marguerite Jones.

World Starts Filming of "Forest Rivals"

World Pictures have begun the production of "Forest Rivals," a five-reel feature starring Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley. The scenes of this play are laid in the Canadian Northwest. Prominent in the cast in support of the stars is Frank Montgomery, who was leading man and husband of Mona Darkfeather, the Indian actress. "Forest Rivals" was written by Charles Forsythe and the scenario by Harry O. Hoyt, who is also directing.

Cameraman Flirts with Death

Gaumont Man Films Fight From Balloon Which Breaks Loose and Lands in Lake

FRED DELEVAN, Gaumont news cameraman, barely escaped with his life in attempting to photograph the Willard-Dempsey championship fight from the air on July 4.

Editor Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont News and Graphic, planned to give the patrons of the Gaumont news-reels a unique angle on the long-awaited encounter. Accordingly, he had a number of cameramen in Toledo on July 4 to cover the event from all angles. Arrangement was made for one of them, Fred Delavan, a news photographer of considerable experience, to make a bird's eye picture of the ringside and the mammoth arena from the basket of a captive "sausage" balloon.

The "sausage" ascended to a height of 350 feet. Delavan obtained the pictures he wanted, and asked the pilot, Sergeant Marquette, to signal the man in charge of the winch, which was operated by a gas-engine, to pull them down. Whether the engineer was overcome by the intense heat, or was unduly excited because of the big fight, is not known, but the signal was misunderstood, and the balloon shot up to an altitude of 700 feet. Another signal was given, and this time the balloon was drawn to the earth, but the winch engine was not stopped, and just as Delavan was picking up his camera to step from the basket, the buckle of the cable was caught in the turning winch, the cable snapped, and the balloon ascended rapidly until the meter registered the dizzy height of 10,000 feet.

The balloon finally hit the waters of Lake Erie. Delavan was thrown from the basket but managed to hold on to it. Sergeant Marquette, also in the balloon was heard to cry out as he jumped, but nothing further was seen of him and he is supposed dead. The pictures and Delavan's outfit were lost.

Writes Traverse Scripts

Denison Clift has written all of the scenarios for William Fox's star, Madlaine Traverse: "The Danger Zone," "Gambling in Souls," "The Love That Dares" "When Fate Decides," "Rose of the West," "The Splendid Sin," and Miss Traverse's latest play, an original story, "The Rochambeau Affair."

Dustin Farnum Partial to Stage and Screen

Asked the other day which he preferred, the movies or the "legit" Dustin Farnum replied, "both!" "What do you mean both?" exclaimed the interviewer. "I mean there is much to be said for both," said Mr. Farnum. "Sentiment, for example, the living-out-of-a-trunk, the long and the short jumps, etc. The thespian may growl and grumble when enduring the arduousness of the 'road,' but when he leaves the 'legit' for the movies, distance lends enchantment to the view, you know.

"On the other hand the movie star can be seen in six or seven big creations annually. He can also touch the joys that absence of sleeper jumps create. Just the same there is a fascination about the spoken drama, and I expect to return to it some day for a season anyway."

Reconstruction Works for Blackton Done

The workmen engaged on the reconstruction of J. Stuart Blackton's Brooklyn film shop departed from the location last week, leaving virtually an entirely new studio building for Commodore Blackton's activities as president and director general of his recently organized million-dollar production company. The producer now has at his command two completely equipped studios on the first and second flooors, with private offices, special rooms for the technical and art departments, commodious new dressing rooms and property rooms for the convenience and comfort of his studio employes and players.

Although the executive offices of the new company will be maintained in New York City, and also the scenario department, for the present at least, Commodore Blackton will have his private offices at the Brooklyn plant.

Further Details From Atlantic Co. Awaited

Detailed statement of the plans of the Atlantic Cinema Company's plans, the organization recently formed to export pictures to Germany, Austria, Poland and other countries, is not yet forthcoming. It is considered significant however that Mr. Blumenthal, president of the concern, has been abroad since the armistice was signed, making his home on neutral soil in Denmark. On his return for a visit in the near future, it is expected that the intention of the Atlantic company will be revealed in detail.

Frohman Offerings Taken by Whole Country; Comics in All Big Houses

WITH a rapidity that is the talk of the independent state right market the series of Texas Guinan two-reel westerns productions and Mack Swain single reel comedies are being disposed of by The Frohman Amusement Corporation, and at last reports that Company reports but one territory open on the comedies and two territories open on the Westerns. The latest contracts reported closed on both series of productions are with the First National Exhibitors Exchange of Minneapolis for the territory of Minnesota and Northland South Dakota, with the Strand Features of Detroit, Michigan, for the territory of Michigan with the Eltabran Film Corporation for North Carolina and with the Bee Hive-Exchange of Chicago for the territory of Illinois and Indiana.

Each of these contracts were entered into without screening any of the productions, but solely upon the reports which they received after inquiry from exchanges handling the attractions in other territories, as to the demand on the part of exhibitors, and the prices being paid for these one and two reel subjects.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation is advised that every large circuit and first run houses have booked the entire series of Texas Guinan and Mack Swain subjects. Harry Leonhardt, the managing Director of the California Theatre wired the Frohman offices that he is playing "Daddy Ambrose" the first Mack Swain subject, a second week.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that the titles on the fifth and sixth Texas Guinan Westerns are "Little Miss Deputy" and "The Dangerous Little Devil" and the title of the fourth and fifth Mack Swain Comedies are "Foxy Ambrose" and "Diplomatic Ambrose."

Sol Kravitz of Select a Young Executive

An important post, and one upon which revolves a heavy responsibility, is that of manager of the Film Department of the Select Pictures Corporation. To the surprise of many, this big job is now being held down by perhaps the youngest department head in the entire industry.

The young man who is in charge of this division for Select Pictures Corporation is Sol H. Kravitz, for many years connected with the business in different capacities. He comes to Select after a most thorough training in the different branches of the business.

Bandits' Lives in Film Point Moral

The life histories of Al Jennings and Neal Hart reads stranger than the most romantic fiction. To the man with a vivid imagination all things are possible, but the exploits of these two men surpass many dreams of adventure.

The forthcoming productions which are to be released by the Capital Film Company will, it is believed, mark a new era of frontier adventure based on actual occurrences that will prove not only thrilling but will contain an educational element productive of beneficial results for the younger generation which will meet with the approval of the mothers and fathers of the country. This combination, it is thought will unquestionably prove one of the season's strongest box office attractions.

Fine Report From West on "Virtuous Men"

Arthur S. Hyman, who paid a record-breaking price for "Virtuous Men" for Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, released this attraction for the first time last week in his territory. Following the special engagement of a week at the Majestic theatre, Detroit, Mich., Mr. Hyman wired S-L Pictures his appreciation of the box office value of their production. Despite the continued hot weather and strong opposition from other leading theatres, "Virtuous Men" played to record-breaking business during its entire run at the Majestic.

Following the presentation of the picture, Mr. Hyman was in receipt of the following letter from the Majestic theatre praising the drawing power and worth of the production.

Hart Not to Retire

William S. Hart has completed his last production for Paramount-Artcraft on his present contract, which has been in effect during the past two years. The title of his latest creation is "John Petticoats," a weird subject that takes Hart from the backwoods of Oregon to New Orleans French quarter. Hart will shortly announce his future plans, and it is understood that he has definitely decided not to retire, as was reported several months ago.

At the Ince Plant

Dorothy Dalton has just completed "L'Apache" in New York, according to word received at the Ince studios in Culver City. It is announced that she will begin production on a new picture within the next two weeks. In the meantime she is selecting a suitable wardrobe.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May have begun work on their next feature production, "Twenty Three and a Half Hours Leave." It is a story from the novelette by Mary Roberts Rhinehart. It will be filmed under the direction of Henry King, and many of the scenes will be filmed at Camp Kearney near San Diego, and at the Presidio, at San Francisco.

Charles Ray, while working in a scene of his newest production, "Crooked Straight," fell down a staircase and has been confined to his home for several days.

C. Gardner Sullivan, Ince scenario writer, has completed the continuity for the forthcoming special Ince production, "Americanism vs. Bolshevism." The story is to be produced on a lavish scale, it is announred.

Vitagraph News Bits

With two serial companies away on location this week, yet the Vitagraph lot was not deserted. Larry Semon is putting into production a new comedy, which has not been named, and Montgomery and Rock are filming the last scenes in their current burlesque. Jimmy Aubrey with the third comedy company at the Vitagraph plant has completed their location shots are back on the lot completing the final scenes in "Chicks and Chickens." Bessie Love is in the midst of her newest production, "Over the Garden Wall," under the direction of David Smith, while Earle Williams has been looking over a number of scripts from which he expects to select a story to follow "The Wolf."

James Young, who has directed Earle Williams for the past five or six subjects for the Vitagraph, has left that firm and accepted an engagement with Myron Selznick and left Los Angeles for New York, July 1, where he will at once begin the making of subjects for the Selznick program.

Fox Studio Doings

There has been a general exodus of film players to Catalina Island during the past few weeks. Some left the main shore to do certain scenes on the island, while others went there to engage in tuna fishing. Among those who went to Catalina this week were William Farnum and his director, J. Gordon Edwards, to make some scenes in Farnums newest picture, "The Wings of the Morning." Scott Dunlap, who has just finished directing Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in a story for the Fox Film Company called "Love Is Love," has taken a two weeks' vacation, and he selected Catalina. Upon his return he will again direct Mr. Ray and Miss Fair, it is announced.

Madlaine Traverse has completed a ten days' vacation and now has begun work on a new picture for Fox entitled "The Splendid Sin." It is said that she will wear some exquisite gown creations in the picture, having the role of the wife of an English peer. The picture will be made under the direction of H. M. Mitchell.

"The Sporting Chance," in which Gladys Brockwell is starred, is being completed at the Fox studios under the direction of Frank Beal.

Slim Summerville, who is now playing in Fox Sunshine comedies, is playing the leading role of school boy in a new picture being directed by Eddie Cline. A part of his wardrobe calls for a large pair of shoes, which he has elected to wear in and out of pictures until a few corns on his feet have disappeared.

About Metro Players

"The Four Flusher" is the name of the story selected by the Metro Pictures Corporation for Hale Hamilton, the final production of that company to be released under the program system, according to announcement this week by Director General Maxwell Karger. The play is being picturized by Albert S. LeVino of the Metro scenario staff. Harry L. Franklin will be the director. "The Four Flusher" is said to be a comedy of the type best suited to Hale Hamilton, showing the amusing adventures of a typical American who receives a moderate salary, but who insists upon "keeping a good front."

A shed that will house twenty-five automobiles is among the recent improvements at the Metro studios. The building is against the west fence on the main lot. It is said that each parking space has already been assigned, leaving still other automobiles to bask in the Southern California sunshine.

"The Uplifters" is May Allison's latest Metro production

June Mathis, of the Metro scenario department, celebrated her birthday on June 30. Miss Mathis remarked next day that according to the morning papers, nearly every male citizen in the United States drank a toast to her honor.

Among some of the new faces to make their appearance in a Metro production, "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana, will be those of Mrs. Turner Elmer Weatherholt, wife of the president of the Weatherholt Realty Company; Mrs. James C. Haggarty, wife of the vice-president of the New York Cloak and Suit House; Mrs. Dorrell C. Brough and Mrs. Ernest A. Sherrard, wives of prominent Los Angeles business men.

Universal Newsettes

The Universal Company has begun the filming of "Loot,"* a famous story that ran serially in one of the popular magazines, with William C. Dowlan as director. Darrell Foss, who has been playing prominent parts in Metro plays, has been loaned to the Universal to be featured with Ora Carew in this story. The picture will be a six-reel production, and is a melodramatic mystery story by Arthur Somers Roche.

Another six-reel feature just placed in production at Universal City is a story of the Scottish heather in which Mary MacLaren is to be starred. It was written by Henry C. Rowland and appeared serially in a popular magazine. Ted Browning is the director. Miss MacLaren will be supported by Spottiswoode Aitken and David Butler.

The film scenes for "Jim of the Ranges," Harry Carey's latest western feature, were taken this week. The story was adapted from the novel by C. B. Lancaster by George Hively, and was produced under the direction of Jack Ford. Gloria Hope heads the supporting cast.

Director Lynn Reynolds and his company of Universal players have returned from Mt. Shasta in Northern California, where he had been shooting scenes for "The Brute Breaker," a drama of the French logging camps. The story was written by Johnston McCulley, and Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams are the stars.

Monroe Salisbury and supporting cast have gone to Seven Oaks in the San Bernardino mountains to film final scenes for 'The Sundown Trail." This is Salisbury's newest feature play in which he is supported by Alice Elliot and Beatrice Dominguez. Rollin Sturgeon is directing the production. The story was written by J. G. Hawks.

Two two-reel westerns have been completed at the Universal studios. "Fighting Blood," featuring Jack Perrin, Josephine Hill and Laura Trainor, was produced by Reeves Eason. Laura Trainor is a real Montana girl who rode to Los Angeles on horseback from Montana. The other western to be completed was "Crossed Trails" starring Pete Morrison and Magda Lane. George Holt was the director. Director Eason will follow "Fighting Blood" with "The Four-Bit Man," with the same cast of principals, while Holt will direct Pete Morrison and Magda Lane in "The Heart Beneath."

The comedy activities of the week at the big Universal plant included the production of "Matrimony——" by Mor W. Testa. Florence Turner and Phillip Hubbard are the stars. Also, "The Rougher You Treat 'Em," a Lyons-Moran vehicle dealing with the Bohemian shimmie; and the final cutting of "Wild Lions and Loose Bandits," the third of the William S. Campbell animal comedies is being made.

Douglas Gerrard has been added to the directorial staff. He is to dircet Monroe Salisbury, and he is now casting about for a new story for that

Fred Granville, chief of the cameraman, who photographed Allan Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity," starring Dorothy Phillips, has returned to Universal City to film the next Dorothy Phillips production.

Here and There

"A Roof Garden Rough-House" is the title of a comedy soon to be put into production at the Century Studios. It is a story that is the combined efforts of Managing Editor Harry Wulz, Studio and Production Manager Louis Jacobs and Director James Davis. The plot has to do with the downfall of a motor cop whose persistence in winning the affections of another man's wife leads to all kinds of complications, which carry through the dance on a roof garden, to the skating rink and also the top of the building.

Gale Henry having returned to Los Angeles from a week's vacation, has started work on her latest film comedy, the first scenes including shots of animals in Griffith Park. The supporting cast includes Milburn Moranti, Hap H. Ward, Eddie Baker and Harry Lorraine. The director is Bruno J. Becker.

Sheldon Johnson has joined the scenario department of the Brentwood Film Corporation, where he is at work on the next story to be produced by King Vidor.

King Vidor has completed the filming of another story of American family life which will be put out by the Brentwood under the title of "The Other Half." Exceptional contrasts are afforded in the production, it is said. Florence Vidor, supported by Charles Meredith, represent certain scions of society, while Zasu Pitts, supported by David Butler, who represent less influential persons in the world. Other members of the cast include Thomas Jefferson, Alfred Allen, Francis Raymond, "Mother" Anderson and Hugh Saxon.

Robert Brunton, guiding genius of the Robert Brunton studios, where a number of independent companies are making pictures, is taking a vacation in San Francisco. He will be absent from Los Angeles about two weeks.

Sessue Hayakawa has begun production on a new story under the direction of William Worthington. It has not been named. The company has been on location all this week.

Douglas Fairbanks, who is now in the midst of production on the first picture that will be released by the United Artists' Distributing Corporation, expects to finish shooting scenes on July 15. The picture is to be released September 1. It is a story that takes Fairbanks almost around the world and he is called upon to do many dare-devil stunts in order to outwit a vengeful gang that is on his trail.

Ann Little and Jack Hoxie, two well known screen stars, have been signed by the National Film Corporation to appear in a fifteen-episode serial to be produced by that company. They will work under the direction of Paul Hurst, who wrote the story in collaboration with Harvey Gates. Bert Glennon, former manager of photography for the National Corporation, will handle the camera. Miss Little will be remembered for her work in "The Firefly of France," "The Roaring Road" and "Nan of Music Mountain."

Harry Edwards has been engaged to direct Eddie Flanagan and Neely Edwards in their future series of comedies, "The Hall Room Boys." Edwards has just returned from the army and prior to that engagement directed comedies for L Ko, Sennett and Fox.

"The Kentucky Colonel" will be the next vehicle for Henry Walthall, adapted from the book by the same name. Franklyn Hall, head of the scenario department of the National studios, is writing the continuity. It will be filmed under the direction of Bertram Bracken. Production work on the play will be started within the near future.

Four important additions have been made to the roster of Goldwyn players. Naomi Childers, Kate Lester, Sydney Ainsworth and Herbert Standing have each signed a three years' contract, it is announced from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Sydney Ainsworth and Kate Lester have played in pictures with practically every star, while Naomi Chiders came into prominent mention for her work as Lady Algy with Tom Moore in "Lord and Lady Algy." Herbert Standing was recently seen in "Through the Wrong Door" with Madge Kennedy.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have completed their latest comedy of domestic life, "Why Divorce." They are now upon a short vacation before beginning a new story. In the meantime William Seiter will direct William Parsons in a new Capitol comedy. He will be assisted by Bob McGowan, who will also continue to write continuity for the two troupes.

Following announcement that Jesse D. Hampton had signed a contract with Blanche Sweet to appear under his management, he issued a statement that Miss Sweet's first picture under his guiding hand will be titled "A Woman of Pleasure." It is a story from the celebrated London stage melodrama by James Willard. Wallace Worsley, for many years a stage player and producer, is to direct the feature under Mr. Hampton's supervision. The production will be distributed by Pathe. Wheeler Oakman who played a prominent part in "The Spoilers," "Ne'er Do Well" and "Mickey," has been engaged to play in the production. Others in Miss Sweet's supporting cast will be Wilfred Lucas, one of the best known players on the screen; Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced lad seen in Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs"; Walter Perry, character comedian; Carmen Phillips and others. The scenes of the play are laid in rural England and in the Boer sections of South Africa.

"Winds of Vengeance" is the latest William Desmond production from the Jesse D. Hampton studios. It is a western drama and was written by George Elwood Jenks, author of "The Prodigal Liar." Among those in the supporting cast are Marguerite De La Motte, Walter Perry, Tom O'Brien, Ed Piel, Frank Lanning and Florence Gibson.

Tom Geraghty is going to London, which is no place for an Irishman.

Vacation season has arrived for John Bowers, the Goldwyn leading man.

Kathleen O'Connor ruined twelve dresses in the "Midnight Man" serial.

Arthur Rosson has found a new brand of wax that adds materially to his mustache.

George Hoarse Melford has had his voice in training for filming "Every Woman."

Bill Russell was not in town this week, for the very good reason he is in New York.

Mabel Normand was seen at the Goldwyn studios this week wearing a black and white hat.

Victor Schertzinger claims he is not the composer of the new National air, "How Dry I Am."

Eddie Cline has started a school on the Sunshine lot, and has Slim Somerville as teacher's pet.

Bob Brunton threatens to take an hour off and go out and see his new five hundred acre studio.

Jean Pallette, late aviator, is back in the picture colony, and will be leading man for May Allison.

No inference is meant, but Bill Dowland is to direct "Loot" for Universal. Bill's middle initial is "C."

Ernest C. Warde is paging California for a good-sized mud puddle where he can have an automobile stuck.

Lynn Reynolds has found it necessary to film a picture in northern California, where the nights are cool.

Dorothy Phillips christened the Stimson Camp Headquarters for returned soldiers. The christening was done with pure water.

Scott Sidney gets mail under the names of Scott and Sidney, but up to the time of going to press, has not decided to change his name.

William Beaudine has found it rather expensive to wear the large Panama hat, for the reason that the cleaners charge four times as much.

Darwin Karr has come into our midst, and is spending his time explaining the merits and virtues of a certain publication that has a yellow back.

The poets have found Molly Malone, and shortly there will be a song on the market named after this sweet young ingenue—and such a jaz!

June Mathis celebrated her birthday anniversary June 30, and claims that every male citizen of the United States drank a toast to the day.

Jay Belasco denies the report that his hair is artificially curled for every picture, and he further acclaims he hasn't a gray hair in his head.

Ruth Stonehouse is back as a sure-to-goodness member of the West Coast film colony, being the leading woman for Hale Hamilton in "The Foreflusher."

Darrell Foss just will be versatile, and now he's writing a scenario. Darrell never took a correspondence course, but says he's read all their literature.

Walter Edwards is reported to be harvesting a mammoth crop of figs at his Culver City ranch. Walter, by the way, is still one of the city Dads of that village.

Metro is getting upstage, for just recently they had wives of the owners of prominent Los Angeles retail stores to take part in society scenes for "Please Get Married."

No fish stories have been received from Bill Duncan since he went to Huntington Lake, and therefore it is said Bill is still O. F. and still works every minute.

The Famous Players-Lasky prop department may shortly put on "Pigeons Is Pigeons," because two-thirds were recently purchased and the flock is now many times doubled, or tripled.

From reliable source we learn that Dennison Clift has written all of Madlaine Traverse's plays for the screen, including the original one that's coming up named "The Rochaubeau Affair."

Now that the country has gone dry, Lou Cody avers he's going to have his mustache removed, as he will not require its taste retaining feature in the future. Lou never eats soup.

Eddie Thomas has passed from the realm of trade paper representative, and has taken up the task of making Henry Lehrman famous—pardon us, adding fame to the name of Henry Lehrman, we meant to say.

Francelia Billington was seen at U City this week wearing her usual curls. Francelia has been in retirement at Glendale, Cal., but now we hear of a lot of big pictures in which she is to be featured.

Marie Walcamp's room at a hotel at Sonora was invaded this week by two horned toads, and the girl who has untremblingly played with the lions, tigers and other vicious beasts, was all aquiver until the maid removed the toads.

The most recent claim for fame by Jack Kerrigan's press agent is that Jack is an artist; i. e., he paints things with a brush. And in his modest, unassuming way Jack confesses that he never publicly let it be known before.

After being on Henry Lehrman's payroll for six months with nothing to do but draw their salary checks, Billie Ritchie, Jack White and Lloyd Hamilton are about to celebrate the fact that they are to go to work. This is a hard life!

An unheard of thing happened at the Fox studio last week—the director, Scott Dunlap; co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair and the cutter, met and congratulated the cameraman, George Schneiderman, for making "Love Is Love" an artistic picture.

Wally Reid steps forth as the champion long engagement star of the screen, having been with Famous Players-Lasky for four years, and now under contract to stick five years mors. According to our training in the three R's, this gives him nine years with the same firm.

Ed. Durling, the picture playwright, upon being interviewed by HOOKUM, confided that he thought Motion Picture News was the greatest publication of the industry, but insisted that he not be quoted. Ed. should have been at the peace conference, for he's a diplomat if anything.

When the news flitted about that Goldwyn had made a Russian picture, directors of Consolidated Crepe Hair Corporation held a meeting and decided to reorganize, in view of the fact that they had learned Ken. McGaffey was going to have his hair cut by way of a Fourth of July celebration.

When Jacques Jaccard completed the filming of a series of western photodramas, all members of the company chipped in and bought him a silver mounted saddle and bridle and set of spurs, and thereby showed their appreciation for Jacques having permitted them to live through the thriller.

Speaking of bombshells and similar warlike articles of the past reminds us of something that occurred at Universal City—Joe Brandt tendered his resignation. Brandt stated he had nothing to say, and President Laemmle said he didn't know why. All of which are regular interviews.

The editors and publishers of the Studio Skeleton confidentially advise that the publication is for the employes of the Goldwyn studios exclusively, but what we started to say was it's got a lot of pep for a skeleton, and a fashion department that is far from being ghastly or ghostly.

CHARLEY FUHR TO FLY!

Just at press time a telegram was received from Charley Fuhr saying he was having a hydroplane constructed for the sole purpose of taking fifty thousand dollars away from Tom Ince. The closing remark was: "One day in a prohibition country is enough. I am going to Australia, or the South Sea Islands where they still have wild women."

J. J. P. Boatman of Compton, California, sends a postcard to HOOKUM announcing Revelations of the Vicissitudes of Nature, and thereby advising that Los Angeles was to be the center of an earthquake on June 30th at 3 P. M. At the studios on the following morning, it was learned the industry was still in its infancy, and professionals went to work when they got ready.

Frank Lloyd tells this story without laughing at himself. He and Billy Taylor were both making scenes on a Morosco stage, Frank using mice and Taylor a big cat. Lunch was called for the Lloyd Company, and Taylor's cat took the cue. The scenes were not finished by either company for three days. Taylor's claim was that his cat had to take a long sleep after the square meal it had. That's not a particularly funny story, but Frank used it as an illustration of how well he and Taylor get along.

Scoop Conlon has made a very wonderful discovery, and he asked HOOKUM to notify George DuBois Proctor, Tom Geraghty and Walter Macnamara, that Charley Fuhr has been found. In perusing the baseball columns of a newspaper, he noticed that a man named Fuhr is pitching ball for Omaha. He immediately decided that this was Charley. Fuhr, it was found, pitches about one game out of every four Omaha plays. Scoop never knew Charley was a baseball player or pitcher, but knows he can add a new accomplishment by training overnight. Nothing surprises his friends.

Editor's Note: All play and no work makes Jack a dull boy, and so Curley went on a vacation, but when he comes back he threatens to brighten up this here paper.

Equipment Service

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

Out at last. The S. M. P. E. Transactions of the October 1918 meeting in Cleveland. Quite a book too. Well worth the 30c. charged for single copies.

Donald J. Bell, President of the Chicago Pathescope Exchange, was a visitor in New York a few short days ago.

Bell wishes to announce to his many friends in the motion picture industry that he is now operating—or rather projecting—a vast bean farm in California. At present he is commuting between California, Chicago and New York, according to the demands for his presence in the various towns.

Before plunging too heavily in the succulent bean, Don should read Don Marquis's harangue of that article of diet. It is well to investigate a field thoroughly before getting into it too deep.

No, Chester, we knoweth not the nature of the bean whether it be ivory, string or Mexico Jumping.

Had the good fortune to meet Dr. Sugden at the Prizma office one day last week. The Doc was just in from a month's sojourn in the vicinity of Cody, Wyoming, where he had gone to Prizmagraph some wild-d-d-d gr-r-r-rizzlies in their native haunts and colors.

Whether Doc meant it or not, we heard him say something about taking a run down to Africa, where a great conclave of man-eating cannibals had promised a wonderful coronation and feast for him. No, thank you, Doc, we'll brave the subways and the purple and white taxis awhile longer. And besides, we don't like the way that reads: Crowned and feasted—Good bye, Doc.

G. W. Landon, of the Nicholas Power Co., has a reputation around this place as an after dinner speaker that can't be beaten. Knowing Landon's habits we believe he is one of the few A. D. S. whose talents won't be affected after the First.

L. E. Davidson, of the United Film and Projection Co., of Buffalo, made a quick trip to New York and return last week.

Last Week We Met—Willard B. Cook

SIX years ago Willard B. Cook was living in Europe. In some way the Pathescope then in its first stages was brought to his attention and seeing its tremendous possibilities he adopted it and emigrated with it to this country. Since its inception he has fathered it and tended to it carefully until at the present time—well, Cook says he sells lots and lots of 'em.

When the new Premier Pathescope was put on the market a short time ago few knew that W. B. Cook was its inventor but such was the case. Thus it will be seen that as President of the Pathescope Company of America as well as inventor of note he combines the qualities of an Executive and expert mechanic.

It is a pleasure to meet Mr. Cook. Although a man of many accomplishments he confines himself during business hours to questions of business and seldom indeed can be forced to indulge in petty discussions which lead to nowhere and serve only to consume valuable time. Agreeable is his middle name. He does not believe in shutting himself away from the world and allow others to handle affairs for him and his company. With a subject of importance to discuss he can always be seen and seldom indeed are these conferences completed without a receipt of much valuable information.

His photograph which we show is the result of one of his many trips to the French Capital, having been taken for affixing to a passport. Considering this fact, we are at a loss to understand the reason for his preparations for low visibility. However, on his return to this country the mustache disappeared taking with it about fifteen years of appearance.

Uhen he isn't to be found at Aeolian Hall he will probably be discovered aboard his yacht, on which his family lives throughout the summer months. Cook is skipper, navigator, and engineer of his craft and carries out each post in his usual thorough manner.

Yachting is his hobby—that and the study of navigation. According to his own story one of his happiest years was when in the shadow of Pike's Peak, he went through the various treatises on Navigation and completely mastered the subject, although at the time a thousand and more miles away from the oceans on either side of him.

Mr. Cook takes pride in the fact that the film his machine uses was the original safety-standard film.

We doubt if there is any individual in the country who is so intimately connected with the conditions underlying the field of the educational film as is Mr. Cook. Under his control he has over 1,000 subjects on every subject under the sun. These films, many of them being multi-reel features are in constant circulation among a large number of schools and similar institutions and in private homes. The safety feature of the film itself has been a wonderful incentive to the further use of these films for these purposes. Mr. Cook is proud and justly so of the fact that his film was the original safety standard.

SIXTEEN PAGES!

THE Equipment Service Section is sixteen pages strong this week, and filled from cover to cover with serviceable "reading."

A glance through the following pages shows who DOMINATES THE FIELD

Here and There in the World of Equipment

Here's something new.

A real working model of a 12-1 intermittent. An ingenious affair in a class by itself. We'll tell you more about it soon.

Heretofore we've all been sceptical of these new speedy intermittents because they lived too closely to their name. When a man appeared and showed you his new 7-1 mechanism he meant to imply that for every $7 you put in you might get $1 back.

But this 12-1 has been passed on by experts and looks the real goods. Whew! Think of that light saving.

Another Pathescope official makes this haven. This time it is Capt. Baird of the Philadelphia Exchange.

Rabell of the Independent Movie Supply, has been flooded with inquiries for his new IMSCO catalog. And it's a catalog worth having too.

On July 1, Elliot Reid, Assistant to General Manager, became Sales Manager of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, and in that capacity will be responsible for the commercial activities of the Company in both large and miniature classes of lamps in domestic territory.

E. J. LAUSTE, father of the talking picture, was a visitor in the office week before last. Mr. Luste came from the Continent three years ago in the hopes of interesting Americans in his invention on which he has worked 25 years. If it had not been for the war it is probable that his remarkable Photocinematophone would have been on the market by this time.

AUSTIN C. LESCARBOURA's new book on the M. P. industry is a welcome addition to the general library of M. P. literature.

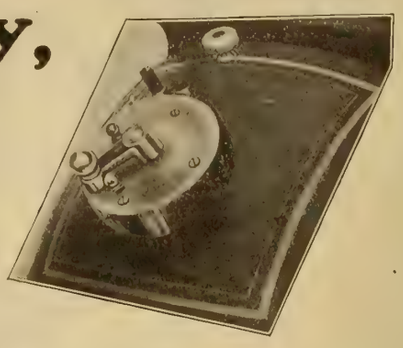
The name of the book is "Behind the Motion Picture Screen."

Mr. Lescarboura is on the editorial staff of Scientific American.

AFTER OUR STORY OF JACK ROSE'S new fangled camera in a recent issue comes a report that ——— has imported a motion picture camera from France that is so small it is practically a vest pocket edition. No doubt they will soon be down to watch case dimensions.

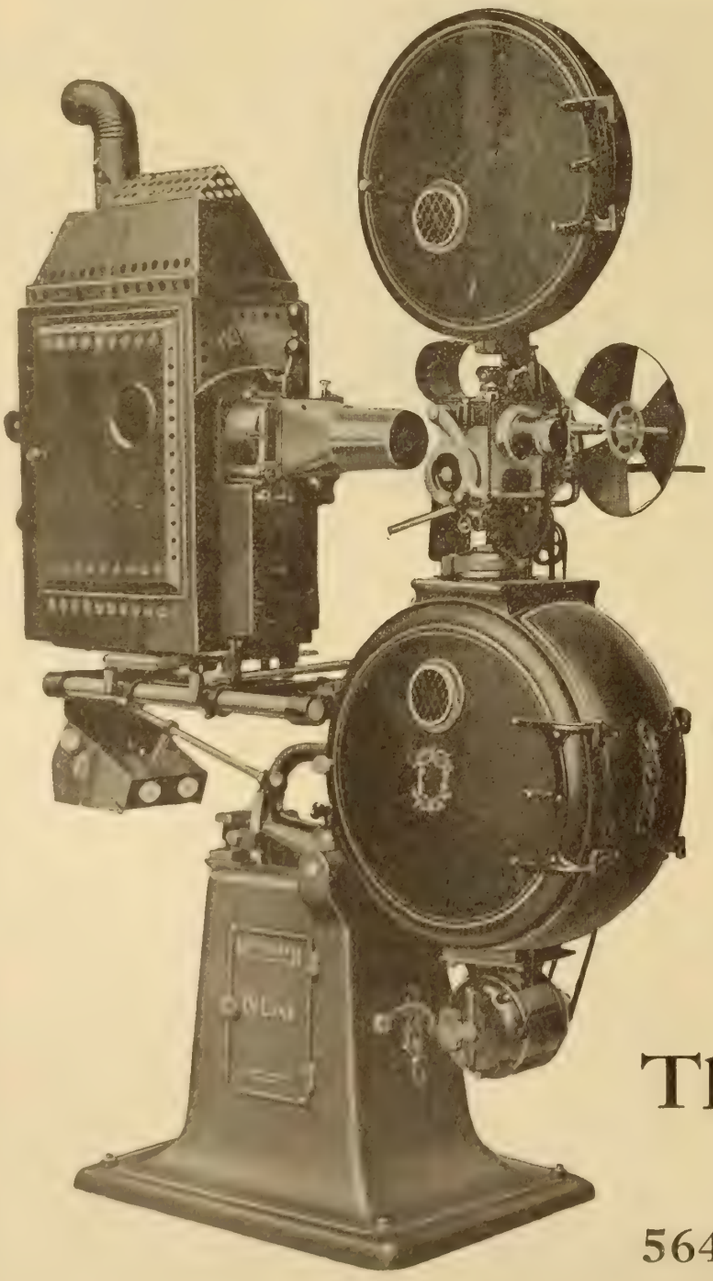
Convenience, Safety, Ease of Control

The De Luxe Instrument Board



One of the prominent advantages of the MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE is

CONVENIENCE, — EASY CONTROL, — READINESS FOR INSTANT USE



YOUR operator doesn't need to start in his booth prepared to continually remove the oil from his speed control to insure uniform speed; nor is it necessary to keep the shelves in his booth full of extra parts, fearful that some part of the Machine will give away without a moment's warning.

These things don't happen with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

You know the quality of the material used in the manufacture of a Motiograph—not a single die casting is used; the gears and sliding discs have never been known to wear out; speed control fully enclosed; no oil troubles.

Make the picture which you sell to your customers the very best—You can do it with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Advantages in Use of New Standard Narrow Width, Slow Burning Film for Portable Projectors

By W. B. Cook

Reprinted from Transactions of Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

AT the last meeting in April at Rochester, your Society adopted a new size of narrow width, slow-burning film as the standard for all portable projectors. As the firm with which the writer is connected has had nearly five years of successful experience with a similar product, the chairman of your Papers Committee has requested me to prepare and submit to you some actual facts of the advantages pertaining thereto.

SAFETY FIRST

We owe a profound debt of gratitude, which will be better appreciated in later years, for the high and noble motives which actuated the sponsors of the new standard, and also those members of your Society who co-operated so earnestly in the adoption of a standard which is designed to remove the portable projector industry from a severe and menacing cloud of public mistrust and legislative restriction.

The clearly recognized hazards of the use and even the storage of celluloid film have been not only pointed out by the Underwriters' Laboratories, but have been by them so insistently urged that not only the States, but practically all important municipalities have been compelled to surround the use and storage of celluloid films, within their jurisdiction, with such wise and protective restrictions as would tend to reduce to a minimum the hazards to which the members of the Commonwealth are constantly subjected in attending public and private cinematograph exhibitions.

In the last few years the growth and expanding fields of usefulness of the motion picture have surpassed the wildest imagination of its earlier advocates.

It has long been obvious that a medium of such wonderful educational value would inevitably be recognized as an essential for public instruction as well as entertainment. Progressive schools, churches and institutions have been quick to realize that in the motion picture lies one of the best aids to their usefulness.

It very soon became evident that the principal drawbacks to the general adoption of the motion picture in school, church and institutional work were the expense of the standard theatrical projectors, the specialized skill and knowledge required in their operation, and the deplorable lack of film subjects suitable for institutional use.

The first and second objections were sought to be overcome by the manufacture of cheaper and simpler forms of portable projectors, which could be easily carried from one room to another instead of being limited to a single auditorium, and whose simplicity of construction and operation would enable them to be operated by persons of very moderate mechanical skill.

Now our very efficient guardians of life and property—the insurance authorities—promptly pointed out that the principal hazard attendant upon such exhibitions lay, not in any hazard or use in the projector itself, but in the use and storage of the celluloid film used as a medium therein. The very advantages claimed in the use of the portable projector—namely, use without a booth and by people of limited mechanical skill, tremendously increased the film hazard beyond that attending its use in the standard machines inclosed in fireproof booths and under the operation of skillful attendants.

The obvious solution of the problem of hazard lay in the adoption of approved, slow-burning film, but the Underwriters' Laboratories again pointed out that unless the portable projector should be so constructed that it would be impossible to use ordinary celluloid film therein, it was a foregone conclusion that in the absence of any considerable quantity of available slow-burning film, the owners of such projectors would be sure to attempt the use of celluloid films therein (if such use should be possible), and the potential hazard would still remain exactly as before.

To cover the situation properly, the Underwriters' Laboratories suggested, and the National Association of Fire Prevention adopted the specific qualification:

"Approved miniature projectors must be constructed that they cannot be used with films employed on the full-sized commercial moving picture machine." (National Electric Code—Rule 38, Section V, Paragraph 6.)

Various attempts have been made to comply with the requirement, such attempts being principally confined to the use of some form of odd perforation for standard width, slow-burning films, to fit a sprocket so constructed that it would mutilate ordinary celluloid film of standard perforation.

None of these attempts have met with any practical success, and all of them are open to the serious, if not insurmountable objection that in the hands of any ordinarily intelligent but unscrupulous owner the mutilating sprocket could be very easily exchanged or altered so that it will run standard celluloid film.

ONLY SATISFACTORY SOLUTION IS ADOPTION OF A NEW STANDARD WITH DIFFERENT WIDTH AND PERFORATION

Anything less than this is obviously not deserving, and therefore cannot hope for permanent success.

It is only through the fact that the buyers are ignorant of the Underwriters' code and the criminal risk involved that they now purchase and use small portable projectors employing inflammable film. This intolerable condition has greatly retarded the natural expansion of the portable projector industry and the sooner we unite in removing it, the quicker will we enjoy the benefits of a healthy growth and expansion.

One manufacturer as long as seven or eight years ago took the lead boldly by adopting both an odd size and an odd perforation for use exclusively with slow-burning film, with the idea of insuring a thoroughly safe and approved apparatus.

This odd-sized machine and its film were, of course, regarded as an outlaw and suffered from the combined attacks of all other manufacturers of portable projectors designed to use the ordinary celluloid film.

In spite of the fact that the early users of the odd-sized machine were limited to the use of a very restricted repertoire of available subjects; in spite even of the fact that the earlier models of the machine had rather narrow limitations as to size and brilliance of picture, it has achieved some measure of success, as evidenced by the simple fact that more than ten thousand of them have been sold and are used all over the world, and more than 25,000,000 feet of printed positive on slow-burning stock has been made therefor.

The only possible explanation of the success lies in the fact that it was something that the public wanted. But why did they want it? At every stage of its career, this odd-sized machine has been exposed to the keenest individual and collective competition of all makers of portable projectors using standard celluloid film.

The answer requires but one word—safety.

If safety were the single and only advantage to be derived from this adoption of the new width and perforation, it would still be more than amply justified. But there are also other good and important advantages inherent therein. As a matter of fact, the adoption of the new standard is not merely a matter of business policy, but as pointed out above, it is an imperative necessity for the self-preservation and insured permanency of the portable projector industry. Anything short of a real approval projector is regarded as dangerous by the insurance, State and municipal authorities, and the user thereof with celluloid films is regarded as a menace to public safety.

Having decided that the industry absolutely required a new standard width and perforation, your Society naturally and wisely adopted one that makes immediately available some 25,000,000 feet of existing positive stock, and also the facilities of several established plants for the further production of additional films, as they may be required.

ECONOMY IN THE USE OF THE NEW STANDARD

In these days of increasing cost of materials, the item of economy is certainly one to be seriously considered.

The Eastman Company have been furnishing the new standard narrow-width at 80 per cent of the cost per foot for ordinary width. Furthermore, the new standard narrow-width film will contain twenty pictures per foot instead of the sixteen of the present celluloid film. These two factors result in a combined economy or saving of 36 per cent in the cost of stock for any given production. There is also, of course, a very considerable saving in the use of chemicals for developing, and also in the general handling and transportation of the narrow-width film, of which 800 feet in length is equivalent to the ordinary 1,000-foot celluloid reel.

DURABILITY

Film experts seem to fairly well agree that the present deterioration in use of ordinary film is greater than it would be if the perforations were less numerous. In other words, that standard film is weakened, and its life is shortened by having so many as four perforations to each picture. The new standard with three perforations to each picture length would seem to be a logical improvement.

In conclusion and in simple justice to the firm which I represent, some pertinent facts should be made public.

Since the adoption of the new standard at your last meeting, some adverse criticisms have been launched by parties who pretend to see in the new standard a menace to their own self-interests.

To an unprejudiced judge, it would seem that the only firm really entitled to complain of the adoption of the new standard would be the one that I represent, in that such adoption virtually wipes out and destroys in one instant a practical monopoly in a certain field, which had existed for a number of years. Your action in adopting the new standard was totally unexpected to us, and, in fact, it was nearly two months after its adoption before we ascertained definitely that it corresponded sufficiently to our product to take away the exclusive use of our most valuable feature.

Notwithstanding this blow to our own interests, and realizing broadly that the welfare of the industry, as a whole, infinitely exceeded that of any individual manufacturer, we at once communicated with the officers of your society and later with several of the prominent manufacturers of portable projectors, expressing our willingness to lend our co-operation in every way possible to those interested in the adoption of the new standard.

We herewith publicly offer to and through your Society of Motion Picture Engineers, all the facilities of our organization for the use of any other manufacturer of portable projectors.

Our technical department will furnish any dimensions or data as to the sizes of sprockets, film gates, aperture masks, etc., which our own rather extensive experience has enabled us to collect. Our Manufacturing Department will furnish to any other manufacturere any parts which may be of assistance to him in the more speedy adoption of the new standard than would be otherwise possible if each manufacturer were necessarily compelled to make such parts for himself.

We will perforate Eastman narrow-width, slow-burning stock with the new standard perforation for any film manufacturer that desires it.

Finally our laboratory and those of our agencies will make reproductions from standard negatives or positives to the new narrow standard for any users of the new standard portable projectors.

Royal Theatre Operators,
Kansas City, Mo.

Attention Brothers Operators of the Royal Theatre:

Your answer to my letter concerning the N. A. M. L. was read with much dissatisfaction.

The title, An Entire Circuit Works for Better Projection, is absolutely correct, and its meaning is of full value if understood correctly.

True enough, it doesn't cost anything to join the N. A. M. L. Then as I understand, if there was a charge against same you wouldn't even consider it, eh! In my estimation, you owe the N. A. M. L. an apology. Surely the film exchanges are not narrow minded, that they would expect to depend entirely upon the operator just because he is a member of the N. A. M. L. I think the majority of the exchanges are inspecting their films and keeping them in very good condition, meaning film exchanges that employ competent film inspectors, but they also need co-operation from all operators, and the N. A. M. L. members are giving their best attention. That is why I took the liberty to ask all my fellow operators and urge them to become members of the N. A. M. L. in order to have a 100 per cent membership, and this applies to all motion picture operators, large or small town operators.

Now about running the show and inspecting films: we inspect our films before showing and before they are shipped out. We are no speed kings whatever, but we believe in better projection. (Surely you fellows are not of those who say: "Let the other fellow do it.") Now, my brother operators of the Royal theatre, I will ask you to please read my letter concerning the N. A. M. L. again, and then ask yourselves if you have done justice to you and the N. A. M. L. Now, brother operators, let us all co-operate together and join the N. A. M. L.

Trusting you will understand, I remain,
Yours truly,

More Trouble With Exchange

Motion Picture News,
Projection Department,
New York.

Dear Sir:—As I have been reading the Motion Picture News for over a year, I find it one of the best NEWS out in every respect, especially for the Motion Picture Operators, if he will only take the little spare time he spends in pool rooms or some other place of amusement and read over the hints in regards to Projectionists. I have had my part of trouble in operation, which every operator has.

As I have just finished reading the NEWS of June 14th and see where Mr. Smith of Local No. 279 would like to hear a few suggestions. In regard to Bro. Smith's letter in the NEWS of May 24th, first I will tell you of the kind of trouble I have been having and the steps I have taken to get better service.

I have received pictures that were pinned together, stuck together with gum paper, crimped together by bending both ends and forming a hook like so as to hold together. I have received a great number stuck together without scraping the ends at all and of course, we all know a film put together without scraping will soon come apart and besides is dangerous to run. I have received an unlimited amount of pictures not even spliced together at all and also three or four feet of film where the sprocket teeth had torn one side of the film entirely out.

I received a print of Cleopatra, May 24th, and found about 50 misframes in it and a great number of torn sprocket holes. I did the best I could on it and sent it to the Grand Theatre, Palatka, Fla., without a single misframe. It went out in good condition under the circumstances.

I sent the operator at Palatka, a paper bag full of bad patches that come out of the print. June 7th I received "Riders of the Purple Sage" from the Fox Exchange. This print was in such bad condition we were compelled to close our house for the day. I did not have time to inspect it and beside the man at the exchange said it would arrive in good condition. That film was almost impossible to run with one operator. I did not have time to inspect it because I had to go start another show. I was called around specially to run that picture.

I have written the exchange thousands of times and I just as soon expect an answer from the Kaiser as the exchange. I don't think some exchanges care about anything except money. The cheaper they can run the exchange the better they like it. We have one white show in our town and one colored. The colored show wanted to run our picture the following day, the machine is the only one, an old type Edison that my brother operated ten years ago at a white show. No new parts at all have been installed in the machine, the sprockets, all three of them are worn completely out. They have such a hook on the teeth of them that they would serve any fisherman as a fish hook. The exchange did not care about that, all they were looking for was the few dimes they could get out of him. I agree with the operator of the Royal Theatre at Kansas City, Mo., in every way except one thing, that was, he said the N. A. M. L. was all right as far as he knew because it did not cost anything to join. I don't think money should be considered side of good projection.

I don't think any operator should go fix the other man's house because it leaks rain. He should do all in his power to repair the damage he does himself and send it out in as good condition as possible. We pay the exchange for the service of the picture and they must expect it to wear out some time, that is or should be considered and the price for the rent of the film is being paid for so they can pay out for help to keep same in good condition. I don't think the exchange will ever get any better. The only thing I see is for each state to make it a violation to send out any film that is liable to cause fire and make it a law that no man shall operate until he is capable of knowing how, because he has the public's life in his hands. Then you will see good projection and no more punch holes, and I don't expect it before.

Well you ask me for my ideas and I have given them to you. If you would like to hear more I can give it to you. Let me hear what you think about what I have said.

Answer:

Instead of sending your complaints to the Exchange hereafter try the other way of writing direct to the head office wherever it may happen to be. A good many times the Exchanges evidently feel that because they are miles away from the head office they are safe in carrying on their cheap practices. During the last few weeks we have had occasion to confer with several film companies on this very matter and without exception we have found them to be unaware that their exchanges were sending out films in poor condition. Whether anything will come from these personal conferences remains to be seen but surely if the rank and file of projectionists over the country do likewise and confer by letter there is bound to come a time when the managers to clear themselves must do some "house-cleaning" in the exchanges.

Unfortunately the Fox Exchanges in certain sections of the country are deeply guilty of the practice of sending out film in unusable condition. A letter recently received from the Fox New York office expresses thanks for calling the matter to their attention and promises to institute a thorough investigation.

We can't agree with you that the exchange will never get any better. The present trouble with them became so deep-seated due to the rapid growth of the industry during which time theatres were glad to get film in any condition, that their recovery will be slow. But we believe you will see a change for the better during the coming months.

New Peerless Standard Projector

FOLLOWING close on the heels of the Premier Pathescope comes this new portable projector. Practically the only changes from the first named machine were those made necessary to adapt it to take ordinary standard film obtainable everywhere.

One feature of the New Peerless is the hinged magazine which takes the place of the usual hinged cover. These enclosed magazines, however, are not furnished as part of the regular equipment but are supplied when requested. The makers figure that with the low wattage (30-35) incandescent bulb there is no danger to be feared from the light source and that enclosed magazines are therefore superfluous. The hinged magazine as the illustration shows makes "threading up" an extremely simple operation.

The back of the magazine and its supporting arm are a single aluminum casting while the enclosing magazine in one piece is spun from sheet aluminum.

Another feature and an excellent protective device as well is the simultaneous starting of motor and lamp. With this arrangement it is impossible for a careless projectionist to stop his motor and have light burning. It is possible, however, with intention, to disconnect the motor and allow the lamp to burn. The work required to carry this out would impress on the projectionist's mind the fact that his light was burning, so that safety is not threatened through this cut-out feature.

The Peerless uses the Pathe eccentric start intermittent movement furnishing 5 to 1 ratio.

A shutter having 3 equal blades and passing 62½ per cent. of light is used. The projected picture is without flicker. The projector is portable in every sense of the word, since with reel-arms folded and wiring attached the outside dimensions are but 13 in. x 8 in. x 13 in. Its weight is 23 pounds.

In order that every purchaser or user of any Standard Projector may understand the hazardous nature of the celluloid film, either in storage or use, the name plate of the Peerless Standard Projector bears the following:

CAUTION!

Any Projector using inflammable celluloid films is subject to State, Municipal and Insurance restrictions, provided to reduce fire hazard.

Through this small card, the manufacturers are assured that the projectors will not be bought with the thought that they may be used with complete safety in home or office without the protection of a fireproof booth. This action on their part is to be commended.

Mexico as an Ideal Spot for "Locations"

RAMON MARTY of Monterray, Mexico, is a patriotic enthusiast. During the last few months we have had considerable correspondence with him and at each writing he managed to add a paragraph expressing his absolute belief in the future of Mexico as the producer's paradise. Finally we asked him to elaborate on his statements and explain why his country presented so many unusual opportunities in this line of endeavor.

At the same time we requested him to give us a short resumé of the feeling toward European and American-made films by the motion picture fans of Mexico. His letter given below is a frank criticism of films in the past and those of the present day.

Technical Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York.

DEAR SIR:

Complying with wishes expressed in your favor of the 19th ult., I will give you in a few words an idea of the feeling toward European and American films in Mexico, and concerning the other points to which you refer.

We have seen here on the screen, French, Italian, Danish and American films. The first three classes have always merited the applause of the public on account of their well staged dramas and comedies, the fine and careful direction, and the discreet interpretation of their artists; on account of the propriety of the "mise en scene" and the beauty of photography. In these three first marks, we have tasted the augments, which are true representations of real life, with all its live dramatic or comic color, and with such a wealth of details that the most exacting public has come out surprised and convinced.

In American films we have appreciated, in the last four years, a grand, admirable change, both in their photograph and in the arguments, direction and in their artists.

In the first production we saw many bad things, most detestable photography, impossible arguments, a detestable direction, an insufferable lack of artistic knowledge, and artists who were merely grotesque figures in truth. At present, there is such a change noticeable that these films are as good as the best from Europe; we detect in their development a great care, much study and an exquisite direction; their "mise en scene" is admirable, and the artists embody the characters with a surprising naturalness.

There is no doubt that the United States is to be, in the very near future, at the head of all producing countries, both on account of its splendid productions and for the fact that their films bear the stamp of "Art," of an unblamable representation.

I must make an observation of great importance. That is about the notable lack of stories, of really good stories. This lack is such, that, if producers do not remedy it soon by means of concourses or any other at hand, in order to lay hand on fine stories, on arguments of a new character there will be soon a complete failure.

Now as regards production in this country, I must say that several films have been made, and if defects are seen in some, on the other hand there are those in which the good that can be made here may be appreciated, if it is taken into account that these films were the first ones made. What we ought to have here is technical directors, and enterprises that will not hesitate in spending money. There is in this country a vast field of action entirely unknown to the greater part of the world. The country is filled with surprising landscapes, and in it may be found all climates and the plants of the world, and here films may be produced which, on account of their purely Mexican arguments, must be a full success.

The Mexican is an artist by temperament, and it is easy to direct him. The day is not far off when producers of other countries, knowing the need of pleasing the public which is becoming more exacting every day, shall be obliged to make their films in new places, with new arguments and suggestive scenes, and then, Mexico will be one of the most solicited countries, for as I have said, there is an immense field of action here, which is full of novelties. A country, where every location is a beautiful and natural scenario where every character is a new artist, and from reality where there may be reproduced picturesque scenes filled with a lively natural color, far above those in which artists may be seen, who in order to embody new character must make free use of disguises and artificialities.

most of the books would be well "over their heads." On a subject with the range that OPTICS possesses it is a very simple matter when attempting to explain an intricate point to pass from the elementary to the advanced. But we will try to see that these lapses are infrequent, and furthermore, we would be glad to have any of our readers call our attention to any point which needs further explanation.

No doubt there is a considerable percentage of projectionists who will find such a column of no value whatsoever, because they have advanced in knowledge beyond the point we shall attempt to cover. But this class of men has risen to the point where their library should contain all the latest and best books on optics. The authors of these books are known far and wide as authorities on their subjects. They have built up their conclusions from a thorough study of the fundamental theories, and while theories may be descried and passed by with a mere flicker of the eye, any results obtained without at least a just consideration of theories are wholly unsound and are easily refuted.

So that we, in the conduct of this page, will not promise any world-astounding discoveries. We shall simply take what has been given us by those who know and make an honest endeavor to translate it into the language of the man who is running a "twice-a-week show" in some isolated sage brush town.

Although, rightfully, the optical system commences with the light source, be it carbon arc or incandescent lamp, this elementary treatise will commence with the condenser, leaving the light source until the electrical system is treated. It is to be assumed, then, that the arc has been adjusted so that a satisfactory cone of light is thrown toward the screen. From that point on it is up to the condenser to continue with the transmission of the rays.

THE CONDENSER:

What is the function of the Condenser?

The condenser is used for the sole purpose of gathering the rays of light from the source and bending them back to be taken care of by the remainder of the optical system.

What does the Condenser consist of?

There are two condenser combinations in general use. The one used by the greatest percentage of projectionists consists of two plant-convex lenses placed together with convex sides facing each other. The other type of condenser is the meniscus bi-convex used by many who have difficulty in getting their arc near enough to the first lens of a plano-convex combination.

The first element of the condenser collects the rays of light forming the cone of light coming from the source and bend them into nearly parallel rays. These nearly-parallel rays strike the second element which bends them still more until the original diverging cone has been converted into a converging cone.

Why are the elements placed with curved surfaces together?

Because with that arrangement the rays are brought more nearly to a single focus. In optical language there is less spherical aberration.

How near together should Condenser lenses be placed?

To get the best results they should be placed as near together as possible without touching.

What are the points of a good Condenser lens?

They should be well matched, not too thick at the edges, with no flaws in the glass and with a minimum of color.

What does the presence of considerable color in the glass signify?

Either poor glass or age. Some of the best condensers on the market will take on a decided tint after continuous use, due probably to a chemical change in the glass brought about by the intense heat of the light rays.

Should Condensers be thrown away as soon as they show signs of color?

Not necessarily. But the trouble lies in knowing just when the color in the glass has grown to a point where it is acting as a damper on your illumination. Within the past few months there has come on the market a condenser which is guaranteed by its manufacturer to be free from all coloring without regard to the length of time it is used.

Why are Condenser lenses cheaper than objective lenses?

Because they are "uncorrected." Which means that very little care is given to the making of the glass from which they are formed as compared to the making of objective lenses.

Why can uncorrected lenses be used?

Because it is not necessary that the condenser throw a perfect image of the source of light upon the film. If it places an imperfect "spot" on the aperture gate the conditions are fulfilled. The item of breakage must also be considered.

What are the usual causes of cracked Condensers?

Probably the greatest number of condensers are cracked by draughts of air, improper ventilation, or condenser mounts that are too tight. An electric fan in the room during the summer months presents a good condenser breaker unless the projectionist is careful when the lamp house door is opened. It is usually the lens next to the arc that breaks because that one is by far the hottest. Patented mounts have done more to reduce breakage than any other one thing.

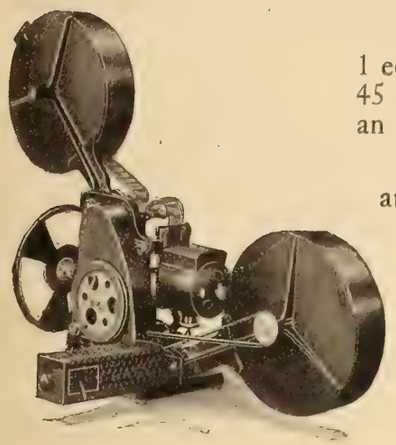
PEERLESS STANDARD PROJECTOR

Ideal for Editing and Examining Film in Theatres, Studios and Laboratories



The PEERLESS STANDARD PROJECTOR has the wonderful 5 to 1 eccentric star intermittent movement and a balanced shutter of three equal 45 degree blades that passes 62½% of the light from the objective and gives an absolutely flickerless picture at less than normal speed.

Particularly adapted to film inspection and editing, as it can be operated at any speed or stopped for cutting and patching.

Takes one-thousand feet standard reels. Uses 2¾ amperes with motor drive, or less with crank. Projects pictures up to 10 feet wide at any distance up to 75 feet.

In order that every purchaser or user of ANY STANDARD PROJECTOR may understand the hazardous nature of the celluloid film, either in storage or use, the name-plate of the Peerless Standard Projector bears the following:

"CAUTION"
Any Projector using inflammable celluloid films is subject to State, Municipal and Insurance restrictions provided to reduce fire hazard.

The Story of the Animated Pictorial News
Its Early History and Later Development
Showing by Actual Instances Some of the Fool-Hardy Stunts of the Intrepid Cameramen

By Earl W. Rossman

At the request of Motion Picture News, Mr. Earl W. Rossman, has written a number of articles built around the Animated News reporter. The first of these articles appears in this issue and others will appear from week to week until the subject had been treated from every point of view.

Mr. Rossman was one of the first if not the first Pictorial News Cameraman in this country and since his first attempt had experienced most of the thrills, trials and tribulations that ever beset a screen reporter.

At the present time, Mr. Rossman is connected with Prizma, Inc., in the capacity of Projection Engineer.

Several years ago, back in 1911 or 1912—if I remember rightly—J. A. Berst, then of Pathe Freres, paid me a visit. Although I have never met Mr. Berst since I can still recall his remarkable personality; and some of his predictions with reference to the motion picture news reels are still fresh in my memory.

We discussed the first attempt in this country of the Pathe Weekly—the first news reel of current events—and it was his desire to get as many opinions from representative motion picture men as possible with reference to the future of news pictures in motion. The question later came up in various parts of the country, and it was said that the news reel was impossible because it was of value only during the first few days of its release, after which it would become dead matter or junk. This opinion seemed to prevail even among exchange men, some of whom even refused to accept the film for distribution so as to prevent encountering loss in film rentals when some other film could net them financial returns without worrying. The answer to this came from live wire exhibitors, who would feature a certain incident contained in the contents of the Weekly. One progressive showman in Brooklyn even went so far as to advertise the coming of the Pathe Weekly in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and have a reporter come down and cover his show. This exhibitor was way ahead of his time because in those days newspapers looked upon the movies with scorn. But he put it over—and so did many others afterward. The opinion of Mr. Berst then went so far as to predict the Animated Pictorial Daily News. Today we have it. What first-class movie theatre in the country is without its news reel today? Few, very few.

This brings up the question: What is the Animated news? What means are employed to make up the reel? Surely there must be several ends in the final assembly. And, finally, what are the experiences of the animated news photographer?

The motion picture news photographer is a courageous, resourceful, wide-awake American of adventurous spirit, with an instinct for news and a thorough knowledge of the motion picture needs. The motion picture photographer is everywhere, he covers the globe, he sometimes even seems to anticipate events. He has photographed the war; he is in the air, on the sea, and even under the sea. Because of the hurried nature of his work the movie news photographer meets with many experiences, some are pleasant, some are not; some are dangerous, some are foolhardy. I will relate a few of the experiences of the man behind the camera in his quest for items of interest.

A young operator of my acquaintance was assigned one day with two others to photograph a wreck. It was a staged affair. The film was to be used for the Weekly and, in addition, as a part of an educational reel for the prevention of accidents to railroad employes. The scene was near New York, and a special siding was used for the affair, which was to be a rear end collision by a heavy freight with a passenger train. The cameramen were stationed at various places along the line. The signal for the freight to move forward was given, but when the actual collision took place did no more damage than give the passenger coaches a bump, but no crash. So, it was decided to get in close as there was no apparent danger. My friend, taking a station about thirty feet away from where the accident was to occur, the freight came along this time at a terrific speed. The engineer and fireman having pulled the throttle wide before jumping. And then—crash. The passenger train was telescoped almost beyond recognition, the freight train having plowed through three cars. Did the cameramen pick up their outfits and run? Not they. They calmly cranked their machines as though it were part of their day's work. If the oft repeated phrase, "A picture is worth a thousand words," as applied to the still photograph is true, then the animated photograph is worth a volume.

Words beggar description of a man's first aeroplane flight in which the plane does a few stunts in the air. Thousands have witnessed the movies recently released as news reels of the flight of an intrepid aviator and his daring cameraman giving you the benefit of all the thrills of the hair-raising stunts just as though you were in the plane, yet without the danger. An aeroplane flight is something that cannot be really described by mere words. I fully remember my first aeroplane trip and how it came about. A representative of a leading New York newspaper wanted some motion pictures of an aeroplane in flight, his main object being to photograph another plane from the plane we were to be in. This is the telephone communication I received as near as I can recall:

"Want you to go to —— city to photograph a hydroaeroplane. The plane is equipped with two Hall-Scott engines of one hundred and fifty horsepower each. They have been having trouble with the machine lately or you would have received word from me before, but it is all right now. If one engine goes dead the other will carry you. Pray for good weather. Will meet you at 7 a.m.

Very encouraging! And I had never traveled in an aeroplane before.

The next morning I saw the plane. I admit I felt a little nervous, but the main thing that worried me was how soon could I get back to New York with the pictures.

The next day the hydroplane fell, killing the pilot. This may lead one to believe that cameramen lead charmed lives, and the following incident may bear me out.

While traveling through China during the recent revolution in quest of new items of interest a friend of mine decided to get some views of Peking during the uprising from the top of the wall of China. Thinking the camera a machine gun trained on them the natives almost forgot the revolution in their endeavor to put the cameraman and his machine out of business. In this they did not succeed, as was attested by the remarkable views of the battle which were shown in the news reels some time later. It sometimes seems uncanny how the cameraman arrives just in the nick of time. You read about an event in the newspapers and then see the same thing in the movies the same evening.

The successful animated pictorial news photographer's life is just full of adventure. He is prepared to go anywhere, or do anything at a moment's notice. He is full of ingenious ideas—nothing stops him. It is men of this caliber—of which there are many in America—who have helped make the topical film the success and the program necessity it has grown to be. Today, besides the Pathe Weekly, there are at least half a dozen motion picture concerns who specialize in motion picture news reels. There are many theatres in the larger cities which subscribe to four or five news reels, taking the most timely and interesting views of each in making up their topical digest.

An idea of the extent of the distribution of the news reel today is gained by the astonishing fact that within as short a time as one week fully three million people in the United States have seen on the screen the latest important news event.

An Air Cleaner Patented

I. James San, Vice-President of the Craftsman Laboratories has applied for a patent on an air cleaning and purifying device which has been in use for over a year at the Craftsman building.

The system consists essentially of a fine mesh screen, a set of baffle plates and a means for heating the cleansed air to the desired temperature.

The metallic screen of 120 inches is stretched across the air intake on a removable frame sliding in a groove.

After passing the screen which catches all the large particles of dust, dirt and soot, the air strikes the first of a series of sheet iron baffle plates set in herring-bone fashion. A sticky substance catches and holds the fine dust as the air is buffeted about from one set of plates to the other.

An examination of the first few sets of the baffle plates after a few weeks use shows the presence of a surprisingly large amount of fine, black dust. Of course, the greatest percentage is caught on the first and second sets, the last sets being clean after many weeks run. This fact emphasizes the success of the cleaner.

Mr. San says of his patent: "A 100 per cent removal of foreign matter is considered as a practical impossibility but I believe my patent will be more efficient in removing dust than any expensive and elaborate air washing systems."

Where air contains a high percentage of finely divided particles, almost as fine as smoke, water has not been satisfactory. But the worst curse of the laboratory is air that contains soft coal dust because the oily specks cannot be caught by a water curtain. Mr. San's patent, it is believed, is equally efficient in straining out soot and common dust.

The Craftsman Laboratories ascribe the success of their films during the past year to the use of this air filter and cleaner.

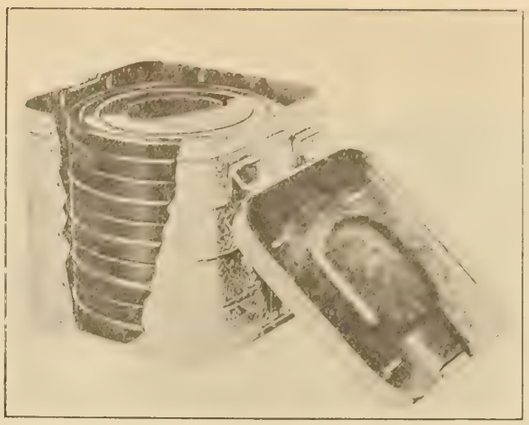
Letter from Sioux City

JOHN ROSECRANS, of Sioux City, Iowa, writes:

"We have a DeLuxe Model Motiograph machine used about four months. We use a number 1, Manhattan-Cundalach lens of 5 inches front and 5 inches back E. F. combination, with an 8½ inch and a 6½ inch condensers, with the 6½ inch next to the arc. The condensers are 21 inches from aperture plate. We project the picture 86 feet and upon a screen 12 x 14 feet and get a good clear picture when running moderately fast. We use D. C. current, 110 volts through a rheostat with about 40 amps. to the arc.

"Now, when running rather slowly, with our DeLuxe Motiograph (say about 40 per) the picture is not steady and appears to quiver up and down, especially the titles and sub-titles. When running still slower (say about 35 per) the picture is "blurry" and small objects seem to jump up and down enough to appear as nearly two objects. But when running from 50 to 90 per the picture is perfectly clear, and the titles are steady. The lenses are tight in the tube, and the tube fits snugly in the jacket. The set screws in the cam shaft disc, the balance wheel and fly wheel are all tight. The pins in the intermittent sprocket are tight. The shutter shaft is not sprung. There is no noticeable vibration of the machine. There is no more tension than positively necessary. The machine rests level on a concrete floor. We are using the Motiograph shutter (aluminum 3-blades) furnished by the factory, but the metal hoop, which connected the blades together, became bent and was removed. The intermittent sprocket is not undercut and the cam is not too tight against the Geneva Star nor is there any too much play.

"There are times when we have to run very slow, in stretching out a time schedule between vaudeville acts, and as the projective results are poor when running slow with out motiograph, I would like to learn how to meet the trouble, and how to overcome it."



Film Shipping Cases

WORKING on the theory that the perfect shipping case had not as yet been devised a concern in the Middle West has gone into the manufacture of a case that will be an advance over others.

The illustrations show the principal features of the case including its ribbed construction and countersunk top. Metal 25 per cent. heavier than is called for legally gives the case an advantage in durability. It has been approved by the I. C. C.

The name of the manufacturers will be given on application to this office.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — MUSIC — Musical Equipment

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"That Naughty Waltz," by Sol P. Levy. A beautiful Waltz with a captivating melody. One of its many charms is the simplicity of the melody. Anyone could whistle it after hearing it a few times. In preparation for full orchestra, song, and instrumental. (Belwin Inc.)

2—"Thipping Thider Thru a Thtraw," a riproaring comedy lisping song and natural successor to "Oh, Helen." It ties the tongue, but loosens the laugh. This hit is dedicated to our mutual "movie" favorite Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle. (J. S. Stern & Co.)

3—"You Didn't Want Me When You Had Me (So Why Do You Want Me Now)." Novelty ballad, with a story full of heart interest. (Jos. W. Stern & Co.)

4—"Himalya," a song of the far East, by the well known writers, S. R. Henry and Frank H. Warren. It's full of pep. (J. W. Stern & Co.)

5—"Blues (My Naughty Sweetie Gives To Me)" Broadway's leading song hit! This is played and featured by more orchestras than any other popular success. (J. W. Stern & Co.)

6—"Kentucky Dream," by S. R. Henry, D. Onivas, F. H. Warren, composers of the famous "Indianola." A beautiful waltz ballad. (J. W. Stern.)

7—"The White Heather." A captivating ballad with a lilting Scottish melody written around the story of the photo drama released by Famous Players-Lasky Corp. (McKinley.)

Music Designates Character of the Human Race

MUSIC is creating new standards of life. The type of music employed creates an environment which directly or indirectly reacts its advantages or its disadvantages upon our rising generation. "Show me your company, and I will tell you who you are." The word "Company" converted into music will create the same results. "Let me hear you sing or play and I will tell you who you are." In my travels throughout the world, I have always found music to be the distinct factor designating the character of every human race. The far East with its weird and haunting music, is revealing a book of strong emotions, unrivaled in any part of the world. It tells us a story of vehement life, finding its climax in unnatural dances expressing vulgarity.

The music of the Spaniard fully designates his character; its construction is a continuous flow of fiery passion or languorous emotions. It subjugates those who hear it, even such men as the cool Northerner cannot resist such powers as "The Tango," "The Tarantelle," "The Bolero," "The Fandango." For instance, the music of the aboriginal, such as the inhabitants of the South Sea Islands, or the inhabitants of the darkest part of Africa, or our primitive American Indian. Their music undoubtedly reveals the unrelenting characteristics of their race. None of the above races could for instance, begin hostilities without first being inspired by their savage war dances and songs.

How about the power of our National hymns? They have turned cowards into heroes; they have made men make supreme sacrifices of the greatest things in life. National hymns have the power of translating the silent thoughts of waving flags, and last but not least they make millions cry "Laugh! Live! and Die! MUSIC IS THE MASTER."

Think of the "Marseillaise," our glorious "Star Spangled Banner," our "Dixie," our "Swanee River," and others too numerous to mention, all of them have played important parts in the annuls of history and habits of nations.

Could you imagine the wonderful feelings created in the heart of our good Americans traveling throughout the world, when they hear "Silver Threads Among the Gold," or any other good American home song. It divides the listener into two parts; his body is in foreign lands and his heart is back home. "AGAIN MUSIC IS THE MASTER."

The Motion Picture theatre of today is the mecca of the public, the atmosphere created in the theatre is the environment, surrounding our people, and is taken home by these great masses who are frequently patronizing your theatres.

It is therefore up to you Mr. Exhibitor, to guard our children. Remember, that vulgar and suggestive music is unpardonable. It creates an atmosphere just as dangerous as the more and more disappearing vulgar dance halls.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize one more fact—there are picture censors, but no music censors and you are the "MASTER OF THE MUSIC" in this case.—Music Editor.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

Frames, Easels, Rails, Grilles, Signs, Choppers, Kick Plates, Door Bars

A FEW REASONS why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

CHEERFUL CHATS
Concerning Things in General Accessories in Particular

There are possibly "57 varieties" of film cement on the market—some are good, some are bad and a vast portion is worthless. But when one particular brand has successfully resisted the most trying tests for almost ten years it is mighty good evidence of its superiority and reliability. Manufactured under the most exacting conditions in a big and modern factory from the purest of chemicals enables exhibitors and exchanges to assure themselves of genuine satisfaction through the continued use of

"After the Bawl"

(Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Comedy in Two Reels—Capitol)

THERE is no question about it, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven are figures to be reckoned with in screen comedy circles judging from the auspicious start they have made in "After the Bawl," a Capitol concoction. Billy Parsons by signing these young musical comedy stars to a contract has shown as good judgment as he has in selecting material for his own rotund personality.

The stars are fortified in their subject by a bouncing baby—or two, to be exact. And babies like George M. Cohan's well known flag have never been known to fail in the Popularity Stakes. It seems that Carter and Flora Parker De Haven haven't been married over a year. While they are happy in a way, still they have their little arguments. Now Carter is strictly a home husband, wants peace, quietude, a baby 'n' everything. Flora, on the other hand, is all wrapped up in bridge. Babies? Pooh!

But Carter adopts one and has a lot of fun with it until his happiness is turned to sorrow when it is claimed by the orphanage. Flora, now completely chagrined over the loss, hastens to adopt another, and Carter, too, loses no time in finding a healthy substitute. He takes the infant home and breaks all the bric-a-brac in amusing the fretful mite. And soon Flora bobs up with her specimen. And bridge is forgotten. All is love. And babies.

A fast, breezy comedy punctured with a brace of humorous bits. It is refined comedy, too, and spontaneously developed. The action is never forced, and it movese from its central idea with plenty of dash and vigor.—Laurence Reid.

"Young America"

(A Series of Two-Reel Dramas by Bloxbe Film Corp.)

THE first two subjects of the twelve two-reel dramas announced was seen by the reviewer. This series has each subject complete in itself and based on some incident of the late war, with the original person or group in the cast.

This idea makes a sort of home talent show of each picture and that is just the impression one gets when seeing them. The scenario and direction of the first two pictures in the series is by Philip Van Loan.

The first subject shows the romance and heroic activities of Sergeant Charles M. Scala, credited with being the first American prisoner to escape from a German prison. The escape is re-enacted and the story brings him back home to mother and sweetheart after receiving the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre with a palm for killing a German officer and capturing six German soldiers.

Barney Tovin and Howard Cooper are the "stars" of the second picture. They were formerly partners in a clothing store and the love interest injected make them friendly rivals in romance. One volunteers and the other is drafted. One becomes a Corporal and the other a Sergeant and the story brings them together in France, where they win the Croix de Guerre. The heroism that wins this prize is shown when one re-enacts his feat of swimming a river to establish the telegraph wire communication, and the other rescues him from a shell hole.

They are fairly well produced, although the photography is bad in many spots, and their main claim for attention is the fact that the original heroes are used in the heroic incidents which are said to have received wide publicity in the daily newspapers.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Lost Battalion"

(MacManus Corporation—Seven Reels)

A HISTORICAL document based upon one of the big events of the late war and re-enacted by many of the original heroes. Even apart from this, the picture would pass muster anywhere as a good screen production, as the director has managed in a running story to touch upon the home life and also romantic incidents that introduce the love element, as well as the many battle scenes in the Argonne Forest, where this doughty battalion was besieged by the Germans for nearly a week and refused to surrender.

The melting pot brought these boys together from all classes, nationalities and creeds and in the battalion is shown the burglar, the wealthy boy, the poor boy, the Irish, the Jews, etc., all fighting shoulder to shoulder. The human interest is augmented greatly by the flashbacks from the battlefield to the homes of these boys in the different walks of life.

Scene from Vitagraph's "Perils of Thunder Mountain," starring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway

With the exception of a few spots the photography is well up to standard, and the musical score made especially for the production is effectively inspiring.

Despite the likelihood that this will be branded as a war picture, the fact that it has been faithfully re-enacted by the original heroes and is based on such a famous event, should make it a strong puller at the box-office, and it is a good enough picture to please all who see it.—Tom Hamlin.

"Chasing Rain-Beaux"

(Billy Parsons' Comedy in Two Reels—National)

BILLY PARSONS' latest comedy, "Chasing Rain-Beaux" is a little more complicated in plot and characterization than his previous essays. Yet matrimony can have its complications—complications so deep that one can make neither head nor tail of them. But as involved as the picture is one can make it out if one uses his wits. It would be easy to muddle the threads when mistaken identity is the piece de resistance, but, happily, Director Harry Pollard and the players always make their work distinguishable.

There are two distinct plots to the piece which are gradually united to form a satisfactory climax. And the spirit of give and take is excellently caught by the star and his group of foils. Among them is Mary McIvor, who essays a dual role as twin sisters. Naturally they cause all the trouble.

As the wife of Bill she pouts and pouts and pouts thinking he is untrue to her. And he goes on a rampage when he sees her twin sister whom he mistakes for his wife. The girl is cuddled up close to a regular cave-man type. Well before the tangle is straightened out process servers, half-way houses, broken down motor cars, driving rainstorms, and what not have their innings.

Be it said that "Chasing Rain-Beaux" is lively all the way and properly interpreted by the principals. The action is considerably riotous at times, so involved are the characters. But it never borders on the slapstick.—Laurence Reid.

"War Spruce"

(Educational Films)

THIS educational film takes the audience through the great spruce forests where the first selecting and cutting is done to the ultimate when the valuable spruce sails away in the air as an essential part of a government airplane. It is very entertaining and most excellent from a scenic angle. The machinery performs interesting feats and the photography is artistic.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 13, 1919.

"THE WILDERNESS TRAIL"

(FOX)

Tom Mix Scores in Story of Frozen North

IT is good to see Tom Mix out of his chaps and sombrero and bedecked for a change in the outfit of a Hudson Bay trapper. The only thing amiss so far as the star is concerned is the fact that he is now so well supplied with stunts as heretofore. In "The Wilderness Trail" he emerges from his familiar role of performing hazardous feats in order to take up the story's burden.

It presents as vividly as ever the primitive account of the Hudson Bay colonists. The factor is the same stern, relentless ruler and the hero is painted in tremendous conflict with him. And the latter has to fight his way through a horde of enemies before he marries the Factor's daughter. A few inconsistencies creep out which are almost negligible when the fine points of the picture are appreciated.

There is an unlimited quota of action unfolded and every scene is charged with suspense. And embellishing it all is a picturesque background of northern scenery with the elements of nature in ceaseless conflict. Director Le Saint has not missed a single opportunity to give a colorful star a colorful picture. Every detail of plot, characterization, and setting is in its proper place.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, the popular Fox star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay, "The Wilderness Trail." This is an adaptation of Frank Williams' story of the same name and is said to present the star with unusual opportunities for the expression of his art. Formerly identified with cowboy parts he branches out as a Hudson Bay trapper with remarkable versatility.

As Donald Mactavish he has a friend and enemy in the home of the factor, Angus Fitzpatrick. The latter is his enemy because Donald's father is scheduled to succeed him as commissioner, while he has a dear friend in Jeanne Fitzpatrick. Her father accuses him of being the leader of the free-traders and it is his mission to refute the accusation. The real head of the outlaws is Sergius, a half-breed Indian, and his mother connives to kidnap Jeanne and marry her to her son, thus eliminating his danger of arrest. But Donald comes to the rescue and takes her to her father despite the fact that the latter has threatened to hang him.

How he squares himself, how he takes the legitimate traders and gives battle to the outlaws, how he fights a thrilling battle with Sergius, and how he is vindicated are events that are dramatically and convincingly told in this picture of the snow country. "The Wilderness Trail" carries picturesque scenery. Indeed, the vast reaches of snow cover up the ugliness except the evil of men's hearts.

The picture is rich in action and suspense, the thrills and exciting events running about one a minute. Sixty minutes of absorbing melodrama. Mr. Mix receives capable support from a well balanced cast. The picture was scenarioized by Charles Kenyon and was produced under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint.

PROGRAM READER

Jeanne Fitzpatrick loved Donald Mactavish despite the fact that he was her father's deadliest enemy. Angus Fitzpatrick was the factor of the Hudson Bay colony and he was extremely jealous of Mactavish's father who was to succeed him. Therefore he lost no time in accusing the young man of being a free-trader and that he would hang him if he did not square himself. Donald, fearless and determined, set out to round up the outlaws single-handed. In the meantime Jeanne was lured to a deserted cabin by an Indian woman because the latter's son was desirous of marrying her. And being the real leader of the free-traders he knew if the girl was his wife he would escape punishment.

How Donald was captured in his efforts to round up the criminals, how he made his escape in a thrilling scene, how he rescued the girl of his heart and vindicated himself after a terrific battle with his enemies is vividly depicted in one of the most unusual pictures that manager ——— has ever booked. The drama is enacted in the snow country where dwell the Hudson Bay colonists. The popular Tom Mix is the star. Don't miss "The Wilderness Trail" when it comes to the ——— theatre next week.

Tom Mix, William Fox star in "The Wilderness Trail"

SUGGESTIONS

Exhibitors who are in the habit of playing the Tom Mix pictures will surely add to their resources in his latest picture. He has been cleaning up for you ever since he came to the screen, if one may judge from box-office reports. So don't be afraid of booking him here. Tell your patrons that the star has branched out. He is temporarily out of chaps and sombrero, but he still has his horse. Exploit him as a trapper of the Hudson Bay country—the country where snow is one vast trackless waste.

Concerning the story, acquaint your patrons that it is a thing of love and adventure—that the unbridled passions of a primitive people are enacted against a panoramic landscape of snow. Mr. Mix is very popular so play him up in all your advertising. Bring out that he is one of the most daring actors on the screen and seemingly accomplishes superhuman feats.

Then the story is adapted from Frank Williams' book of the same name. Use the author's name. Doubtless many of your patrons have read the book. Photographs of the picturesque scenery liberally displayed in your lobby will attract the passerby. You can't go wrong with Mix. He is a big asset to any exhibitor, not only for his personality but for the likeable quality of his pictures.

CATCH LINES

The Factor didn't like him despite the fact that he was engaged to his daughter. He accused the young man of being a free-trader. Was he? Come to the ——— theatre on ——— and follow his adventures. The picture is "The Wilderness Trail."

"ACE OF THE SADDLE"

(UNIVERSAL)

Harry Carey Stars Again as Cheyenne Harry

AS far as the central idea of Harry Carey's new Cheyenne Harry story is concerned, and the execution of it, one can say that it hardly compares with previous pictures in which the star has played the picturesque character. It is lamentable that the plot is so weak that it has to be bolstered up occasionally with such forced elements as child interest and broad comedy relief. Yet through it all Mr. Carey stands out as vividly as ever in the colorful aspect of his impersonation.

A group of rustlers provide the conflict, and it is Cheyenne Harry's object to see that they are successfully eliminated. Of course he has his share of danger and he gives life to the characterization through his careless indifference of death.

The picture falters because of a lack of spontaneity of action. Each scene appears to be created laboriously and each one seems to loosely connected as well. Some of them have no place in the main line of action at all. There are a few comedy bits which make happy interludes, but as a whole the picture is not wholly satisfying. Jack Ford has uncovered a sweep of western atmosphere and he has picked out some excellent subjects for types.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey, the Universal favorite, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Cheyenne Harry story, "Ace of the Saddle." The star is immense in his characterization and so popular has he made it that the majority of picture-goers demand the Cheyenne Harry stories above everything else. This time Cheyenne is up against a band of rustlers who show no discrimination in the number of cattle they steal from him. He doesn't know that the sheriff and the judge of his county are the ringleaders of the bunch. So every time he asks their aid he receives no satisfaction. Impatient, he journeys to the neighboring county to enlist the services of the sheriff. He lingers long enough to fall in love with the latter's daughter. But the sheriff there can offer him no satisfaction either unless he moves to the county. One day with a group of cowboys he drags his cabin over the county line.

In the meantime the crooked sheriff of his old county had attempted several times to frame him without results. In despair the villain organizes a band of night riders to "get" Cheyenne dead or alive. But the cowboy frustrates their plans by hurling dynamite sticks at them and eventually they are rounded up through a ruse. In tasting Harry's stock of liquors they are made harmless, for he has seen to it that the stuff is filled with knockout drops. With the unruly faction eliminated, Cheyenne settles down with Madeline to live a quiet orderly life.

The picture abounds with action and a rich assortment of humorous interludes. And it is embellished with sweeping western atmosphere. Mr. Carey is supported by such well known players as Peggy Pearce, Duke R. Lee, Jack Walters and Zoe Ray. The feature was produced under the direction of Jack Ford.

CATCH LINES

Here is Harry Carey back again in one of his Cheyenne Harry stories. There are no better "westerns" to-day. He cal'lated he'd get that ornery bunch of rustlers. Did he? See "Ace of the Saddle."

He could get no satisfaction in Yucca county against the rustlers, so he just hitched four horses to his cabin and moved himself to Pinkerton County. This is only one of the amusing scenes in "Ace of the Saddle."

He promised never to lift a gun again to please the only girl. But a time came when a crooked sheriff attempted to "get" him by loaning his own gun for the moment. You see these westerners never shoot a man unless he has a gun in his hand. So the sheriff thought the time was ripe to put Harry asleep. How was he disappointed? See "Ace of the Saddle."

PROGRAM READER

Cheyenne Harry was surrounded by enemies. Wherever he went he found rustlers ready to steal his cattle. The sheriff was the ringleader of the band, though Harry didn't know it at the time. Getting no satisfaction in his own county, he journeyed to the adjoining county where the sheriff told him that he couldn't act because the cowboy wasn't a resident. Harry lingered a while because of the sheriff's pretty daughter and when he went back to Yucca County he promptly hitched some horses to his cabin and moved over to the honest sheriff's county.

How he frustrated his enemies at every turn, how he worked with the most unconcern of his life, how he beat the night riders single handed through a clever ruse—these are a few of the thrilling chapters in this latest Cheyenne Harry story, "Ace of the Saddle," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— with Harry Carey as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

The Cheyenne Harry pictures presenting Harry Carey seem to be going well all over the country, so you are taking no risk in lining up for this one. Make out that he is the same intrepid cowboy as ever. Play up his personality for all it is worth. His admirable restraint has won him a host of friends. You might feature the story here, telling just enough of the action to excite interest. Tell them that Cheyenne is not a bad man, but a ranchman who cannot stop the rustlers from making off with his cattle.

And you might use the idea that the sheriff of his county is crooked and the sheriff of the neighboring county is honorable, but unable to help him out of his difficulty unless he moves over. Bring out in your arguments that Harry moves over all right by hitching a few horses to his cabin and driving just over the county line. Your biggest talking point, however, is Carey. Play him up as an ace of the saddle.

Don't look, for apparently Harry Carey wishes it to be only a two-some. Scene from Universal's "The Ace of the Saddle"

"THE FEAR WOMAN"

(GOLDWYN)

Pauline Frederick Appears in Psychological Study

IN this psychological study the screen has proven again that it is able to go beneath the surface and record something else than mere surface impressions. But here as in other pictures of this character the parties responsible have shown a measure of fear themselves in failing to carry out the absorbing theme of heredity. One looks in vain after the third reel for a semblance of the inherited fear which prompted the introductory chapters, and instead one finds a time-worn pattern of a woman who very nearly sacrifices her good name to permit a friend to emerge from a certain entangling alliance. She had dismissed her fiance through the fear that she might have inherited her father's taste for liquor, and promised to let him know when she had withstood the test. But the test never came for milady was always sure of herself. However she furnishes HIM with certain anxious moments through her coquettish attitude with the grape. In spite of its perigrinations the story is made interesting through the artistry of Miss Frederick's performance. She has taught every mood with appreciation of its shadings. And Milton Sills scores as successfully in his customary repressive manner. The picture carries an appeal in its artistic mounting. Expenditures have been scattered to the four winds in emphasizing its aristocratic tone.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pauline Frederick, the emotional star, will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest feature entitled, "The Fear Woman." Those who have followed Miss Frederick's other appearances know full well what type of subject to expect when her name is announced. The dramatic roles in which she has been appearing have elevated to one of the highest places in screen stardom. "The Fear Woman" is of the same type as her previous offerings, but presents a totally different plot. It was written especially for the star by Izola Forrester, one of the cleverest authors in the business, and awards the star the role of a woman haunted by fear, Helen Winthrop.

Helen's father had cautioned her to fight temptation of drink since his forefathers had all succumbed to the habit. When he died the fear was brought home to such an extent that she gave up her fiance to test herself. She wanted to see if she was capable of being the mother of Robert Craig's children. The test was successful and Helen turned her attentions to aiding a friend out of a compromising position. With nothing to worry her further she consented to become Robert's wife.

"The Fear Woman" is a dramatic picture that is delightfully balanced with a vein of delicious humor. It is mounted in exquisite taste which, of course, reflects great credit upon the director, John A. Barry. The story unfolds a number of unique situations which are deftly developed. Miss Frederick plays with her usual appreciation and Milton Sills is seen to advantage as her leading man.

SUGGESTIONS

Pauline Frederick is certainly a star that needs no especial boosting in the way of advertising. The public appreciates that she is one of the few GENUINE actresses on the screen. All box-office reports indicate that practically every one of her features have pleased. "The Fear Woman" differs somewhat from the usual dramatic picture since it presents her in a psychological study. The character that she portrays is haunted by fear—a fear that she is tainted with the curse that killed her father and all her forefathers.

You can exploit the picture on this angle. Arouse your public's curiosity as to what causes this fear. Go strong on the mystery. Ask questions of your patrons in the shape of catch lines and throw-aways what they fear the most. Every one has a pet fear. Make mention of the cast. It is a good one. Your fans will remember Milton Sills. Undoubtedly he is a favorite with the feminine portion of your audience as he is everywhere. Miss Frederick is her own best drawing card. Play up her name and refer back to the pictures in which she has previously appeared under the Goldwyn banner.

PROGRAM READER

Helen Winthrop was a victim of a certain hereditary weakness which had afflicted her father and her father's fathers for generations. Alone in the world, she was tortured by the constant fear that she would go the same road as her father. She would put herself to the test. Ah!—that would be a way out. So she dismissed as fine a fellow as ever loved a girl to work out her vexing problem. But the test was satisfactory and she knew that she wasn't tainted with her father's curse.

What was this taint? What did Helen resolve to do? How did she fight her battle? What became of Robert Craig? Did sorrow come to her? Did she prove herself a woman of character? Did she overcome her fear? These questions are answered dramatically and entertainingly in Pauline Frederick's latest picture, "The Fear Woman," which comes to the ——— in the near future—date to be announced. Watch for it.

CATCH LINES

Are you a victim of hereditary weakness? Are you moved by constant fear that you will follow the paths of your forefathers? Fear—it is a powerful emotion and moves us all at some time in our lives. It moved Pauline Frederick in "The Fear Woman."

Pauline Frederick will appear at the ——— next ——— in her newest photoplay entitled, "The Fear Woman." It is a tale of hereditary weakness. Did the heroine inherit it? This you must find out for yourself. A surprise awaits you.

"OUR BETTER SELVES"

(PATHE)

Frivolity Succeeded by Patriotism in War Story

THOUGH the war is over and its appeal to arouse the emotions is gone, nevertheless the angle presented in Fannie Ward's newest picture, "Our Better Selves," will stimulate one's fast declining interest in the late conflict.

To the best of our knowledge the idea contained here has been totally neglected in pictures until Miss Ward saw fit to gvie it expression. It presents her with the best thing she has done in a long time. No better piece of acting has she ever contributed than when she differentiates the character of the vain butterfly.

There is substance to this picture—a dramatic substance which happily keeps to its tragic denouement. The heroine and her vainglorious lover gave with their lives, but they died knowing that their consciences were clear. The outstanding feature of the picture is the manner in which the director has pointed the contrast between frivolity and patriotism.

The situations are shaded with deft touches and the humanities are ever in the foreground. A feeling of some impending tragedy constantly lurks beneath the surface and which keeps one in a high state of suspense. Genuine art has been revealed in the acting, direction, and staging. In all a fine achievement.—Length 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Loyette Merval.....Fannie Ward
Willard Standish.....Lewis J. Cody
Henry Laurens.....Chas. Hills Mailes

By Ouida Bergere.
Scenario by Ouida Bergere.
Directed by George Fitzmaurice.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Our Better Selves" is the name of the picture which will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— with Fannie Ward as the star. This is considered one of the greatest pictures in which the Pathe star has ever appeared. Written by Ouida Bergere, one of the screen's leading scenarists, it tells how the frivolous pleasure seekers gave up their vanities to serve their country during the war. Many are the pictures which have shown the conflict of battle, but "Our Better Selves" is the first picture concerning the war which has this theme of frivolity versus patriotism.

Loyette Merval was a gay butterfly of the Paris social whirl. Surrounded by sycophants, she gave no heed to the sterner things of life. All she lived for was to satisfy her own vainglorious self. But came the call to the colors and when the youth of France marched away among the ranks were Willard Standish the American husband of Loyette. And deprived of his love and companionship she hastened to do her bit. Frivolities were forgotten. Duty called and she obeyed.

The two lovers were caught within the German advance and their lives might have been spared but that Loyette learned that her own people were endangered through a plan of the enemy. Frustrating their dastardly plot Loyette was summarily dealt with. And over the Great Divide her soul called to Willard—"Oh! that we could live our lives again now that we have found each other." And so the martyred souls were saved from indulgences and vanities.

CATCH LINES

Fannie Ward, the vivacious star, will appear at the ——— theatre next ——— in what is considered her greatest role. As a member of smart society in Paris she gives up her pleasure to do her duty by her country. A big picture of heart throbs and smiles. Don't miss it.

Loyette was a vainglorious little creature. She gave no thought of the morrow. All she lived for was to find expression for her artistic temperament. Then one day— To say any more would be giving a fine story away. See "Our Better Selves."

See "Our Better Selves"—it is a picture which will make you think. It will make you smile; it will make you cry a little. Fannie Ward is the star. Remember next ———.

There is a little bit of good in the bad of us. Loyette wasn't bad—she was just delightfully wicked. She only lived to be a butterfly until— See "Our Better Selves."

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever stop to think how much the women of France served their country during the trying days of the war? Did you ever realize that from everywhere the people of France responded no matter where they lived or their occupation? Did you ever reflect that even the vainglorious butterfly of the Paris boulevards gave up her joyous pleasures to do her bit for freedom? From the last question is based the theme of Fannie Ward's latest picture, "Our Better Selves." It presents her as one of these pleasure loving persons who responded no less nobly than her more serious minded sisters. It is a big picture because of the import of its theme. And it is said to offer the star the greatest role in which she has ever appeared. The picture is crowded with humorous detail and thrilling action. And it is set off with a handsome production. Don't fail to see it when it comes to the ——— theatre shortly.

Pathe stars Fannie Ward in "Our Better Selves"

SUGGESTIONS

The two big angles to play up in this feature are Miss Ward's performance and the vital theme. The star has never been presented with greater opportunities to show her talent. And she contributes a splendid portrayal. The theme is based on the sacrifice of the vainglorious butterfly (who is but one of many) who responded to her country's call when the war sobered the pleasure loving French people. Use all your advertising copy around this theme. Play it up strongly. It will appeal to everyone.

You might use the little proverb, "there is a little bit of good in the worst of us." The heroine had her little bit of good and used it nobly. Send out teasers on this idea. Exploit the fact the gay butterfly was regenerated through the war. But keep away from the tragic angle. It might shock the sensitive patrons. Use Lew Cody's name. He is rapidly coming into popular favor through his past fine performances. Don't hint that it is a war play in the accepted sense of the term.

"THE BETTER WIFE"

(SELECT)

An Average Regular Program Picture

A LIGHT society drama, with scenes laid in England and the star with a strong cast badly handicapped by a weak story which the director has not strengthened. The interior settings and exterior scenes are beautiful, but marred by very poor photography.

The wife of the young English nobleman is untrue to him, although he worships her. When she is killed in an automobile accident he marries the American girl to provide a mother for his little boy. She finally wins his love when a mutual friends tells him of his former wife's infidelity. Ben Alexander is the little son and his American mother-in-law nurses him when he is sick or hurt, which happens quite often.

Any film fan can anticipate everything that is going to happen in the following reels and there is nothing in the picture that appeals to the emotions. It is nice to look at, but not entertaining. While not a big calibre production, it is a passable picture that will register as a regular program offering.

This should draw good openings in first-run and elite theatres and get by as a picture. It will not stand up for long runs or repeat dates. In the family, popular and labor audiences it should draw fairly well the opening day and will be looked upon as an average picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 13.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Story by Leonore Coffee.
Directed by Wm. P. S. Earle.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Clara Kimball Young comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Select Picture, "The Better Wife."

She appears in the role of Charmian Page, an American girl accompanied by her father on a visit to England and France. While visiting their friends, the Kingdons, at their English estate, Charmian meets Sir Richard Beverly, whose wife is having an affair with another man.

Charmian is captivated with little Dick, the child of the nobleman, and later, when Lady Beverly is killed in an automobile accident and the little boy is quite seriously injured, she nurses him back to health.

Sir Richard is in financial difficulties and proposes to the American girl because of her wealth, and also knowing that she will make a loving and affectionate mother to little Dick. He has worshipped his first wife and does not know of her infidelity. And Chairmian finds that although she loves her husband dearly she is a wife in name only.

She bravely bears this for the sake of the little boy. And even when her husband taunts her with marrying him for his title she does not desert the ship. And finally her great love conquers and he is thoroughly won by her consistent affection. But this is after a mutual friend tells him frankly that he has been worshipping false gods and that his former wife was untrue to him.

He then recognizes the gold from the dross and pleads with Charmian to accept him as her lover as well as her husband. This offering may truly be called an "all-star cast" production, inasmuch as besides Clara Kimball Young we have Lillian Walker, Kathlyn Williams, Barbara Tennant, Irving Cummings, Nigel Barrie and little Ben Alexander.

PROGRAM READER

He taunted her. She was accused of marrying him because of his title. And he forced her to remain as his wife in name only.

The little boy that she was mothering, sadly neglected by his first wife, was the cord that held her tight and gave her the strength to bear all and endure all that she might be near him. Her love for her husband almost turned to hate after his taunt.

And she knew that the first wife was unfaithful but she would not tell him. She knew that he was worshipping a false god. But her lips remained sealed. She willingly bore the anguish and endured until a mutual friend one day told him the truth about the former Lady Beverly.

When the proud English nobleman humiliated himself to this staunch American girl who was his wife in name only he was astonished to find that she loved him dearly. They had both passed through the purging fire that made them one in reality.

And this sweet story is unfolded on the screen next week at this theatre by Clara Kimball Young, supported by an all-star cast. Lillian Walker, Kathlyn Williams, Barbara Tennant, Irving Cummings, Nigel Barrie and little Ben Alexander appear in the cast of this newest Select picture, "The Better Wife."

SUGGESTIONS

There is nothing in this picture that will allow for so-called "stunts" advertising or special lobby displays, outside of a large display of photographs. The title and the big names in the cast is your best bet if you have this picture booked. Clara Kimball Young is a strong card generally everywhere. Then you have the others in support that have a more or less strong following.

Call it an "all-star" cast and declare that you are offering the following names to prove up on a phrase that is generally misleading; Lillian Walker, Kathlyn Williams, Barbara Tennant, Nigel Barrie, Irving Cummings and little Ben Alexander. And the title with catch lines is an appropriate one; "The Better Wife." If you have a mailing list of the better class patrons in your neighborhood or town just drop them an invitation card announcing the photoplay and cast.

CATCH LINES

"The Better Wife" is Clara Kimball Young and she proves it at the ——— theatre. If you worship your wife too strongly for your own peace of mind you should see "The Better Wife" at the ——— theatre.

She was a wife in name only but she proved that she was "The Better Wife." Clara Kimball Young and Lillian Walker are at the ——— theatre this week in Miss Young's latest Select Picture.

The tie that binds held her although she was a loveless wife. See "The Better Wife" starring Clara Kimball Young at the ——— theatre.

"MAN'S DESIRE"

(ROBERTSON-COLE-EXHIBITORS MUTUAL)

Melodramatic Story of Love and Vengeance

OCCASIONALLY a star despairs of finding an acceptable offering and has to turn author himself to find a subject suitable for his personality. Lewis S. Stone has a quality of restraint in his make-up—a quality akin to modesty, and when he conceived "Man's Desire" he probably considered that as no scenarist knows him as well as he knows himself, the time would be ripe to express his personality in a story made to order.

He has merely journeyed to the lumber-camps of the Northwest, where he is content to bask in the background and give the story and other personages a chance.

The strongest elements of the picture are its action and human interest. Indeed it is above the average in its power to stimulate sympathy and suspense. And through it all is a panorama of primitive nature quite in keeping with the characterization and the theme of love and vengeance.

"Man's Desire" should spur the author-actor to try his skill again as a writer. As an actor he doesn't need to experiment since he is thoroughly grounded in his art. His cast is capable—Length, 5 reels.—Released through Exhibitors Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Tom Denton.....Lewis S. Stone
Mary Larkin.....Jane Novak
Bull Larkin.....Jack Curtiss
Slim Dorgen.....Bill Dyer
Vera Patton.....Charlotte Burton
By Lewis S. Stone.
Scenario by L. V. Jefferson.
Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.
Photographed by William J. Beckway.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lewis S. Stone, the star of many a stage and screen play, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest offering, "Man's Desire." The star is also the author of his present vehicle, the scenario being done by L. V. Jefferson. And he has written himself a tale of the Northwest where lumber camps flourish.

As Tom Denton he is the superintendent of the camp and his word is law. One of his laws is that the lumberjacks shall refrain from liquor and, so, when he catches Slim Dorgan draining a bottle of whiskey he promptly dismisses him. The latter, feeling insulted, makes his way to Bull Larkin's cabin for the purpose of getting more liquor as well as to enlist Bull in a plan to ruin Denton's plant. Bull, incidentally, has a wife who lives in mortal fear of him. Mary Larkin was forced into the marriage through the request of her dying father. And when she hears the unruly element talk about dynamiting the plant she hastens to inform Denton. His brother is killed during the melee and so is Dorgan. Bull, in the meantime, exchanges his clothes with his dead partner and escapes. So Denton, his property destroyed, marries Larkin's young widow and starts anew in another territory. All is peaceful until Bull turns up severely wounded and Mary is forced to keep quiet about her marriage. During's Tom absence her supposedly dead husband forces her to run away with him and we find them several months later installed in a dance hall on the Mexican border. And it happens that Denton rides down that way and metes out vengeance on the man who has so cruelly wronged him. And the past is forgotten in love. Mr. Stone receives good support from a capable cast. The picture was produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Denton, the superintendent of the lumber camp, had an unruly element working for him. When he dismissed Slim Dorgan, the latter, feeling resentful, made his way to Bull Larkin's home to enlist the services of the leader in a plan to punish Tom. However, Bull's wife, who never professed any love for her husband, overheard the plot and hastened to inform Denton that his plant was to be dynamited. But her warning came too late. The superintendent's prospects went up in powder and his brother was cruelly murdered.

Slim, however, was killed in the explosion but Bull got away by exchanging clothes with his dead partner. Out of the destruction Tom found a measure of happiness in Larkin's wife, and since evidence pointed to her husband as the dead man she carried no scruples about marrying the superintendent. How they had a respite from their trouble in love, how Larkin turned up like Enoch Arden to smite them again, how he made off with his wife again when Denton's back was turned, how vengeance was successfully meted out to him are events that are interestingly set down in this stirring picture of the Northwest. "Man's Desire" will appear at the ——— theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

Come and see this thrilling picture of the Northwest where the primeval forests are in harmony with the primitive instincts of man. It is a tale of love and vengeance. Remember the date, ——— the ———. Lewis S. Stone in "Man's Desire."

He befriended the wife of the camp bully. And when the latter escaped justice, the young superintendent married her. But one day the bully turned up and demanded his wife. Did she go with him? What happened to the man she loved? See "Man's Desire."

Lewis S. Stone, a popular figure of the stage and screen, will appear here next ——— in what is considered his best picture, "Man's Desire." It throbs with primitive passions and the action is vital and vivid. Don't miss it.

She met the man who meant all the world to her, but she was married to another. When her husband escaped justice she turned to her heart's desire. What was the outcome of this stirring chapter in her life? See Lewis S. Stone in "Man's Desire."

Up in the forests primeval where men eke out a living as lumberjacks, lived Tom Denton. Did love come to him and in what strange form? See "Man's Desire."

"THE FIRING LINE"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT SPECIAL)

Chambers Story Makes Splendid Picture

AN ideal combination does Irene Castle and David Powell make in this pictorial version of Chambers' story—a story considered by the majority of his readers as the best thing he has ever done. Certainly it is a work that has endured and it should live and be remembered as a screen play not only for its vitality but because of its artistic presentation.

Most picturegoers who cater to Chambers haven't forgotten the delectable Sheila, who because of her high sense of honor refused to bring disgrace to her foster parents by divorcing the gallant Louis Malcourt. A strange fellow, groping in the dark, it was as if fate ordained, his gallantry would not be appreciated until after his tragic death. As he was the biggest character in the book so is he in the picture.

Chambers' atmosphere, his deft skill at situation and climax have been excellently caught by Director Maigne. To one familiar with the story, not a detail in plot, characterization and setting is missing. Some of his scenes are positively enchanting, and one showing deer grazing quietly in the moonlight only to be startled into activity by the report of the suicide's gun is spendidly conceived. The picture is as much David Powell's as Irene Castle's. Both give highly gratifying performances.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 6. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Firing Line," which is an adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' popular novel of the same name, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— with Irene Castle as the star. The picture marks her return to the screen after an absence of several months. Perhaps no actress on the silversheet is more ideally suited to play a Chambers heroine than Irene Castle. She is the perfect embodiment of his aristocratic American girl.

"The Firing Line" is unquestionably the leader of the author's society novels since it deals so strongly in genuinely human characters. It was adapted by Clara Beranger and was produced under the direction of Charles Maigne. Both have faithfully caught the atmosphere of the original.

The story concerns Sheila Cardross, the adopted daughter of the Cardross family. During her sojourn at Palm Beach Garret Hamil, a landscape architect, is attracted so strongly to her that he pays an ardent courtship. But she is not ready to accept his attentions owing to the fact that she is the wife of Louis Malcourt. The marriage has been kept a secret and it has never been lived up to by Sheila. It develops that the sensitive girl had taken up matrimony to give herself a name. So the fate of the lovers rests with Malcourt. At this point the story soars in dramatic intensity. A time comes when Malcourt shows his gallantry by taking his life, thus permitting the sweethearts to be united.

The star is assisted by a distinguished cast that includes the dependable David Powell, who, incidentally, gives a remarkably lifelike portrayal of the suicide, Jane Warrenton, Vernon Steele, J H. Gilmore, Frank Losee, Robert Schable and others.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— takes pleasure in announcing that the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Firing Line," will come to the ——— theatre very shortly. Special attention is called to the fact that it marks Irene Castle's return to the screen after an absence of several months. Most of our patrons are familiar with Robert W. Chambers' famous novel. At the time of publication it created a genuine furore because of its extraordinary plot and characterization. And now as a picture it should meet enthusiastic approval. It is an artistic endeavor in every way from the adaptation to the finished product which Director Charles Maigne has accomplished.

Beautifully staged, excellently directed, capably played it should earn the widest encomiums from the ——— patrons. Irene Castle makes an ideal Chambers heroine—the sort of heroine you had in your mind when you read the book. She is exquisitely costumed. The best dressed woman in America, the feminine patrons will have an opportunity to discover the latest thing in milady's wardrobe. Others in the cast are David Powell, Vernon Steele, Frank Losee and Robert Schalbe. See "The Firing Line"—it is a genuine treat.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this feature begin with the announcement that it is a Paramount-Artcraft Special. This will signify that it is something out of the ordinary. Then mention that it is an adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel of the same name. Ask your patrons if they remember "The Firing Line." Then follow up that it will come to your theatre as a special attraction for a brief run. You can play an extended run with the feature since it is high caliber in every department.

Mention the fact that it brings Irene Castle back to the screen after an absence of several months. She is one of the most widely talked of women in America, not only because of her career as a dancer but because she is the acknowledged leader of fashions. What she wears or the manner of arranging her coiffure is imitated by every girl who wants to appear at the acme of perfection. Use stills plentifully, particularly those which set her off bedecked in some of her marvelous gowns. Tie up with your bookstore and get them to run a sale of special editions. And in your newspaper copy use a fac-simile of one of the pages. Exploit it to the limit. Advertise the star and have your editor run a story every day about the star and her accomplishments.

"THE HORNET'S NEST"

(VITAGRAPH)

Society-Crook Drama of Interest

A SOCIETY drama with the crook element added to give it flavor and portrayed in a clever manner with a good cast. The star, Earle Williams, plays one of his usual roles and draws the character, that of an ex-district attorney fallen into disrepute, in a manner that leaves nothing to be criticized. He is seconded by Brinsley Shaw, who plays the "heavy," and in this line of work there are none better, in a way peculiar to himself, that is a pleasure to witness. But the story. It is from a novel by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and although it has its fine points, it is not strong enough to be called a "hit." Action and thrills are there and a pretty little love story, but the forceful impression is lost.

In order to extricate the girl from her troubles, the hero and crook combine, accomplish their purpose, and the final close-up shows hero and heroine in a loving embrace.

This picture should draw well in the high class neighborhood houses and satisfy. In the popular and family theatres it should also draw. In the theatres catering to the labor element it will please.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Asche Colvin.....Earle Williams
"The Hornet".....Brinsley Shaw
Muriel Fletcher.....Vola Vale
Mr. Whitefield.....Ogden Crane

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "The Hornet's Nest.' This is an adaptation of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's fascinating story of the same name. The authoress is considered one of the leading fictionists of the day and her works are always enjoyable reading. "The Hornet's Nest" was scenarioized by James Dayton and was produced under the direction of James Young, one of the most reliable directors on the screen. Mr. Williams is said to have a part entirely suited to his personality and he gives his usual good performance. Others in the cast are Brinsley Shaw, Vola Vale, Ogden Crane, Kathleen Kirkham, and Edward McWade.

The story presents a romance in which high finance and crooks have a conspicuous position. The situations are filled with dramatic action and suspense. Mr. Williams appears as Colvin or Vernon, as he calls himself. He is engaged in charitable work when he meets Muriel Fletcher who has ventured into the world to find some one to help her out of her difficulties. Her aunt, Freda Whitefield, exercises evil hold on her cousin, Fletcher Hempstead, who, with her, owns the estate. So when Muriel meets Colvin, she decides he is the man to aid her. He learns that Fletcher, whom William and Freda Whitefield have driven to disgrace, has a prominent scar.

In the exciting events that follow, Colvin paints a scar on his face while Fletcher paints his scar out. The latter robs Whitefield's safe and Colvin takes the blame. Though he is discredited in the eyes of Muriel for his action, in the end he finds a way out of his troubles and extricates Muriel from hers. And so he is rewarded with her love.

CATCH LINES

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, will come to the ——— theatre on ——— in a pictorial version of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's novel, "The Hornet's Nest." He gives one of his most finished and forceful performances as the young man who helps a girl out of her difficulties.

See "The Hornet's Nest"—it is a picture taken from Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's novel of the same name. Earle Williams is the star and others in the cast who contribute a brace of good performances are Vola Vale, Brinsley Shaw, and Kathleen Kirkham.

What would you do if a pretty girl sought you out and asked you to help her out of her difficulties? Most likely you would answer her politely that a business engagement prevents you. You would think up the most logical excuse if the girl is a stranger. Then again you may have such a strong sense of adventure that you couldn't resist the appeal of her voice and eyes. Well, Earle Williams took a chance in "The Hornet's Nest." What came of it?

PROGRAM READER

The ——— theatre will offer next ——— afternoon and evening the Vitagraph production, "The Hornet's Nest." Adapted by James Dayton from Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's well known novel of the same name, and directed by James Young, one of the leading directors on the screen, it presents Earle Williams with one of the most acceptable roles he has ever had during his long sojourn on the silversheet. It is a tale of hearts, high finance and crooks.

Mr. Williams is chosen by a girl, a perfect stranger to him, to aid her out of her difficulties. How h is advnturous enough to accept her plan, how he seemingly jumps from the frying pan into the fire, how he discovers himself discredited, how he rises to the occasion and seeks her aid as his helpmate through life are events that are interestingly set down in this highly dramatic offering. It abounds with high speed action and is charged with suspense. Remember next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this feature make plain that it is an adaptation of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's novel of the same name. You can't go too strong in playing up a famous author when one appears responsible for a screen play. It is only fair to the public that it should be advised along this line. Get hold of a copy and reproduce the covers for your paper advertising. You might run a story about the author and what she has done in the fiction world.

Play up the title. It is one that will attract curiosity. A hornet's nest is certain to carry a healthy sting. Spread your catch lines along this angle. There is a healthy sting to this picture. If you go in for circus advertising you can even rig up a good size hornet's nest in your lobby, telling your patrons that they will find out what it contains when they journey inside. Feature it as a picture of high finance and crooks. The star is a favorite. Play him up and inform your crowd that he is seen in another of his adventurous roles. If the other members of the cast mean anything to your patrons emphasize their names.

She was a high strung girl, tremendously sensitive and proud. She found out that she was an orphan. The stigma caused her to contract a marriage which later proved distasteful. The right man came along eventually and she found herself burdened with another. This is the dilemma that confronts the lovable character that will greet you when you see "The Firing Line."

His forefathers had all committed suicide. Misunderstood, unappreciated, Louis Malcourt decided to give his wife her freedom by taking his life. You will like him—you will take him to your hearts when you see him in "The Firing Line."

Neill to Direct "Bandbox"

Engaged by Deitrich-Beck to Handle Vance Story Starring Doris Kenyon

William Russell, who has signed his name to a William Fox contract

R. WILLIAM NEILL, who until recently has been a leading member of the Ince-Paramount directorial forces, has been engaged by Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Deitrich-Beck, Inc., to direct "The Bandbox," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series starring Doris Kenyon to be released by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. Neill has been with the Ince organization for four years and during a large part of that time he directed Dorothy Dalton in all of her recent successes. He also directed Enid Bennett for a time.

It is a peculiar coincidence that Mr. Neill was selected by Thomas H. Ince to direct Louis Joseph Vance's "False Faces," but was at that time directing Dorothy Dalton. Miss Dalton is said to have refused to accept the director assigned to replace Mr. Neill, with the result that the latter lost his opportunity to direct the Vance special. Mr. Neill next came East and has just completed "The Career of Katherine Bush" for Paramount. He also directed "Free and Equal," which will shortly open at the Casino theatre, New York.

"I have been watching the work of Mr. Neill for several years," said Mr. Deitrich, "and consider him one of the foremost dramatic directors in the business. He is one of the few directors who combines the dramatic with the artistic. Mr. Neill has long wanted to direct the highly dramatic stories of Louis Joseph Vance and will give his whole soul to it.

The cast for "The Bandbox" is now being selected and work on filming the feature will shortly be started.

Universal Erects Theatre for Settings

To do away with the condition that has heretofore obtained when scenes required by pictures necessitated the leasing of a playhouse and installation of huge batteries of light, Universal is going to erect a permanent theatre at Universal City, seating 1,200 people, at a cost of $30,000.

It is to be so arranged that its interior and exterior can be converted, in a day's notice, to suit any type of architecture desired, and is to be used whenever theatre scenes are desired.

The stage itself will be fully equipped, and a new feature is to be worked out in the proscenium arch whereby it may be made larger or smaller at will.

In Justice to Goldwyn and Pathe

A regretable error occurred in Motion Picture News of July 12, through which a group photograph of Goldwyn Exchange managers was captioned as "Pathe Exchange Managers."

The error was caught only after the presses had run off a number of copies of the magazine, which could not be recalled. The mistake is an annoying one to both Goldwyn and Pathe organizations, and is a source of regret to the News, which endeavors so far as is possible to eliminate typographical errors from its pages.

Viola Dana, Metro star of "The Microbe"

"Upstairs and Down" Is Having Fine Run

According to the Selznick offices Olive Thomas first Selznick picture, "Upstairs and Down," is having one of the most phenomenal runs of any motion picture production of the present season. It has already exceeded all booking expectations and from present indications the playdates on this attraction will outnumber those of many of the year's biggest pictures.

Scores of three and four day engagements for July and August have been reported by the various Select Exchanges, while the number of one and two day bookings on the attraction for three months run into hundreds.

MISSOURI

Kansas City—The new modern Newman theatre, built by Frank L. Newman, opened recently. It has a seating capacity of 2,500 and represents an investment of about $2,000,000.

NEW JERSEY

Tenafly—I. Sabin is planning to erect a moving picture theatre on his property on West Railroad avenue.

Edgemere—Sol. Schildkraut intends to build a picture theatre on the boulevard front, it is said.

NEW YORK

College Point—M. J. Gerson will erect a new theatre which, it is said, will cost $250,000.

New York City—Vincent Astor has sold to Robert E. Simon, as head of a group of capitalists, the Putnam Building and Westover Court properties, comprising the block front on the west side of Broadway from 43d to 44th streets. There are several leases on the property. If possession can be obtained of these, the new owners contemplate the erection of a large motion picture theatre.

Brooklyn—Meyer and Schneider opened their new Roebling theatre, Roebling street and Lee avenue, recently. It is said to have cost $200,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,000.

Buffalo—James B. Savage has filed plans for the construction of a store and motion picture theatre at Triangle street, to cost $60,000.

New Metro Policy Satisfies

Exhibitors Write and Telegraph Congratulations to General Manager Atkinson

THE announcement by W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, of the "fewer, bigger and better pictures" policy, under which Screen Classics, Inc., will make and Metro will distribute only multiple reel superfeatures after September first, with the consequent discontinuance of Metro's program pictures, has been followed by a flood of enthusiastic congratulations.

Since his announcement, made at the Hotel Astor convention of Metro exchange heads, Mr. Atkinson's mail has been filled with messages of approval. Telegrams have also poured in upon the general manager. The consensus of all these communications is, according to the Metro executive, that the step taken by his company was splendidly timed and in the right direction.

Now that Metro's expansion policy is definitely under way the officials of the organization are very much gratified at the manifold manifestation of approval from all sources.

Metro district managers and the heads of the Metro exchanges throughout the country were the first to congratulate Mr. Atkinson and the other executives of Metro. These men are enthused over the prospect of a wider and more important field. Not only the home office but the entire field force is on its toes all ready to splurge.

As each one of the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., special productions is to be made without regard to expense and to take ample time necessary for best production results, each one will be preceded, accompanied and followed up by an advertising and publicity campaign of immense proportions in order to insure a splendid reception. The exhibitors are to receive every aid.

Already the field force has been supplied with literature and sales helps for the first four of the great Screen Classics, Inc., superfeatures—"The Man Who Stayed at Home," "Fair and Warmer," "Lombardi, Ltd.," and "Please Get Married," and also the Nazimova production, "The Brat," which will be distributed solely by Metro.

Richardson Re-Signed; New Western Series

William L. Sherrill, President of The Frohman Amusement Corporation wired his New York office that he has renewed the contract with Jack Richardson, the Western heavy to appear in support of Texas Guinan in the two reel Western productions being made at Los Angeles. Mr. Sherrill also wired that he has acquired a story written by Julian Johnson, Editor of Photoplay Magazine, and which embraces one of the most sensational themes ever adapted to a Western production.

In addition to making a new series of two reel comedies, it is also reported that The Frohman Amusement Corporation will shortly commence the production of a fifteen episode Western serial, the details of which will be shortly announced.

Alice Joyce on New One

The extremely hot weather of the past two weeks has held no terrors for Alice Joyce, even if she has been busy on her new Vitagraph feature. Fortunately for the star her new play, "The Winchester Woman," calls for many outside locations and Wesley Ruggles, who has returned from overseas and is directing the picture, found an ideally rural town in New Jersey, not more than an hour's ride by motor car from New York city. There Miss Joyce and her company has been at work.

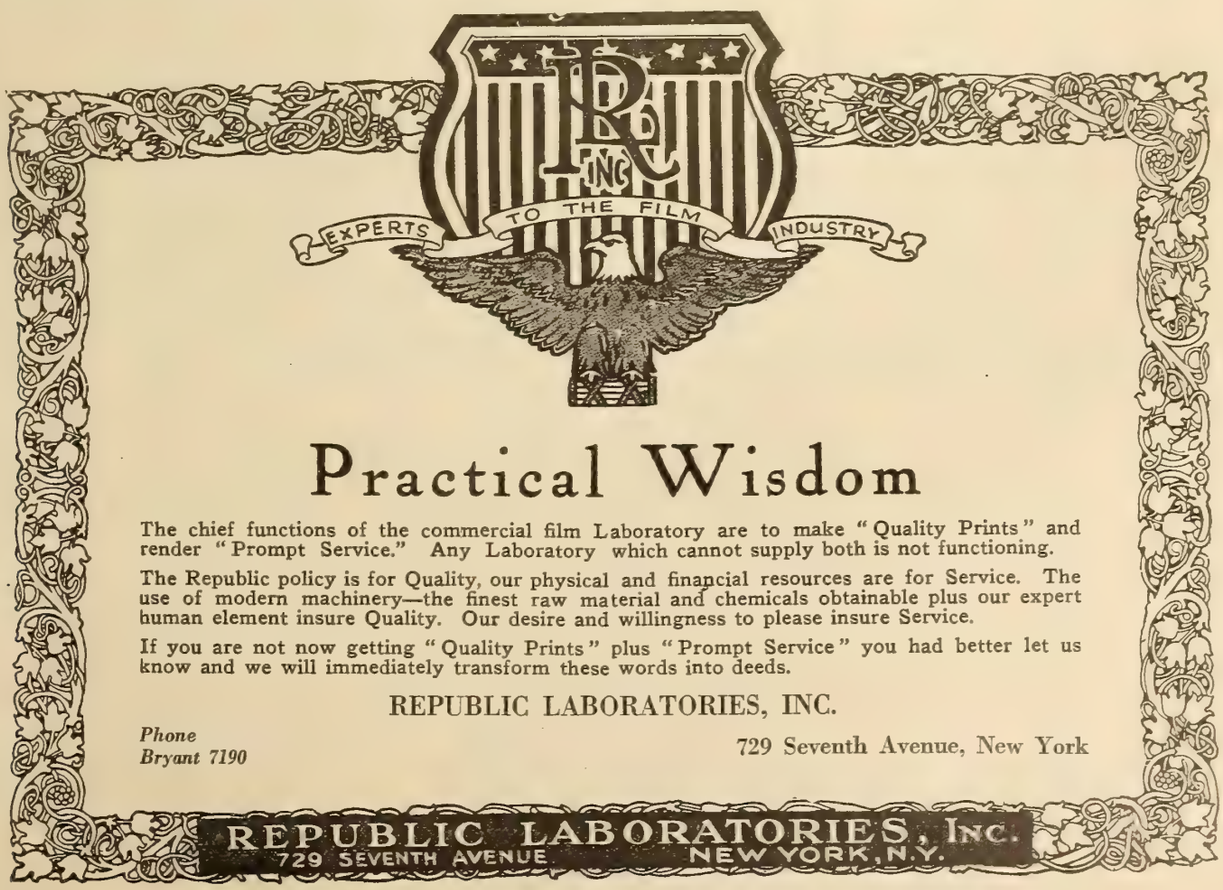
Pauline Frederick, seen in "The Peace of of Roaring River," a Goldwyn

Fitzmaurice to Direct Mae Murray

George Fitzmaurice, who has directed all of Elsie Ferguson's recent Artcraft pictures, will have charge of the Paramount-Artcraft production, "On With the Dance," which will mark the return of Mae Murray to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a star. The production will be started some time in August at one of the corporation's Eastern studios.

"On With the Dance" is a play by Michael Morton, which was originally produced at the Republic Theatre, New York, and enjoyed a successful run during the season of 1917-18.

Miss Murray has many Paramount pictures to her credit, among them being "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," "To Have and to Hold," "The Dream Girl," "Big Sister," "The Plow Girl," "The Primrose Ring" and others.



Practical Wisdom

The chief functions of the commercial film Laboratory are to make "Quality Prints" and render "Prompt Service." Any Laboratory which cannot supply both is not functioning.

The Republic policy is for Quality, our physical and financial resources are for Service. The use of modern machinery—the finest raw material and chemicals obtainable plus our expert human element insure Quality. Our desire and willingness to please insure Service.

If you are not now getting "Quality Prints" plus "Prompt Service" you had better let us know and we will immediately transform these words into deeds.

Exchangeman Gives Rules to Exhibitor Success

"The future of the screen in its appeal to the public rests entirely on the treatment the exhibitor displays to his patrons," vouchsafes George Schaeffer, Manager of the New York exchange of World Pictures. Mr. Schaeffer has had a long and varied experience both as a distributor and as a manager of a motion picture house.

"The exhibitor owes a duty to his patrons which if neglected will result in only one thing—failure. That duty consists of absolute truth in advertising. Making no claim for a picture that is not borne out by the picture itself. Establishing a policy of certainty of price as regards admission. Fluctuating scale of prices creates an antagonism that sends your patrons to the opposition theatre. Once an exhibitor settles upon a fair and reasonable price of admission stick to it. Pass up every flimsy argument for raising the scale. Some exhibitors charge more for a Saturday or a Sunday night box office charge because they can get it. Don't do it. You will lose in the long run."

Wallace Reid is Again Signed by F. P.-Lasky

Wallace Reid has signed with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Company for a period of five years more according to an announcement made by the star. When this contract is completed it will make nine consecutive years that he has been with this firm, which is perhaps the longest engagement of any one screen player.

Eve Unsell Gets a Foreign Post

Eve Unsell Goes Abroad on Scenario Work for F. P.-Lasky

EVE UNSELL, Famous Players-Lasky scenario writer, sails for England next week to take charge of the scenario department of the newly organized Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., whose intention it is to produce the works of the greatest Continental writers on the actual locations specified by the authors, whether they be London, Paris, Madrid, the Alps or the battle-scarred areas.

Her work in connection with such famous pictures as "Wildflower," "The Man from Mexico," "The Dummy," "The Parisian Wife," "Eyes of the Soul," "The Test of Honor," and many others equally well-known, was responsible for her being chosen. Miss Unsell will work in association with Robert A. MacAlarney, Scenario Editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who remains in America.

Among the first productions to be made by Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., will be adaptations of stories and plays by Henry Arthur Jones, Arthur Wing Pinero and other English dramatists. Already one of these plays is in script construction, awaiting Miss Unsell's arrival in England for the completion of certain details relating to locale.

Miss Unsell is enthusiastic in the anticipation of her new work and the abundant possibilities which it entails, "The Day of libels against Great Britain, in motion picture form, is over," she says. "Production of stories by British celebrities on their original locales, without the cheapening or inaccurate process of transplanting or imitation in scenic form, opens a new epoch in the motion picture industry. It should mean a cementing of international friendships, since only in this way can the beauties of English scenery and the true British ideals be brought vividly before other nations in pictorial form."

Born in Caldwell, Kansas, in the midst of the habitat of the cowboy who was destined to contribute so much atmosphere to the then unknown drama of the screen, Miss Unsell began at an early age to lay the foundation for her career.

She did repertoire with Nance O'Neil and stock with Paul McAllister, and then played extended engagements in "Excuse Me" and "Seven Days." It was during this period that she did her first scenario work and it attracted the attention of the Famous Players Film Company. She had been with the company but a few days when she was entrusted with the adaptation of "Wildflower" for Marguerite Clark, working from the galley proofs of the novel. So successful was "Wildflower" that important assignments followed in rapid succession, among her early adaptations being "The Eagle's Mate" for Mary Pickford, "One of Our Girls" for Hazel Dawn, "The Man From Mexico" and "Are You a Mason?" for John Barrymore, and later, with Hugh Ford, "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," "The Morals of Marcus" and a number of other prominent features.

Miss Unsell's later work has also been uniformly successful and includes "Sunshine Nan," "The Honeymoon," "The Silent Sacrifice," "The Whirlpool," "The Test of Honor," "Three Men and a Girl," "The Marriage Price," "The Parisian Wife," "Eyes of the Soul" and "The Shadow of the Rope."

Second Rothapfel Unit Given September 1

Samuel L. Rothapfel, Rothapfel Pictures Corporation, is putting the final touches to his plans for production of the second Rothapfel Unit Programme. Tom Cushing, scenario editor for Mr. Rothapfel announces the completion of the working script for the feature which is said to be an adaptation from a popular novel. Mr. Cushing returned only a few months ago from France where he was putting on shows for the American soldiers. Mr. Rothapfel's second program is scheduled for release about the first week in September.

Harvey to Direct Truex

John Joseph Harvey has been signed by Amedee J. Van Buren to direct his series of two reel comedies starring Ernest Truex. The first picture written by Albert Payson Terhun and adapted by Mrs. Sidney Drew, is already in production.

Hobart Henley Feature Ready

First of a Series of Four, "Gay Old Dog" Soon to Be Given Private Showing

"THE Gay Old Dog," the first of a series of four special features to be produced under the personal direction of Hobart Henley, Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., will leave the Hobart Henley studio in a few days for cutting and titling, after which it will be given a private review showing.

Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales, through whom Mr. Henley's special production will be released, anticipates a keen interest, among exhibitors when the scenarioized version of Edna Ferber's "The Gay Old Dog" is first flashed upon the screen. The Ferber story, adapted for the screen by Mrs. Sidney Drew, is said to be an intensely, human picture of ingratitude, love, and constancy.

John Cumberland who has one of the principal leads in "Up In Mabel's Room," a successful, current Broadway production, supported by a cast, including Corinne Barker, remembered for her excellent work in "Shirley Kaye," "On with the Dance" and "Remnent," Emily Lorraine, Inez Marcel, Marry J. Chambers and Gertrude Robinson.

There is nothing extraordinary original about the plot or motif; it is an old story told in a different way and said to be so well acted before the camera that the most common and prosaic "life scenes" are given a poignancy, vividness and reality.

The drama will be picturized in 6 reels.

As this will be the first of four special productions to be screened by Mr. Henley for the Independent Sales, no effort has been spared, in either expense or talent, to make it par excellence among current feature reels.

Heads Realart Branch

When J. S. Woody, General Sales Manager of the Realart Pictures Corporation, reached Cincinnati on his tour of the Western cities which he is making for the purpose of establishing exchanges for his company, he appointed Mark Goldman manager of the Cincinnati office. As the building which the Realart has leased will not be ready for occupancy until September, Mr. Goldman will make his temporary headquarters at Suite 910-911 Mercantile Library Building.

SELECT YOUR NEXT PROJECTOR AS YOU WOULD YOUR MOTOR CAR

If a recognized authority on motor cars took you by the arm and led you over to a prize-winning car that was recognized by the industry as the leader in design, workmanship, endurance and power, and if you were told that you could purchase this car at the same price as one that was without its merits, WOULD YOU NOT BE IMPRESSED?

Do you realize while you've been running your present projector that wonderful strides have been taken in picture machine building by the makers of the Simplex?

Do you know that owing to its superior material, workmanship, exclusive features, ease of operation and low cost of upkeep, the Simplex is now regarded everywhere as having outdistanced all competition and stands as the world's leading projector?

Suppose you figure how much your present projector cost you—how much for repairs and upkeep—suppose you visit a man who has been using Simplex—ask him why he purchased Simplex—what it cost for upkeep—study his projection—

Then suppose you visit the man who sells the Simplex, —he'll be glad to explain all about its construction—you'll be amazed at its many features, and in all probability its cost will be no greater than that of your present projector.

WHY SHOULD YOU NOT BUY A SIMPLEX?

Famous Classic

"The Outcasts of Poker Flat"

NO production of the present season surpasses this Bret Harte classic. No scenes ever shown on any screen surpass the magic and lure of the old river steamboat in the early days of the golden west.

¶ Read and enjoyed by millions since 1870 this wondrous story constitutes a gem in a platinum setting. As "WID" says: "You've got MORE to work with here than the average feature." "[illegible] Harte's stories are a tradition, [illegible]mong those who have never read [illegible]m"—and "THE OUTCASTS [illegible] POKER FLAT" is one of the [illegible]st famous of his tales."

MARY MacLAREN IN "THE WEAKER VESSEL"

It's Rich!

WID says: "Could hardly be improved upon. Direction, touches and 'bits' are big features. An emphatically welcome picture if you have been running heavy 'mellers.' Mary MacLaren has been constantly adding to her list of followers and the pulling power of her name should be taken advantage of."

JULIAN JOHNSON, Editor of Photoplay, says: "You have a positive roar in 'The Weaker Vessel.'" MOVING PICTURE WORLD says: "There is a welcome flavor of originality in 'The Weaker Vessel' . . . delightful human touches . . . splendid, humorous moments . . . a picture of unusual merit." MRS. SIDNEY DREW

IN

"BUNKERED"

The Return of Polly

YOUR public is waiting for Mrs. Sidney Drew, their favorite comedienne of the screen. Polly has established herself as the one great fun-favorite of them all. The pictures in which she appears are the highest type of clean, human, joyful comedies of real life. She personally supervises and directs every one.

Here's what the New York Tribune says of "Bunkered":

"It is a charming little comedy which Mrs. Drew has filled with the people who are exactly the kind of people you find in real life. Angie, the ingenue, is not too pretty, and she is most convincing in the role. Thank goodness, Mrs. Drew is going to keep on writing and producing these comedies, for there is no other to take her place."

Three Great, Popular Song Successes Linked Up With Hodkinson Releases

To give the exhibitors of America the tremendous benefits of instrumental and vocal publicity—a kind of publicity that will reach millions and bring them into your theatres—W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces:

FREDERICK V. BOWERS has published a wonderful song, "BEAUTIFUL SAHARA" based on J. Parker Read Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "SAHARA"—the picture that has caused an exhibitor stampede for bookings. This song is now being placed on sale nationally and its orchestra version was a part of the New York Strand score for "Sahara" for the week of June 29.

WATERSON, BERLIN & SNYDER are publishing soon a wonderful song of the West, "DESERT GOLD," to be sung by millions and advertised nationally in conjunction with Benjamin B. Hampton & Eltinge F. Warner's first Zane Grey Picture, "DESERT GOLD," the greatest Zane Grey picture ever made from any of his world-known novels.

McCARTHY & FISHER are publishing one of the most appealing songs ever written, "THE BLUE BONNET," as a link-up with the National Film Corporation's first great BILLIE RHODES production for Hodkinson release, "THE BLUE BONNET."

—Three smashing song hits to increase the box office receipts of the nation's exhibitors.

First National Announcement

for Season 1919-1920

It is not a confession of errors
—nor a promise of atonement.

First National brought about open booking and will continue it.

First National first announced "bigger and better" pictures and will continue to release them.

First National at its inception instituted individual and star series booking and will continue along these lines.

First National was first to give independent producers a chance and will continue to support them.

First National's responsibility began in its own theatres the same condition will obtain.

First National blazed the trail they are all attempting to follow

And that's all we have to say about "Policy."

The BOOST from OUTSIDE THAT SETS A STRIDE

Like all Rex Beach Pictures—like all Goldwyn Pictures, the film isn't left to itself, though it is sold on merit exclusively. "The Girl from Outside" rides on a popular interest accumulated by all the army of Rex Beach enthusiasts, in magazines, in newspapers, in books.

Say Rex Beach and watch the crowd flock to see what they have read. (This is the secret. The story was so good that it should be better when brought to life.)

But what already exists isn't all.

The Goldwyn Service Department has gone to unusual ends to provide every Goldwyn exhibitor with local material which will whoop it up with the same zip which is in the story itself.

Fierce pace to set for the rest of the year? But Goldwyn is out to be pacemaker for the industry. Will the Goldwyn idea find you on the bandwagon, or will you be outside of the moneymaking set?

REX BEACH'S

Great Drama of the North

AGAINST the background of a bleak Alaskan sky, the girl, orphaned, alone, tragically helpless, is silhouetted.

Inside blushing with the red glow of hellish intrigue a corrupt drama is fiendishly enacted. Nothing more sympathetic has been known to the screen, nothing more fiercely agonizing has been told in pictures.

As the action unfolds, the little stranger is unconsciously made the dominant figure who forces the evil influences to the light and brings the crude hand of justice to strike for right.

A film drama of Rex Beach at his best, the whole interpreted under skillful direction by an exceptional cast.

DONT BOOK GOLDWYN PICTURES

—until you have seen them

Don't wait until the audience is in your theatre to decide whether or not you like a production. Like it first, take it after; dislike it first and steer clear of it instanter.

Hereafter it isn't necessary to announce a Goldwyn picture until you can unhesitatingly put your personal O. K. right across the face of the film, and say to your cash-box, "I'm dead sure you're not going below flood-tide this time!

Let the other fellows take a chance, you play the can't-fail number. You're not playing cards, you're doing business.

The new Goldwyn Merit System takes the gamble out of booking and makes it as easy to get the right fit of pictures for your house as it is to buy gloves for your hands. You try them on!

Try them on first!—That's the new slogan of Goldwyn Booking; see the films in your local Goldwyn exchange, talk it over with the service man (on the ground) and make your plans in advance like a general, a business general.

WORLD FAVORITES

Robertson-Cole attractions have demonstrated that the millions of people in every country who turn to the moving pictures for entertainment are as one in recognition of the best actors and the finest productions. Excellence is the keynote to universal appeal and the wide popularity of Robertson-Cole pictures is the proof of their excellence.

BESSIE BARRISCALE

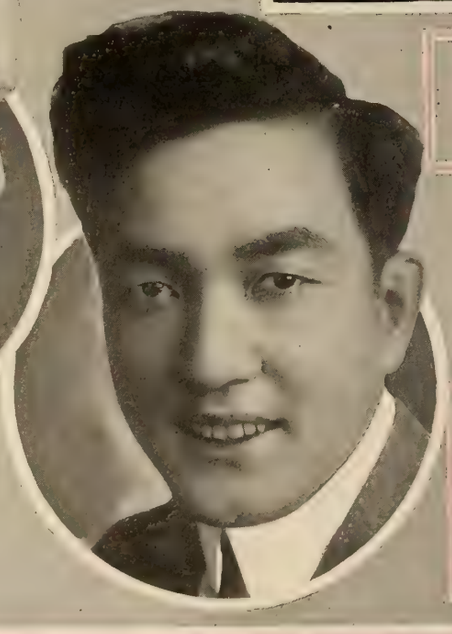
One of the biggest favorites among the foreign cinema public. Described as the most versatile actress. She appears in eight Robertson-Cole features a year.

MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON

Who is again accompanying her husband in his daring adventures among the Cannibals of the South Seas. The Johnson pictures startled all of Europe with their revelations.

H. B. WARNER

On the speaking stage and on the screen he has been an American and European favorite in many notable successes.



SESSUE HAYAKAWA

Who is without an equal in his interpretation of Oriental roles. His pictures are in big demand throughout the world.

BELL & HOWELL CINEMACHINERY

In practically every important film laboratory in the United States the Bell & Howell products are in use. Almost 100 per cent of the film used in the United States is perforated to the Bell & Howell standard gauge. These facts alone are overwhelming proof of the perfection of Bell & Howell Cinematograph Camera, Standard Perforators, Standard Continuous Feed Film Printers and Standard Step-Feed Film Printers.

HARRISON'S REPORTS

To All Exhibitors:

I have received the following letter from Ross D. Rogers, of Dye, Ford & Rogers Theatres, Amarillo, Texas:

Mr. P. S. Harrison
New York City

Dear Mr. Harrison:

It is with pleasure that I mail you our check for one subscription to HARRISON'S REPORTS. I have always looked forward each week to getting your reviews in the News, and have always found them to more nearly coincide with the pictures, than any others printed. If you will just live up to what you say—not ever accept any advertising on your reports, be fair and strictly impartial, you, with your present reputation, can very shortly have the most popular and widely read reviewing service in the field. There is a wonderful opportunity for you in the writer's opinion, and it is strictly up to you as to whether you will make good.

We are at present operating houses at Amarillo—the Mission and the Olympic—at Plainview—the Mae and Olympic—at Canyon—the Olympic. We are building a new theatre in Wichita Falls to cost $125,000.00, to be named the Olympic. The writer will have the management of the theatre there, and we hope to get opened by December 1st. I will advise you so that you can change my address to that point when I get moved.

With heartiest wishes for the success of your service—hoping that you will always TELL THE TRUTH AS YOU SEE IT—and never never do anything with a producer that will cause you to show any favoritism, we are,

Yours very truly,
Dye, Ford & Rogers
By [signed] Ross D. Rogers

I am receiving scores of such letters. They all carry the same pleading. I am taking these means, therefore, of making the following declaration:

I will under no circumstances violate the promise I have given to exhibitors not to accept film advertising.

I will under no consideration favor any one producer. My object will always be to appraise the picture's values fairly and impartially.

Success of HARRISON'S REPORTS means success for you. Send in your check now.

P. S. Harrison, Sole Editor and Owner.

Plain Words

FOX POLICY 1919-20

IT has taken five years and six months for the Fox Film Corporation to become the greatest film organization in the world.

Five years – a long time in the film industry– but it takes time to do things well. Its success is due to genuine showmanship– the giving to the public what the public wanted to pay to see.

Fox Exhibitors admit that they love art but that they also admire the Fox color scheme of a fat bankroll, and there's a lot of horse sense in that idea.

The past of the Fox Film Corporation is the firm foundation of a tremendously successful business – the present is the provision for theatres great and small of attractions that satisfy and make money – the future is a constantly rising tide of big business in which the exhibitor is the biggest profit maker.

Fox isn't a highbrow and Fox isn't a lowbrow– he's a showman who has made money for the exhibitor and money for himself.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

for plain men

FOX POLICY 1919-20

FOR your new season don't chase rainbows of promises- stick to the showmanship certainties. Your one big problem is the question of real entertainment because entertainment is the thing your public wants and will pay for.

Fox pictures for the new season provide fully for great theatres and small theatres. There will be enough in volume, in class and above all in genuine human appeal. The line is a complete line, it leaves no theatre unprovided for, it supplies all the needs of the world at large.

Read the announcement plans, policies and programs of all the others. Then give strict attention to what follows on succeeding pages, then make your own decision as a showman.

Fox does not criticize anyone for making fewer pictures- but he insists upon supplying the positive demands of the most active market in the history of motion pictures - and, therefore, in the season of 1919-20 Fox provides for all theatres; not merely for one class.

A DEFINITE LINE

The Surest Protection This Year

¶ Does it occur to the exhibitor that his ability to advertise will prove, this year, his greatest asset, his surest protection?

Does he realize that this ability ranks in importance right along with the size and location of his house, his booking arrangements, etc.?

Let's see.

A box-office report has just come to my desk.

It reads: "Opened small but built up big through advertising. Ran a week."

There's a whole sermon in this text; or several sermons, for the text may be written many ways.

The picture was independently produced—one of the many good pictures made last spring and of which there will be an increasing number this year.

There was no star to send it off with a bang; no well-known name of a best seller book or play to advertise it in advance.

It was just a good picture, with good exploitation points in it—like the hint of a popular song, for one thing; and the exhibitor saw and played up these popular appeals; and the public was pleased and grew every day.

This exhibitor isn't going to worry greatly this year.

The market bugaboos—of high rentals, producer owned theatres, chain theatre competition, etc., look much less formidable to him.

Of course he's going to be up on his toes in all other respects. He won't be caught napping with respect to the size and comfort of his house, his projection, his music.

But he knows mighty well that in his advertising resources he is possessed of a redoubtable fortress. He isn't helpless before a shot from any quarter. He has solid ground under him. His defenses are secure.

Just so long as he can book such pictures—and his common sense tells him that plenty will be produced right along from all quarters, because there is plenty of demand for them—his advertising ability will put them over. And, secure in this knowledge he won't be unjustly dictated to by any one. He won't be cornered into submission. He snaps his fingers at monopoly. He's his own boss.

He reads about the owner of a chain of theatres, who cannot add others faster than good managers can be secured. And he smiles complacently. For he knows that the dearth of good managers is largely due and always will be due to the dearth of advertising ability.

Such an exhibitor is the mainstay of this business—and always will be.

Just as advertising is a central factor, so also is he, through his advertising ability.

He doesn't have to have pictures laid down upon his doorstep: he goes after them—with an advertising eye. He doesn't have to rely wholly upon what advertising facilities are given him: he adds his own. In a pinch he can rely wholly upon himself. His power is within himself, not in the other fellows' hands altogether; and that power is the advertising hold he has upon the public—whence comes the money that oils the wheels of this whole industry.

The producer prefers to play ball with this exhibitor; at least he will if he foresees his best interests.

Said the London manager of a string of British theatres, the other day: "A year ago I showed so-and-so pictures. They're good pictures. I wanted them. But they got uppish and told me I couldn't get along without them." The London manager thumped the desk: "That wasn't true. It won't ever be true in the picture business. You may bet your last sovereign on that!"

"I booked other pictures—selecting here and there—and advertised them. I worked harder, too—but this year we are making twice as much money as last year."

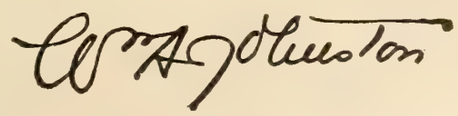
Every exhibitor in the United States—every exhibitor of pictures the world over—has this very same power.

But like any power it is not to be wielded unwisely. It is the exhibitor's protection; but it cannot be made his weapon of destruction.

Prices must be fair in this business. Good picture advertising follows upon good pictures and the man who makes good pictures deserves his share of the box-office returns of the advertising.

Good pictures must be encouraged just as good advertising must be encouraged.

You can never separate, in this or any other field the mutual interests of the makers and dispensers of the goods advertised. These mutual interests demand, exist and thrive upon mutual fairness.



Speaking Editorially

The Question Is Answered This Year

THE exhibitor who asks on another page of this issue, "Just what is a 'Special'?" won't have to worry about the answer this year. Open booking means that this year a "Special" will have to be a "Special" before it earns extra rental.

In the past, this exhibitor declares, he found it impossible to tell just what a "Special" was. The tendency of the advertising was to label many productions "Special" which did not seem to merit that honor when he placed them on his screen.

And then, he says, "Our customers were displeased. We have charged them advance prices for a picture that was in no respect better than we showed the night before at regular prices."

"The exhibitor in Chicago, Milwaukee, and Minneapolis," he continues, "has the opportunity of seeing his pictures before he buys them. Then it is up to him and if he makes a mistake he is to blame. But we smaller exhibitors cannot do this. It is entirely out of the question for us to go to the exchanges and see the pictures. We have to rely on someone else and the advertising of the exchange—and believe me, here is where we get it good."

The coming Fall season finds the distributors working two and three months and even further in advance of schedules. Already the exchanges of one or two corporations are prepared to show productions scheduled for the month of September.

The beneficial results of this will be found all along the line. In the first place, distributors will not be advertising productions as "Specials" before the picture has really reached the laboratory. And with pictures more than ever "on their merits" they are going to be jealous of the advertising veracity—for the good and selfish reason that overadvertising on a poor subject will work incalculable harm to the good subject that follows it on the release schedule.

In addition, with productions ready to view in the exchanges, the big first run exhibitors will make their bookings much further in advance than has been the case with the "Specials" in the past. Their actions will serve as a guide to the smaller man unable to reach his exchange center.

It remains for the trade publication to carry this booking news to the exhibitors in these smaller centers. In fact, this is but one of the ways in which the need for a good trade paper as a working tool will be emphasized during the coming twelve months.

Motion Picture News will do its share. Both by continual improvements in the News as you see it today and by additions of new departments we will strive to keep pace with the heavy demands of the industry.

Count on us.

He Sums Up the Case

"SO far as I am concerned," continues the exhibitor quoted above, "I am done with 'Specials' until I see them. The best salesman on earth will fail to sell me a 'Special' until I see it—then it is my fault if I go wrong."

And in these words are summed up the reasons that are responsible for the industrial revolution that we are witnessing this year. The thoughts of this exhibitor are echoed by thousands—and their loud cry is the cause for "policy announcements" and other efforts to clear the dust and start anew.

A Few of the Reasons

"I KNOW why the News is the strongest paper," says an advertising manager.

"Because it is fearless!"

Yes, that's one reason.

The Complete Plan Book is another. Many a theatre books by it and advertises by it. Many a newspaper uses it to help exhibitors prepare their advertising.

The Exhibitor Service Bureau is another reason. The News is stronger just as this department is better than any other Service Bureau. And every exhibitor knows it!

The News is strongest because the exhibitors say it is.

Ask them.

A Constructive Suggestion Here

H. H. JAMES, manager of the Dixie theatre, Senath, Missouri, describes himself as "A newspaper man by choice and a theatre manager by accident." A constructive suggestion is contained in a letter we have just received from him.

"I was attracted by your editorial, 'Where Are the Men?'" he writes. "The part that appealed to me was the matter of advertising men for the exchanges. No one realizes this need more than the small town exhibitor. Of necessity he must be careful with his expenditures along this line and the co-operation he receives from the exchanges is nil.

"Apparently because he cannot pay the price the city man does for his service he is given no consideration whatever—except promises. We believe that a man who understood small town conditions could handle two or three hundred accounts in an exchange and give a service that would make the exhibitors willing to pay a little extra for pictures to get the service.

"But we have had so many promises and so little results that we are skeptical of them now. We expect to see some live-wire exchange manager try out a plan based on this theory some day before the industry is many years older."

Continuing his letter along another line suggested by an editorial in the same issue, Mr. James declares:

"I believe you have hit the nail on the head in your editorial, 'Listen for the Cry of Help.' As an exhibitor I have carefully watched the pictures that have been adapted from stories and stage success and if I am a judge there is something lacking about them that you do not find in the specially written scenarios.

"Too much is left for the imagination of the person, seemingly on the theory that 'you have read the story.' Then again there is the weaving in the picture of things that are foreign to the story so that the person who has read the story does not enjoy the picture.

"In conclusion allow me to add a line of appreciation for the new size of Motion Picture News. The improvement is very great in my estimation—especially from the point of its better size for advertising purposes."

Two Sides of the Street

"THERE'S another side to all this exhibitor belly-aching that we read in the trade papers," said a sales manager to us this week.

"We had a star series customer out in a mid-West town who by continual squawking and weeping had secured two reductions in his original contract rental of three hundred dollars. When he asked for a further cut of fifty dollars I thought I'd hold it up until I was in his vicinity myself and look the ground over at first hand.

"I did. For an hour I swam in his tears and lamentations. Finally I gave it up and said, 'No two men can see any picture alike. You can't seem to see these pictures our way. I guess I'll go across the street and find out how your competitor sees them.'

"Fifteen minutes later I had the competitor's signed contract for the subjects at a four hundred dollar rental. And the competitor said that the original contract customer had been cleaning up on the series and killing all competition.

"Can you beat it?"

Clip This—You Can Use It

THE Scientific American declares: "Moving pictures, under favorable conditions, do not cause as much fatigue of the eyes as the same period of concentrated reading. When there is eye discomfort there is usually some ocular defect which should receive the attention of the eye specialist."

A Record Breaking Service Bureau This Week—Nineteen Big Pages of Exhibitor Helps.

Dealing in Personalities

GOSH, boys, but the scramble seems to be hot and heavy for the honor of being "the only daily newspaper published in the film industry."

Two contenders are already battling strenuously for the honors. We have another entrant to present to the gaping public.

On behalf of Mr. Muschenheim, ladees and gentulmen, we beg to offer for your consideration—

"The Hotel Astor Daily Menu."

The oldest daily publication in the motion picture business, brethren! The only daily publication in the business that is sure to be read every day by every prominent figure in the game! Short, crisp and to-the-point! All press agent hot air printed in French so that it doesn't bother the reader!

Reach the big film men at their most appreciative moments! Reach them when unguarded and almost human! Dodge the mail clerks and private secretaries!

Take a one-line red ink space in our "Ready Entrees" department for your program productions! Or a neat ad under our "Specials" heading for your extraordinary attractions! And how about our "Ice Creams and Desserts" department for your bathing girl comedies?

And then for good measure—

Accompanied on the trap drum by the loud bleating of the goat.

GUESS it must be the hot weather and the continual rains that are affecting the writers of house copy. Though the weather can't produce half the effect on the readers that the aforementioned house copy does.

Another writer of house copy gets all heated up over our declaration that in a recent test by a prominent company the voting resulted three to one in MOTION PICTURE NEWS' favor.

He scrambles all around from six point to seventy-two point in his indignation. Gets out a private adding machine and perspires dreadfully over figures. And all in all, furnishes some very interesting reading. Most interesting, in fact, but—but—BUT—

It must produce a wry smile on the faces of the advertising managers of three or four prominent companies that have just completed their own tests of trade paper strength.

And the tests count.

For one thing, they are not affected by the weather.

Aaron Jones, of Chicago, who was in New York this week attending the First National conference, was called back to Chicago on Monday on account of the death of his mother. His associates expressed the deepest sympathy—and this is shared by the entire industry.

THE conference of First National directors in New York this week should bring forth some interesting news. But as the conference is one of those "quiet business-like affairs," we probably won't get the news until next week or later.

Of one thing we have been assured—the news will concern pictures and not policies. There is a rumor that the circuit may take over the distribution of the Katherine MacDonald specials being piloted by Bernie Fineman and one or two "Specials" are expected in the announcements.

J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe are representing the home office at the meetings, while the circuit directors present include President Robert Lieber, Seymour Talley, Nathan Ascher, and M. L. Finkelstein.

Speaking of Bre'er Finkelstein reminds us of a funny story we stumbled on this week. There is a certain film company whose executive head is about as approachable as the topmost peak of the Himalayas. And we had always thought that this applied only to common folks like ourselves. But one day this week we were present in the ante-room and there was M. L. Finkelstein warming a chair. Apparently he had been doing that for some time, because we arrived just as Mr. Finkelstein was saying, "Well, if he can't see me I can't wait." Ye gods! If we were heading a film company and Mr. Finkelstein wanted to call on us, we'd send an auto to the station to meet him.

WE knew we'd have to save a page this week for another chapter in that exhibitor wrangle. The "final" statement of last week has brought forth another statement from the Exhibitors' Association side of the fence that will probably result in another chapter for next week.

And so it goes.

Another interesting bit of exhibitor news this week is the fact that Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, has vetoed the "advance deposit bill" which would have required distributors to place bonds with the State Censor Board for all deposits which they hold.

For a time it looked as though the Pennsylvania exhibitors had succeeded in slipping this bill through to the statute books. But eleventh hour work by the National Association gained the victory. The national exhibitor organization took no part in the fight.

Now we'll watch for another state to bring up the same bill when next year's legislatures convene. For it seems sure that this sort of legislation will continue to crop up from year to year.

Arthur Fox James entertained the boys at a luncheon this week, Mrs. Rector's dining-room being the place. And as part of the luncheon Arthur announced that Fox productions for two and three months ahead were already in the exchanges and prepared to show to exhibitors. This seems to be the style this year, and, believe us, it's a mode that is going to be popular with the exhibitors. After the luncheon a program of Fox productions was shown. And each afternoon for the balance of the week will see another show.

PARAMOUNT comes into the B. S. Moss Broadway next week, we understand, previous contracts making it necessary for the Bathing Girls to leave long before they had outworn their welcome. In fact, we are also told that the Bathing Girls may return later in the season.

Friends in the vaudeville field tell us that the B. S. Moss-Paramount plans through the Hamilton Corporation call for something new in the way of entertainment. "If they carry through their plans," said one authority, "they are going to give us something that will go over like a house afire.

"The plan, as I understand it, is a sort of development of the music and vaudeville sides of such programs as that of the Strand in combination with big pictures. It will bring us back to the old days when Europe was scoured for high-class novelty acts. The best of these acts fit into picture programs and form a type of entertainment that will appeal not only to picture-goers, but to a large class that at present isn't reached by screen entertainment."

These are interesting words.

Charles Van Horn has bought a monkey. We have it on the best of authority. And we are also told emphatically that he is not training the monkey to issue interviews for the trade press. Nor is the monkey being prepared to rival Universal's Joe Martin. No, from all we can gather, it's just a plain ordinary every-day monkey.

BILL REQUIRING DEPOSIT BY DISTRIBUTORS VETOED

VETO of the Soffel Bill by Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania is acclaimed a victory by the National Association. This bill, passed in the final legislative rush, required the licensing of all distributers of films in Pennsylvania and would force such to file a bond in double the amount of deposits received from exhibitors.

The N. A. M. P. I. declares co-ordinated action of exhibitors and exchange men resulted in the veto of the bill.

I KNOW no selling tricks and only one rule.

I think it is a good rule, for it has made many millions of dollars for me in the last thirty years.

It is: "Let the other fellow make a profit."

Let us see how and why it works.

The "profit" does not have to be in money; in retailing it may and usually will, be in satisfaction or in longer use. It may be in service, which word I take to mean the demonstrating of full use—sometimes the service will consist of teaching how to make a profit.

But in any event, to buy from you through a period of years, a man must have a substantial reason, not based on friendship or on any other purely personal characteristic. The best and most substantial reason is so to give him his money's worth that he finds it more profitable to trade with you than with anyone else.

I began selling at the age of seven—not because I had to support myself, or a widowed mother, or anything of the kind. I have no harrowing tale. I sold because I wanted to. We lived in Portland, Maine; my father, while not rich, had money enough to support us comfortably. There was no real reason why I should have done anything myself until I had at least gone through high school.

But I wanted to do something—I detested school and wanted something which would really interest me. I started a newspaper route with four customers. I gained them by offering that, if I served them, they would get their papers exactly on time in the morning—I heard several grumble about their papers being late. My selling instinct told me that if I got mine served on time I should cut out the boys who did not care when they attended to their customers.

My list grew quickly and I watched for ways to improve the service—of course I had never heard of the word "service." One woman told me that she would rather have her paper handed to her in person, so that there could be no danger of it getting lost; another complained one day that her paper was soiled. Straightway I asked each of my customers if they would prefer to have thir papers personally handed to them and I told the news company that I would not accept dirty, ill-printed copies.

Without knowing it by name, I was giving quality service in newspapers—something which had never been done. My route grew and grew, and then I began to wonder if the same idea could not be applied to another line. I had saved $40 and was in the way of a capitalist looking about for a place to put his money. Also, although I was regularly, if reluctantly going to school, I had too much leisure.

I overheard my father and mother talking about the row that was being raised all over town on account of the dairyman who had been caught putting water in the milk. Milk was then selling at 6 cents a quart. People would not pay more for newspapers just because they were clean and well served—the price was standard. But would they not pay more for a good quality of milk, well served?

I did not know anything about running a dairy, but I founded one by putting my $40 into the purchase of a cow. Being nine and a capitalist, I looked only at results; and thinking only of results I led my cow home. My father did not discourage me; instead, he let me keep the cow in the stable and thus I avoided overhead expense.

As luck would have it, the cow was a good milker; the milk was very rich and I sold it just as it was with all the cream on it. I asked 10 cents a quart and got it. The neighbors were my first customers, but they quickly advertised me and soon I found that I could use another cow.

My first cow had been well fattened up on the care I had given her and did not look at all like the animal I had bought. I traded her and $10 for two cows which were healthy enough, but run down. Young as I was, I now knew enough to judge what a cow would be worth when properly cared for. I gave plenty of feed and during the good weather took them out to pasture in the afternoons when school was over.

Soon these cows were giving quality milk and my sales went on increasing. I did not then deliver milk. My customers had to come after it, but the quality was so good that they were willing to stand both the higher price and the inconvenience, which only goes to show that a business founded on value does not have to know many selling tricks. That milk sold itself—and any good product will.

My business increased; I traded one of my cows and a little cash for two more cows and went on in this way until, when I was 14, I had nine cows and had outgrown the home stable. So I rented a stable of my own. I did all the work except that my mother helped with the milking and I may say that my days were fairly full—with delivering my papers, milking and looking after the cows and finally serving the milk. As my customers increased, I had requisitioned my father's horse and wagon for the milk route.

A Record-Breaking Service Bureau This Week.

Nineteen Big Pages of Exhibitors' Helps.

Still I had some spare time, and in order to fill that up I bought a restaurant!

Perhaps restaurant is too big a word; there was no shaded table lights or snowy linen. In fact I had neither tables nor linen of any kind, only a counter and some stools. I hired a helper to look after the place while I was at school, but I was always there in my spare time.

The life of a restaurateur did not appeal to me; very soon I realized that my lines were cut out for more active selling and I did not know enough about food or what people wanted. I did not lose money, but on the other hand, I did not make any and when, after a year a man offered to buy me out, I sold—and for quite a little more than I had paid. Certainly I proved a far better success at selling restaurants than I did at selling meals.

When I was 15 years of age, I think I had gone through more than the usual selling experience. Out of it all I had gained one big fixed idea—the other fellow must have a good reason for buying from you and the best possible reason is that he gets the most for his money from you. I had no tricks nor stunts and I was not a salesman in the ordinary sense of being able to talk people into buying.

In selling newspapers and in selling milk it was what I sold and not I that did the talking. I then had more than $2,000 in the bank and I had made every cent of it myself—a fairly good record, I pride myself, for a youngster of 15 who had just passed from the grammar school.

School made no appeal to me—but there are many times when I wish it had.

I wanted to try myself out in a regular job and my father gave his permission. The only job that Portland offered at the moment was collector for an instalment house. I now know that practically anyone at any time anywhere can get a job collecting for an instalment house. It is supposed to be rough work and just one half-step removed from having no job at all.

The firm offered me a choice of $14 a week, or a commission basis without salary, or even a drawing account. The list which I was to canvass ran through Maine and Vermont. The program was that I should visit the 300 people on my list—they were scattered through Maine and Vermont—each month and get $1 from each of them.

I studied the situation. My newspaper and milk routes had taught me something of the value of time. Also, I thought I knew something of the class of people who would buy on the instalment plan. I felt that they were mostly honest and that none of them would be "fly by nights," for Maine and Vermont get few of that type. The $14 a week was not enough money for me; on the commission basis I might earn $30 a week if I had luck in collections and could cover the whole route each month.

I took the commission basis and then dumbfounded the firm by turning in at once $1,500 in cash out of my own pocket; this was an advance payment by me of five months for each of my debtors. My big idea was that I could collect $5 in one call instead of in five. Then I asked the firm for a selling job to put in my spare time; I got it.

My estimate of the debtors' willingness to pay was correct. I got all my money back and also I made out very well indeed on my sales. The firm offered me a bigger job, but I was not convinced that it was the best to be had for the money; and the future did not seem very big. I have never stayed in anything for any time which did not offer a steadily growing future and I believe firmly that the true sales instinct will prevent a good man from remaining in any job where there is an easily recognized limit to his value.

And so I went down to Boston and started selling skirts for a firm. Selling skirts to retailers proved to be quite the same as selling newspapers or milk. What the customers wanted was good stuff on which they could make money.

I found out many things on my first trip as a salesman to the trade. The first was that waists were ever so much easier to sell; or rather, one could sell more of them than skirts. The second fact was that quite a few of the people on whom I called had been overstocked by golden-tongued salesmen to such an extent that they could not even hope to get their money out before the style had passed.

These merchants sometimes showed me these stocks and said that they would like to buy from me had they not bought too heavily of someone else. And I noticed that nearly always they blamed the goods and not the quantity they had bought—although often that which they had bought was very good and they had really sold as much of it as their market could readily take.

I convinced my house that it would be better to make waists than skirts and I convinced myself that selling the right quantity is just as important as selling the right quality.

The waists we made were of the first quality and we put fair prices on them—prices at which the retailers could make a fair profit. But obeying the lesson which I had learned on my first trip I never sold to a man without first having a knowledge of how much he ought to buy.

I sleuthed about to discover the kind of trade the merchant had; in the course of conversation I got him to tell me the results of his best years in waists—the biggest quantities he had ever bought and how they had sold. Also I walked around through the neighborhoods and learned of the general prosperity and capacity of the community—my ideas were crude at first but they were better than none.

In time I really knew by rule of thumb just about how big a stock any of the smaller merchants should buy. Then I took pains never to sell more than the quantity I thought my man should have.

It is hard not to oversell, for one cannot put brakes on himself without the danger of underselling. So, when I found that I had sold more than the limit, I first booked the order and then talked my man back to the limit—usually on the ground that our demand was so heavy that it might be better to take a smaller lot now and give a second order later.

I had to use care in thus paring sales, for sometimes the suspicion arose that I doubted his credit or was interfering with his business, and this would hurt his mercantile pride. A few I told the exact reasons and those men appreciated my looking out for them as well as for myself.

"System" gave us a free ad which we appreciate when they used this photo showing the famous orange cover in its bestowed place

But it took some time to convince my employers that such a thing as selling too much could be possible! They were not that far advanced.

But by insisting always upon the firm making a good article my sales total formed my best argument in the home office and, although they may have thought I was insane, they let me do as I liked.

I spent two years with this house. When I started with it the shop had six machines; when I left there were 125 machines and the firm was getting more. My own earnings went from the $20 on which I started, to $150 a week. And I was not yet of age.

My father was not keen about my traveling. He did not want to oppose me, but he felt (I now know) that I was making too much money for a youngster and he was afraid that I would get my head turned. And I was in a fair way of getting a swelled head. Making a lot of money for any kind of a salesman in those days, I spent it just as freely. Before I started on the road I had saved every penny, but at the end of my waist selling I had no money at all. And I was feeling none too well.

I was hanging around at home after a trip which had been very successful and on which I had both made and spent a considerable amount of money. My father, apparently very innocently, asked me:

"Going out soon again?"

"Yes," I answered, "in about a week—just as soon as I have rested a little."

"I suppose you have a nice bank account now with all the money you have been making?" he went on casually.

"No," I confessed, "I haven't any."

"You could have had that much if you'd stayed home, couldn't you?"

He made his point. I had not before looked at it quite that way; I had been too busy selling and planning for more sales.

I gave up my job and started west just to build myself up physically, so that I could take a fresh start and then keep going in a common-sense way. I went out to Colorado and for a year punched cows at $30 a month. I came back hard as nails and ready to work like a real human being.

Advertising had played no part in my previous selling. You must remember that I was self-taught and had never had the advantage of good sales instruction. What I knew, I myself had learned from observation of rather poor salesmen; no firstclass salesmen were in any of my districts and my methods were largely founded on avoiding the wrong acts which the others did—principally in the way of foisting off poor merchandise and of overselling.

This was just the time when the talking machine came on the market in an earnest way. A company was putting out a great amount of splendid advertising. I thought the article filled a need and I also felt that with such advertising the salesman ought to have it fairly easy.

But the talking machine idea was so novel that both the public and the salesman shied away from it. I had no trouble in landing a job, but I did have trouble in making sales on account of the extraordinary difficulty in getting people interested enough even to submit to a demonstration. They judged in advance that the apparatus must fail—for how could a machine talk or give music? I saw that I had to stage something dramatic.

I rented the Infantry Hall in Providence and advertised a series of free concerts. Then I collected about 15 salesmen and put them into dress suits. We had the hall decorated as for a big ball and in every way tried to convince the public that something of a quality nature was coming off. The people came slowly; the first day we had hardly 50, but within three days they were drifting in by the hundreds and selling themselves on the talking machine.

Around the hall I had various models and salesmen were ready to explain—but not to sell. I issued instructions that absolutely no orders were to be taken—so that the people might attend the concerts without the fear of being bothered to buy.

The salesmen were told that if anybody evidenced enough interest and said he would like to buy, an appointment for a private demonstration could be made and that demonstration was not to take place in the hall; it might be given in the sales offices, or better, in the home.

The news that no machines could be bought at the exhibition seemed to whet the appetite for demonstrations, and holding these privately gave such an advantage that not a single private demonstration missed fire. Each one resulted in a sale.

Had these demonstrations been given in the hall, we should not only have wasted time with many curiosity seekers, but also the agent in the course of the day would have tired and been unable to complete his sales. Crowds gather about public demonstrations and the prospect has a chance to get away—you cannot refuse to answer questions from the crowd, but those questions may easily unsettle your prospect.

I carried that same plan all over New England and soon had that territory the best sold in the country. The idea was very simple and in line with my old thought, except that here I let the other fellow make sure that the machine would give a profit in pleasure before even permitting him to be sold.

"Sticking" a single person with a machine that he did not want, or with one more expensive than he could well afford, would have done us immense harm. Getting an interested prospect aside, the salesman sold exactly what was required.

It is hard to prevent salesmen from selling too expensive a machine when they get a commission on the amount and I had a deal of trouble in telling my own people that a sale may be too big to be profitable. But I kept hammering and I got it over.

The biggest part of a sales manager's job, it has always seemed to me, is seeing that his men sell properly; I have always made it a point to know, just as intimately as when I was actually selling in it myself, the territory that I managed. This has been my policy simply that I might be able to spot sales that seemed too big.

The "hurrah stuff" is all right in its way; and the piles of orders look nice. But the best trade is

J. B. GARDNER, who is now managing the Gem and Scenic Theatres, Sandpoint, Idaho, formerly managed the Sunset Theatre, Astoria, Oregon.

He entered the picture business in 1910, and for three years was chief mechanic with the Canadian Film Exchange, having headquarters at Calgary, Alberta.

"Conditions in Sandpoint at present are O. K." reports Mr. Gardner, who then adds, "I believe they would be the same in most places if small town managers would give their patrons big town pictures, together with house comforts, etc. Small town critics are greater critics than those in the bigger places. They are human—but all from Missouri.

"Motion Picture News is just so big in my eyes that it is my Bible. Keep up the good work. You sure are on the right road and we wish you success."

H. BLUECHEL replied to one question we asked him recently by saying, "What I think of Motion Picture News can be summed up in four words, 'It is a Headliner.'"

Mr. Bluechel started in the picture business three years ago with the Lyric, a small house seating three hundred in Norfolk, Nebraska. Later he acquired the Auditorium, seating eight hundred, and for a time he conducted both theatres. Recently he disposed of the smaller house to give all of his time to the Auditorium.

Norfolk is a town of ten thousand, with healthy business conditions, with good surrounding territory to draw from. Manager Bluechel is catering to a discriminating audience which demands the best. "But when I give the best there is to be had on the market they are willing to pay the price," he declares.

ASHLAND, Wisconsin, has an enterprising exhibitor in the person of Abe Latts, who runs all the shows in the town, consisting of The Bijou and Majestic, running motion pictures, and the Royal, a combination house showing pictures, vaudeville, and the best of the road attractions.

The Royal seats eight hundred, being a seventy thousand dollar theatre building, modern in every respect. The Majestic has a seating capacity of five hundred.

Manager Latts runs all the big features and finds that his local patrons are willing to pay for the better features. At the Royal and the Majestic he maintains a five piece orchestra, but at the Bijou, which is a third class picture house, he runs with piano music showing sensational pictures to a standard admission scale of ten and fifteen cents. The other houses show to a twenty-five cent top.

J. A. JONES is managing the Isis and the Bonita theatres at Pensacola, Florida, two units in the Saenger Amusement Company chain. Plans have already been submitted for a third house.

The houses are run on a straight motion picture policy, with appropriate musical settings, a six piece orchestra and pipe organ being used. Manager Jones reports that conditions have returned to a peace-time basis and then adds:

"In years past I have thought it necessary to subscribe to all the trade journals to secure necessary information regarding the latest doings pertaining to the motion picture industry. I have learned of late that the Motion Picture News covers the field in its entirety about as extensively as an exhibitor cares to, or even hopes to learn of the activities in this direction.

IN the panel above, gentlemen, you meet for the first time Messrs. Rickards and Nace, of Phoenix, Arizona. We say "for the first time" but our words refer only to the photographs, for the doings of Rickard and Nace have made good trade paper reading on many occasions during the years past.

Rickards and Nace are "sure-enough" old-timers, for Jo Rickards has been in the film game for seventeen years now, while his partner, Harry Nace, has taken film out of the can for to-day's show for twelve years.

The Strand, LaMara, and Hip Theatres are now being conducted by the firm together with Riverside Park with an outdoor theatre. Plans are already under way for another addition to the string. Conditions are reported as excellent in the Phoenix houses. Concerning Motion Picture News Harry Nace declared recently, "We could not keep house without it."

G. A. LOVELAND is the pioneer exhibitor in Colorado Springs, Col. He is conducting the Odeon Theatre, with a seating capacity of one thousand. This house was built eight years ago.

Recently a new ten thousand dollar organ was installed in the Odeon, together with a twin six foot Typhoon Fan, which shows that Manager Loveland is keeping his house well up to the mark. Two Simplex machines are also a part of the Odeon equipment, and a new electric converter is about to be installed.

Mr. Loveland is showing Metro All-Star pictures, and the Nazimova specials, Universal Special Attractions and Jewels, Robertson-Cole specials released through Exhibitors' Mutual, and specials from the Film Clearing House, Triangle and World.

JAMES VELAS started in the motion picture business in 1904—which is going back some for even the oldest pioneers in our midst. At that time he had a house with a capacity of eighty seats.

Today Mr. Velas is managing the Liberty Theatre, of Wheeling, W. Va., a house seating fourteen hundred, and one of the best show places in the Ohio valley. He also runs the Lyric theatre, Wheeling, and the Family, Bridgeport, Ohio.

"Conditions today are ideal," declares Mr. Velas, "especially when I think back to the days when I started in this business. We are running all the big attractions at our theatres, including First National, Goldwyn, Exhibitors Mutual and the specials that some along from time to time. Too much cannot be said of Motion Picture News. It has certainly been a big help to me."

A PAGE OF SNAPPY READING

They Never "Give Up"

Once an Exchange Gets Hold of the Money It's Gone

I READ with interest the story from an exhibitor which you called, "THIS BOY IS SORE," and also the next exhibitors grunt, "SOAK 'EM AGAIN BOYS." When I read the comment the NEWS made on "THIS BOY IS SORE," it appeared to me that the commentator thought there was just a grouch in the game who wanted to throw off something, but I felt just like the poor exhibitor about the matter.

What I cannot understand about the Film Exchanges is why they will not refund one cent of the exhibitors money, no matter how they get hold of it. Is it a solemn oath that they have taken, with their hands on the Bible, and face toward Heaven, that "no matter how money comes into their possession, it must not leave them?" Why the idea almost knocked me down when our first experience came along. I never heard of an established wholesale house in any line of business that would not refund by return mail, either in cash, stamps or check, even a 10 cent overpayment, but it looks like in the film business, the exchanges, most of them will offer to give credit, send films or apply on something else, but never under the Canopy of Heaven did we ever hear of one offering to refund an overcharge.

I do not believe that fundamentally, the film exchanges mean to do the exhibitor this way. I do not believe their owners expect the various managers to hook and croo' i every conceivable manner, the exhibitor's money, it appears to me to be a case of careless, indifferent, inefficient shipping clerks and bookkeepers in most instances.

Here is what gets my "Goat." You can pay for a program two weeks in advance, then some shipping clerk sends it COD, and if you pay the COD, you can just bet that your check will not be returned in money. You may get the account, adjusted, but it will be in film rental.

I call to mind one exchange that never fails to send a program COD, no matter if paid for six months in advance. One time the COD was paid, after that it was refused on every occasion, a wire sent collect, and a release of COD always made, costing the exchange from $2.00 to $5.00 every time, absolutely unnecessary expense, but they continue to do it. Why?

There are hundreds of unreasonable exhibitors among us. They expect the Exchanges to issue them six months credit, let them cancel a picture the day before showing, and then get their deposit back, or applied on another picture, and all such "Buncoe" as that, and they are dead wrong, and it is also dead wrong for the exchanges, some of them to try to jumble up your account and overcharge, with never a correction coming your way.

There should be a system in vogue, that is fair and square to all who wish to be that way, and to the crook, a system that will make him come clean.

Censors Attack "John Barleycorn" Picture—Edna Goodrich Goes from Stage to Screen

THE Eclectic Film Company has put over another scoop in securing all future issues of "Colonel Heeza Liar" the famous series of America cartoon comedies by F. R. Bray.

Alco Film Company announces that its first release will be September 1, and that they will introduce Carlyle Blackwell in "The Key To Yesterday."

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces Robert Edeson in "The Call of the North," by George Broadhurst from the novel "Conjuror's House" by Stuart Edward White. Five acts and 317 scenes. Jesse Lasky, President; Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager; Cecil De Mills, director general.

Pennsylvania and Ohio censors attack "John Barleycorn"—film. One of the scenes ordered cut was the carousal in Japan. They had to cut out some of the drinking scenes in saloons also. Even some of the drinking scenes aboard the yacht had to be cut to appease many of the finicky censors.

Censors in Pennsylvania threaten to start censoring the titles of films and also the size of posters in the near future.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is an uneven one. John Fox, Jr., Charles Scribner's Sons and Klaw and Erlanger have secured an injunction against the Broadway Picture Production Company prohibiting the latter concern from filming this subject.

Edna Goodrich has been engaged to act for the screen by the Lasky Company.

Florence La Badie, the heroine of that serial "The Million Dollar Mystery" leaped into the water last week from that leviathan the George Washington as it steamed past Sandy Hook. This stunt excited the passengers.

Edwin S. Porter, technical director, and Hugh Ford of the directing staff, Famous Players Film Company, have returned from a four months trip through Europe. Their first picture is "The Eternal City" starring Pauline Frederick. They have filmed scenes in Rome including the Vatican and the Coliseum.

WHAT WAS YOUR FIRST

THE photo above shows the "Pictural Palace" which D. J. Shepherd conducted in Elizabeth, New Jersey, some fifteen years or so ago.

Mr. Shepherd, in combination with George W. Cuff, now runs the U. S. Palace theatre and the Colonial theatre, in Orange, New Jersey—two of the best residential district houses in the East.

He sure must get a laugh when he looks at this photo and back to the old days when he had to "bark" to get 'em in. "The men were easy," he says, "but I had a hard time convincing the women that a picture show was something they could attend."

Have you a photo of one of your early houses?

Send it along—and tell us some of the funny reminiscences of those days. Let's have a story-telling bee.

We'll take good care of your photo if it's a precious memory that you are saving.

What is a "Special?"

This Exhibitor Wants to Know Because He Can't Believe the Ads

WHAT is a "Special?"

My reason for asking this is that it is a matter of, to my mind, great importance to the exhibitor of the smaller towns.

The exhibitor in Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, etc., has the opportunity of seeing his pictures before he buys them. Then it is up to him and if he makes a mistake he is to blame.

But we smaller exhibitors cannot do this. It is entirely out of the question for us to go to the exchanges and see the pictures. We have to rely on someone else and the advertising of the exchange—and, believe me, here is where we get it good.

It is the custom for practically every exchange to advertise with a great flourish their "Specials," and charge at least double price for them. When we buy them and find they are just ordinary program pictures—and I can name a number that are just that—we are the "goats." Our customers are displeased. We have charged them advanced prices for a picture that was in no respect better than we showed the night before at regular prices.

In my opinion, a special is a picture which the ordinary patron, sitting in his seat, can see is unusual—bigger, more expensive—that he can see why he was charged an advanced price to see. And if he cannot see this it is not a special, should be shown at an ordinary price and not charged double to the exhibitor.

So far as I am concerned, I am done with "specials" until I see them. The best salesman that ever lived will fail to sell me a special until I see it—then it is my fault if I go wrong.

Truly yours,

W. D. MARTIN,
Badger Theatre,
Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Allen Interests Invade the United States

Controllers of Big Canadian Enterprises Are Erecting Theatres in Cleveland and Also in Detroit; Further Expansion Rumor

AN announcement that is likely to have an important effect in the motion picture exhibition field comes this week with the statement of Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen that the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Toronto, will immediately enter the American field. Detroit and Cleveland are the cities picked for their first theatres in the United States and they promise that these will go a step beyond any motion picture houses in existence.

Not only are the Allens the dominant factor in the Canadian field with forty-five first class houses in actual operation and many more in construction, but they are among the largest exhibitors, both from point of view of size and importance of the theatres in the entire world.

Messrs. Jule, Jay J. and Barney Allen

Theatres in Erection

In addition to the American houses there are under construction, to be opened before the end of the year, a dozen more theatres in Canada, and by spring this will be so greatly increased that they will have in operation a first run house in every principal Canadian city from British Columbia to Nova Scotia.

Everything is ready for the actual construction of the two American houses. The Cleveland house will be begun within the next two weeks and the Detroit theatre only a few days later. The Cleveland theatre will seat 3,000 and the investment will represent an even million dollars. The Detroit theatre proper will be even larger, seating 3,500, and making it one of the three largest in the world. Building alone will cost in excess of $600,000. Both of these theaters will bear the name of the owners and be known as the Allen.

Negotiations for the erection of these two houses have been under way for some weeks, but the Allens have been desirous of securing the choicest locations and they believe that they have succeeded in getting the very best, though in both cases they had to overcome serious competition. The Detroit house will occupy the Chalmers property on Woodward avenue, the main street and the sole thoroughfare that runs the full length of the city and the unquestioned center of business and civic life. It will be located between Watson and Erskine streets and directly opposite the New Orchestra Hall, which is being erected by wealthy Detroit citizens as the city's home of good music.

In Cleveland the Allen theatre will be built on Euclid avenue, the principal street, directly at the intersection of Huron Road, and immediately opposite the Hanna building, which will be the city's newest and handsomest office structure. This location is declared by Cleveland real estate men to be the best in the city, and this is proven by the fact that several amusement interests were seeking it.

C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, is the architect for both of the houses. He is easily one of the foremost designers of theatres in the country, and it is significant when he stands sponsor for the statement that these two theatres have given him the opportunity to create what he believes to be the ultimate in motion picture house construction. He has been given a free hand to create the ideal in cinema exhibition institutions, the owners, only instructions being that they should set a new record for the world. It is interesting to note that Mr. Crane has prepared the plans for all of the new Allen theatres.

Strikingly large lobbies will be provided in both theatres and these will have the character of Palm Gardens with great elliptical glass covered roofs through which all sorts of lighting effects may be obtained. It is said that a new record has been made in the provision of rest and recreation rooms. There will be elaborate retiring rooms for the ladies, strikingly designed smoking rooms for the men, play rooms for the children, first aid departments, and in fact every conven-

THE ALLEN'S STRING

SOME of the principal houses now in operation are: Allen, Allen's Beaver, Allen's Bloor Street, Allen's Royal, in Toronto; Regent, Ottawa; Majestic, London; Temple, Hamilton; Windsor, Windsor; Allen and Roma, Kitchener; Allen and New Grand, Montreal; Allen and Auditorium, Quebec; Province, Dominion, Gaiety, Bijou and Rex, Winnipeg; Rex, Dominion, Globe and Broadway, Vancouver; Royal Victoria and Dominion in Nanaimo; Allen in Calgary; Allen and Monarch, Edmonton; Allen and Rex, Regina; Allen, Moose Jaw; Allen, Brandon, and a number of others.

Allen theatres (which are to bear that name) are under construction in Winnipeg, Vancouver, London, Halifax and St. John, together with a handsome new downtown house in Montreal. Besides there are a half dozen neighborhood theatres being built in Toronto and equally handsome structures in a number of other cities.

Crandall Circuit Expanding

Big Washington Exhibitor to Branch Out in Three States and Locally

AN extension of the Crandall theatre interests which will embrace the principal industrial centers of Maryland, is to be made in the near future, while at the same time Harry M. Crandall will increase the group of his Washington houses from the present seven, with an eighth nearing completion, to ten. With these expansions the Crandall circuit will be one of the most powerful in the country.

The only work on theater construction now going on in the National Capital is that which will result in the opening of Crandall's York Theater early this Autumn. The York occupies the entire block between Quebec and Princeton streets, N. W., and when completed will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,000 on one floor. In heating and ventilating systems, decorative scheme, illumination, comfort and appointments, the York will set new standards of motion picture theater design.

The opening of the York will swell the number of Crandall houses in Washington to eight in active operation in various sections of the city—considerably more than twice as many as controlled by any other Washington exhibitor.

On Monday, July 21, the Crandall interests broke ground for the erection of a palatial new theatre in Cumberland, Md., one of the most rapidly expanding industrial cities in the state. The new house will be located at the corner of Pershing and Liberty streets, and has been designed by Reginald W. Geare, the Washington architect who planned and superintended the construction of Crandall's Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theaters. The cost will be $250,000.

Mr. Crandall's new Cumberland enterprise is only the first step in the program of expansion that has been mapped out. Connellsville, Pa., is already represented on the Crandall circuit by the Colonial Theater and numerous other additions will be made as rapidly as new links in the chain can be satisfactorily welded.

Sentiment in Congress Favors Tax Repeal

Congressman Henry T. Rainey of Illinois, a minority member of the House Ways and Means Committee, has declared himself in favor of repealing all the motion picture taxes. He made his position known to representatives of the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.

Other members of Congress who will vote for the repeal are Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, Representatives Melvin O. McLaughlin of Nebraska, Carl Riddick of Montana, Carl Hayden of Arizona, Herbert C. Pell, Jr., of New York City, John H. Small of North Carolina, William B. McKinley of Illinois, Clarence L. Lea of California, and Joseph Rowan of New York City.

Scores of members of both houses expressed their disapproval of the taxes, but are awaiting the preparation of a definite program of repeal by the Ways and Means Committee before deciding how they shall vote.

Denies Sale of Houses to Distributors

Emphatic denial is made by E. H. Hulsey, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Texas, largest individual theatre operator in the southwest, of a report published last week in a vaudeville paper that he had disposed of his theatre interests to Famous Players-Lasky Company or any other group of producer-distributors who were about to enter the exhibiting field.

"Instead of disposing of any of my theatre interests, I am buying industry houses," Mr. Hulsey stated in denying the report.

Alfred S. Black Charges New Yorkers with Bad Faith; Hints That Producing Concern Is Seeking to Make An Exhibitor Split

"UNDERHAND SLURS," fired without a real charge, is the appelation given by Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, to the attacking statement issued last week by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State. Mr. Black's answer, addressed to the exhibitors of America, follows:

"Once more, unfortunately, I am forced to reply to the 'final' open letter of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League. If trade paper controversies are as disgusting to each reader of this article as they are to the writer, you can imagine my personal feelings. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., is not going to be properly financed and its organization perfected by such controversies, but I cannot remain passive under the unwarranted and unproveable accusations of one set of men whose ulterior motives and good faith I now openly question.

"Rule or Ruin"

It is quite apparent that under their "rule or ruin policy" they would much prefer to see every exhibitor in the United States lose the money to be saved by the elimination of unjust taxation than to see the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., get the credit of such elimination, realizing that if we do (and right here, New York State Exhibitors or no New York State Exhibitors, that is just what we are going to do) nothing can prevent the success of our National Organization. Does the N. Y. State Committee realize that their action is giving members of Congress the impression that the exhibitors are divided in obtaining the elimination of unjust taxation.

At the St. Louis Convention, I stated, upon accepting the Presidency, that I would get results and make my promise afterwards, but our campaign for taxation relief is so well under way that we only need the cooperation of the Exhibitors of the United States to win out and I don't propose to have the confidence in our efforts even shaken by methods that are unworthy of the men making such attempt. Under these circumstances may I be pardoned from breaking away just once from my platform?

"The New York letter states that it has never acknowledged our jurisdiction. I openly charge these gentlemen with bad faith, as their representatives entered the convention as members thereof but apparently with instructions to control according to their own ideas or to adopt the "rule or ruin policy" which was immediately done and since carried out.

"Why didn't they act like men and be square with themselves? What has Mr. Cohen and his associates ever done to warrant the confidence of the Exhibitors outside of New York State? I ask them, as a member of this same New York State League, owning a large interest in and representing the Park Theatre in Utica, N. Y., what have they done to help us get open Sundays in Utica since the bill was

Heffernan in Game to Stay

First National Signs Picture Editor of Detroit News, an Industry Booster

AFTER two years of effort successfully applied to convincing the populace of Detroit and the editors of every newspaper in Michigan that the screen deserves the same serious consideration that is given to the legitimate stage, Harold Heffernan—known as "Heff" to every exhibitor and newspaper reader in the state—has resigned as Motion Picture Editor of the Detroit News to become Director of Exploitation for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange in that territory.

Beginning his fight for an intelligent recognition of motion pictures with a column published semi-weekly in the Detroit News, Mr. Heffernan has gradually forced the industry upward in the estimation of the men who control the publicity channels of the state by methods and tactics which established his department as one of the best in the country, until today there is not a representative newspaper in Michigan which has not been encouraged to follow the lead in removing all limits and restrictions from the amount of space devoted to screen news.

Convinced that exhibitors are men of public consequence equal in importance and influence with editors and publishers of newspapers, Mr. Heffernan has proven beyond doubt that this is an essential viewpoint for the editor of any Motion Picture Department in daily if that space contribution to public interest in the industry is to become valuable and influential.

Harry Scott, manager of First National's Michigan exchange created the Department of Exploitation and finally induced Mr. Heffernan, whose resignation becomes effective August 4, to accept the important post.

An office already has been added to the suite which form the Detroit headquarters of the First National, which Mr. Heffernan will occupy immediately upon leaving the staff of the News. When an exhibitor books a First National attraction, Mr. Heffernan will have a detailed knowledge of every condition surrounding the exhibitor. Then when called upon he will offer suggestions containing the proper punch and if necessary personally direct a campaign of exploitation designed to show the real worth of the attraction. Mr. Heffernan's work will not be confined to the theatres of Detroit. He will specialize even more thoroughly on the houses scattered throughout Michigan in towns where scant populations to draw from form a bugaboo for the rural exhibitor.

Fifty New Loew Houses Before End of Year

Marcus Loew is building 19 new theatres in the United States and Canada and is buying or leasing others. He expects to have 50 new theatres.

CENSOR RESTRICTIONS IN DETROIT

A NEW Detroit ordinance requires that all films shown must be passed by censors connected with the Recreation Commission. Two members of the police department who have been in charge of the censoring will work for the commission under direction of Dr. C. B. Lundy, superintendent.

A stop will be put by the commission to the showing of all sex pictures and subjects that deal particularly with disease.

Another Arrest for Alleged Film Thefts

When Hans Frohman, New York film broker, was held at Syracuse on Wednesday last for action by the Grand Jury in $5,000 bail, the third reel of a starring film drama was thrown on the screen of public notice. The first two reels had to do with previous arrests of men charged with stealing films in New York and Chicago.

Action in Frohman's case followed the alleged recovery in June of $80,000 worth of films, which it is charged were stolen in transit and received by him at greatly reduced prices. John R. Van Arnam, former Syracuse University football star, is awaiting action by the Grand Jury, accused of acting with Frohman.

Providence Car Strike Hurting Theatres

The moving picture theatres felt the immediate effects of the strike of the street car men, which July 19 tied up the entire state. All reported a falling off of about 50 per cent. in the afternoon shows, while in the evening many of them played to large audiences.

Eugene Zukor

Son of Adolph Zukor Is Taking Up Reins

After a schooling in every branch of the motion picture industry, extending over a period of more than three years, Eugene Zukor, son of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been formally appointed as assistant to the president of the company. The younger Mr. Zukor will take up his duties immediately with headquarters at the Home Office of the corporation, 485 Fifth avenue, New York.

With the exception of last year, when Mr. Eugene Zukor was in the Navy, he has been engaged in the different departments of the Corporation since the Famous Players Film Company first occupied the studio in West 56th street. At that time, having completed his schooling, he entered the Publicity Department and through this connection made a wide acquaintance, not only among artists, authors and directors engaged in producing the pictures, but also in outside fields among newspaper men, trade paper editors and national magazine editors.

Subsequently he handled a division of the Home Office Sales Department under Al. Lichtman, general manager, and learned at first hand the intricacies of distribution. He has been employed for the past year at the New York exchange under A. G. Whyte, district manager, and his work there has run the gamut of exchange activities, from shipping room to salesman.

On Tour of Exchanges

Now that Hiram Abrams has appointed all seventeen of the sales managers of United Artists Corporation, Ralph O. Proctor, assistant general manager of the "Big Four," has started on a tour that will cover all of the company's branch offices.

Community Shows Draw

Community motion picture shows are proving highly successful in Taunton, Mass. They were introduced last winter, and caught on among the people immediately.

GALA TIME HAD BY ALL AT SEATTLE CONVENTION

FROM all reports, "big doings" were the order of the day during the convention of the Northwest Film Trade Board, starting July 18.

Stars were there galore, decked out in all their glory and the guests at many special entertainments.. Frank Keenan, whose releases are being handled by Pathe, came in for a big reception.

Fay Tincher fired the opening gun, riding through the main streets on a pony, accompanied by the Chief of Police and a squad of mounted cops. She was entertained on various days by Alexander Pantages, Jack Lannon, J. T. Sheffield and W. W. Kofeldt.

Miss Tincher, on leaving Seattle, is making a trip to many of the cities of the West coast.

Atlanta Film Exchange Managers Banquet

The Film Exchange Managers Association of Atlanta, Georgia, served a banquet at the Kimball House, Atlanta, Friday, July 19th, at which over seventeen members were present.

The honored guest of the banquet was Mr. Ben Simpson, special representative for Realart Pictures Corp., who is here preparing to open the new film office. Mr. Simpson made a very interesting talk regarding trade conditions over the United States, and stated that the Atlanta Film Exchange Managers' Association was the best one of its kind he had ever seen.

Among the members present were John S. Ezell, president of the Atlanta Film Managers Association and manager of the E. & H. Film Co.; Geo. R. Allison, manager Vitagraph Inc.; R. M. Savini, manager Savini Films Inc.; Joe Marentette, manager Film Clearing House, Inc.; Arthur Dickenson, manager Criterion Film Co.; Chas. E. Kessnich, manager Metro Pictures Corp.; Harry Bugie, manager Pathe Exchange Inc.; Byron Bryan, Vitagraph Inc.; W. J. Pratt, division manager Triangle Pictures Corp.; Carl Bamford, special representative of S. A. Lynch Enterprises, and Louis L. Dent, division manager, S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

West Virginia Showmen to Meet Soon

A convention of West Virginia Exhibitors will be held at Charleston, August 19th and 20th. It was originally planned to hold the meeting July 29th, but a postponement was made necessary by reason of the fact that John Siefert, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League, under whose auspices the meeting will be held, intends to go to New York to attend a meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry July 28th.

The Miami Valley Exhibitor's League now has members in four states including Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Indiana.

Vaudeville Agency Now in New Offices

The Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency, of the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises, has removed its offices to 110 West 42nd street, New York City.

Censor Cost Is Cut by Governor Sproul

Pittsburgh, after all, is not to have its own branch office of the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture censors, notwithstanding the Legislature passed a bill providing for its establishment and for the payment of the salaries of additional officials of the board to be placed in control of the branch.

This was made evident when, on July 15, Governor Sproul, in approving the General Appropriation bill of the state, eliminated an item of $12,000 which would have paid the salaries of a chief inspector, two assistant inspectors and a stenographer, who were to have constituted the operating staff of the proposed Pittsburgh branch.

Popular sentiment, which is balking against the "high cost of censorship," is believed to have influenced the Governor's action.

"House Divided" Winner for Any Size House

Classifying it as a one hundred dollar a day production for even a 600-seat house, William Bigall, manager of the Irving Theatre, Brooklyn, in a letter to Frank G. Hall, states "A House Divided" is a successful picture from every angle. Mr. Bigall adds he has never before commented on a production, and felt he was obliged to offer congratulations to Mr. Hall on this picture.

Heavy Demand on Fulco Brand Accessories

The E. E. Fulton Co. have installed additional machinery, including an automatic gear cutter. There is an increased demand, both foreign and domestic, for the Fulco Brand of M. P. accessories. This demand, together with new products which will be on the market shortly, has necessitated more machinery.

Seven Theatre Circuit

The Venus Amusement Company, which has just been organized, with A. J. Obreshk as president and Nick Bikos vice-president, with headquarters in Gary, Indiana, now control the Cosmos, Lyric, Venus, Royal, and Gem theatres in Gary, Indiana; the Star Theatre in Whiting, and the only theatre located in Hegewich.

ience that might be imagined in the most modern public institution.

In addition, there will be an innovation of the greatest importance. The owners decline to even give the slightest hint of this, for it is such a radical departure from anything that has been included in theatre construction that they intend for the actual opening of the houses to reveal the secret. The only clue given is that this feature exists at only one place in the world —and not in a theatre—and there it is associated with great wealth.

Music will be one of the principal features of the two theatres, far surpassing anything that has been done in either city. Orchestras of fifty pieces, both under the direction of men of national fame, will be permanent. Two of the largest organs ever built are being made and in addition there will be soloists from all parts of the world. By the time these theatres are open the Allens will have between fifty and sixty first run houses and will theretore be able to guarantee artists engagements for a full year without their appearing more than one week in the year at the same theatre.

Plans have been made for the opening of both theatres, probably at the same time, in the early spring.

While the Allen interests declined to discuss the possiblity of further plans in the United States, there are reports current that their holdings in this country are likely to be extended. They are said to have tentative plans for other cities, but that they first intend to prove by the quality of their theatres in Detroit and Cleveland that they can make good on every promise.

As a matter of fact any step forward by Jules and Jay J. Allen would be no great surprise to the film world, since they have earned a niche all of their own in the motion picture hall of fame.

Only twelve years ago Barney Allen and his two sons started a motion picture theatre in Brantford, Ontario. Although then a city of only about 15,000 it was the only place in the Dominion outside of Toronto and Montreal where motion pictures were regularly exhibited. While most men then regarded the "movie" as a passing fad the Allens were among the future who got the real vision of the future. So immediately on the opening of their first theatre they adopted two business tenets, that have since become the slogans of every successful exhibitor—that they would show only the cleanest pictures obtainable—and that the patrons must go away from the theatre satisfied, no matter the trouble or expense.

This house was followed by another and better one, and these grew into a small chain through Western Ontario. But though they had made a success the Allens saw a better field toward the west and so they sold out their interests and made Calgary their headquarters. Within a short time they had created a string of theatres through the "prairie provinces," centering around the Allen theatre in Calgary, the first really modern motion picture house in Canada. But while their theatres were growing the exchange idea became dominant and a series of exchanges through the Dominion followed, through which the Allens handled Universal and other features.

This end of the business became so important that they moved their headquarters to Toronto, and once there the pendelum began to swing towards the exhibition end.

Barney Allen is the president of the Allen Enterprises, with Jay J. Allen as vice-president and Jule Allen secretary-treasurer. Father and two sons make a remarkable combination tor they have been able to divide up the enormous work and at the same time so to coordinate it that the machinery always works smoothly and to the ends desired.

Announcement will be made later of the details of film plans for the coming year. After September first they will not be distributors for Famous Players-Lasky product, but they have some unusual announcements to make and with the unequalled number of first run bookings they themselves can offer in their own houses they expect to be able to obtain just about the pictures that they desire.

"It's a Girl"

John Siefert, president of Maimi Va'ley Exhibitors League, Dayton, Ohio

Director Hugh Ford Is Signed for Long Term

Hugh Ford, special director for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just signed a new long-term contract with that company. The continuation of the relationship which has existed for so many years, it is stated, is a source of satisfaction to the officials of the corporation who will continue to have the benefit of his counsel in both the motion picture and the dramatic field as a result of the recent acquisition of the Chas. Frohman, Inc., interests.

During the summer Mr. Ford, who recently arrived in New York from California, where he had just finished "In Mizzoura" at the Lasky studio, will be in daily conference with authors, dramatists and others who are active in formulating plans for the stage presentations contemplated by the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

The opportunity to avail themselves of the ideas and suggestions which Hugh Ford may offer in collaboration with the Chas. Frohman, Inc., organization is one which all those connected with the theatrical production activities of Famous Players-Lasky prize highly, for Mr. Ford enjoys a reputation as a master of stagecraft and stage direction.

Regulations in Augusta

The National Board of Review has received copies of resolutions providing for the regulation of motion pictures recently adopted in Augusta, Ga. These resolutions are interesting to the trade as showing a type of regulation which is evolved as a result of The National Board's work.

The resolutions debar the exhibition of any picture in Augusta which has not been approved by the National Board of Review, unless such picture has previously been described to the Commission and received its approval. It is further provided that no age limit for attendance at a picture be fixed unless previously approved by the Commission.

No Lack of Patronage

In Cleveland as throughout the country many motion picture houses are reported closed for the summer months, but not as an economical measure—merely in practically every instance for repairs, re-modelling and improvements.

Educational Program for Schools

Far Reaching Plan Put in Operation by F. P.-Lasky

CLOSELY following the news that the Methodist Episcopal Church, at its centenary convention in Columbus, Ohio, had accepted the motion picture as a means of education, it was announced this week that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has completed most comprehensive plans for the production and distribution of non-theatrical pictures to schools, colleges, churches, social centers and other public institutions.

The pictures that will be distributed to these institutions, it is stated, will not be of the type that would put schools, social centers and such non-theatrical enterprises in competition with motion picture exhibitors. On the contrary, these pictures, it is announced, will be strictly non-theatrical and educational, and are being distributed to satisfy the growing demand for the exhibition of films of this nature to people who are interested in educational and civic affairs.

The department for the production and distribution of non-theatrical pictures is in charge of David K. Niles, widely known for his work in the educational film field. For the last three years Mr. Niles has been motion picture director for the Milwaukee schools, and during the war had charge of the motion picture section of the Department of Labor. He also was chairman of the joint conference of motion picture activities of the United States Government and Allied organizations.

Assisting Mr. Niles are Carl H. Carsons, a well-known educator, who will edit the picture from the pedagogical standpoint; Edwin Lipkin, formerly director of social and civic activities in several big New York charitable institutions, who will supervise the pictures from the standpoint of non-educational public institutions; Miss Rose Tapley, who will carry on motion picture work before women's clubs and kindred organizations, and Miss Margaret Brotherton.

The educational subjects in the non-theatrical group are being arranged along courses which have been formulated by some of the foremost educational authorities in the country. These pictures primarily are for exhibition in schools. Although they will be strictly educational, they will in no way, it is stated, replace the textbooks, but will supplement the present teaching facilities, making schools more interesting for pupils and allowing teachers greater time for the handling of their classes.

Other pictures are being produced for exhibition both in schools and semi-educational centers. These it is declared, will be educational in a broader sense and will be less closely related to school subjects than those produced for special school presentation.

The non-theatrical subjects will be handled from the regular twenty-eight Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges in this country, special representatives being assigned to each exchange to care for their distribution to public institutions.

In speaking this week of his plans, Mr. Niles said:

"I think it is not generally appreciated that there are more projection machines outside of motion picture theatres than there are engaged in the projection of strictly theatrical subjects. But this is a fact, and it shows that already the private institutions of this country have awakened to the great educational and social value which lie in the films."

Exhibitors Will Push Fight

State Bodies Hold Meetings to Plan Campaign on Tax Repeal; Big Response

THE suggestion of the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., that exhibitors in each state get together at special meetings and conventions to consider the tax repeal campaign is meeting with response.

A special meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland was held on July 22nd at Baltimore, when the repeal campaign plans for that state were outlined to the exhibitors by Thomas D. Goldberg, State Director of the campaign in Maryland. Many exhibitors promised to see their congressmen.

The Virginia exhibitors will convene at Ocean View, Va., on August 13-14, and one of the principal objects in calling it is to take up the tax fight. State Director Jake Wells of Richmond, Va., has invited delegations from Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and North Carolina to attend for general discussion.

Theodore L. Hays, who made a determined and successful fight in Minnesota for the exhibitors in the music tax matter has accepted the state directorship for that state. He considers this campaign will bring exhibitors closer together than ever.

The Governor of New Hampshire, Hon. John H. Bartlett, of Portsmouth, N. H., has been appointed a district leader under State Director Charles H. Bean, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of N. H.

Harry Crandall of Washington, D. C., accepted the directorship for his district.

Meeting of National Association Group

A meeting of the General Division, Class 5 of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held at 805-806 Times Building, New York, July 31st, at 3 o'clock.

This meeting is called for the purpose of nominating seven directors to represent the General Division in the Board of Directors of the National Association for the ensuing year. The directors so nominated are to be elected by ballot at the annual meeting of the members of the Association to be held at the Hotel Seneca, Rochester, N. Y., on August 5th, 1919.

Such other matters as may be properly brought before the meeting will be received and proper action taken thereon.

Jack Eaton Succeeds Plunkett at Strand

Mr. Jack Eaton, who has just been appointed managing director of the Strand Theatre, succeeding Mr. Joseph L. Plunkett, who has affiliated himself with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one of Broadway's youngest theatrical managers.

Mr. Eaton, who hails from Philadelphia, entered the film industry as a publicity man and was for a long time on the staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He rapidly rose to the position of director, and is responsible for the production of the James Montgomery Flagg Comedies. He resigned his position as director with the Town and Country Films in order to take up his new duties at the Strand.

Peter Schaefer, Chicago Film Man, Married

The bridal paths of the northern shore have been robbed of one of their most decorative features by the desertion to the bridal path of Mrs. Clara Arnold. At a very exclusive ceremony last week in the French room of the Blackstone Hotel, Peter J. Schaefer, well known Chicago clubman and theatrical magnate, was married to Mrs. Arnold. The bonds were tied by Judge Joseph Sabath.

A dinner was served in an adjoining room immediately after the ceremony and then Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer left for a wedding tour among the Canadian Rockies. They will leave Vancouver on July 26th for Alaska, returning to the states by way of Yellowstone, spending a few weeks at the Broadmoor Hotel, Colorado Springs. They will sojourn at Hot Springs, Va., and will winter in California.

Mr. Schaefer is prominent in club circles, living as he has for the past three years at the South Shore Country Club, and being a member of the Chicago Athletic Club and a golfer of no mean importance. In preparation for this protracted honeymoon, Mr. Schaefer resigned his offices as President of the National Motion Picture Industry and President of the Allied Amusement Association.

Added to Lynch String

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, have purchased the Alcazar, Bonita, and acquired the lease on the Grand at the time it expires, in Tampa, Florida.

By acquiring these three houses, the Lynch Company have only two competitors in Tampa's main business district. The Strand and The Prince, and the New Victory which will be completed by fall.

Someday You'll Want to Quote a Clergyman on the Motion Pictures

"ONE of the most effective ways to combat the spread of Bolshevism is the movie," said the Rev. Robert J. MacAlpine, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Buffalo, one of the most influential in the city, in the course of a sermon on this subject.

"There are many ways of educating the public," said Mr. MacAlpine, "for example the press, the pulpit, the platform and the schoolroom. But by far the most effective means is the movies. Everyday it reaches 10,000,000 of our population. The moving picture theatre should, therefore, be used by our government, federal, state and city, to bring systematically before our citizens the genius and benefits of American democracy.

"This is our biggest and best avenue for genuine Americanization. A four-minute Americanizing speech should be made in every movie theatre in the land at least once a week. Every movie manager and audience would welcome it. Think of the effect in Buffalo alone in reaching in this manner every week, 50,000 of our citizens with such a propaganda. Our city department of public welfare could do nothing more genuinely timely and far-reaching than to lead the other cities of the nation in such a needed movement."

All Prints Working on Willard's Picture

"The Challenge of Chance," Frank G. Hall's big seven reel special, starring Jess Willard and Arline Pretty in a Western drama, is reported to be playing to big business by exhibitors in all sections of the country. According to reports from Independent Sales Corporation's branch managers, the feature is accepted by the fans as a Western drama of merit. Throughout the South where this picture has played in all the larger cities, the reports indicate that the feature has given the utmost satisfaction.

Mr. Hall, who is handling the distribution of "The Challenge of Chance" announces that 114 prints are now working. During the second week of July these prints were working solid, the territory covered, comprising the entire country.

Exchange Man Promoted

W. W. Kulp, for some time associated with the Exhibitor's Mutual exchange in Cleveland, has just been named manager of the office, to succeed Hugh Rennie who is now Select branch manager in Seattle. Mr. Kulp has been exhibitor, salesman, operator and exchange manager in his long photoplay career.

Typical Broadway Playhouse for Australia

Melbourne, Australia, is soon to have a huge motion picture theatre, fashioned after the familiar type that had its origin in New York. J. C. Williamson, whose activities in the Antipodes rank with those of the leading American amusement firms, announces through his American representatives, Sanger & Jordan, that arrangements have been completed for the immediate erection of the house, which is planned to seat 4,000.

The policy will follow that which has been standardized by the best American motion picture establishments—a mixed programme of educational, news, scenic and comedy films, with a feature, and marked attention devoted to the musical side. It will be the first undertaking of the kind in Australia and will mark a pronounced advance for the motion picture in that distant land. An intimation is made that American pictures will figure largely in the programmes.

Church Needs Pictures, Says John C. Flinn

As the representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, John C. Flinn, Director of Publicity and Advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on July 15 addressed three thousand Methodists at the Centenary Celebration of American Methodist Missions, at Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. Flinn, whose subject was "Motion Pictures and the Church," on behalf of the National Association, pledged the support of the industry to the program of extension of pictures among the churches of America and foreign countries.

"A heavy responsibility rests upon those in this country who were in favor of national prohibition, to provide a substitute better than the saloon for recreation purposes," said Mr. Flinn. "Moreover, it is evident from the keen interest manifested everywhere that this responsibility is well recognized and that the motion picture is looked upon as the wholesome medium by which this recreation may be supplied.

"It therefore follows that the church needs the motion picture far more than the motion picture needs the church."

New Film Concern Open in Minneapolis

The Minneapolis Film Corporation has opened offices at 702 Film Exchange building, with Carl Michel, who has had considerable experience in the exchange business the past few years, as manager.

The first new release, scheduled for July 15, is a six-reel Essanay feature, "Ashes of Desire," featuring Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa and Frank Borzage.

ROBERTSON-COLE SEEKS TO BREAK AWAY FROM EXHIBITORS MUTUAL

A COURT fight is on between Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual, heretofore the distributing agency of that concern's product, following the attempt of Robertson-Cole to cancel the existing contract.

After the cancellation of the contract was forwarded, Exhibitors Mutual obtained a temporary injunction restraining the cancellation from becoming effective.

Hearing of the case was begun July 23 in the Federal District Court. The charge is made by Robertson-Cole that Exhibitors Mutual has not kept faith, that it does not maintain 20 offices in the country for distribution, that accurate accounts were not kept, and that other concerns' product was handled.

In reply to the latter charge Exhibitors Mutual declares Robertson-Cole has not lived up to the agreement to supply a stipulated number of subjects weekly.

Corbett Tells New York of Future Plans

James J. Corbett (Gentleman Jim) is vacationing in New York after his strenuous activities as a serial actor in "The Midnight Man." At a press luncheon given in his honor by Lowell Cash of the Universal forces, the former heavyweight champion of the world declared that all the years of training spent in pugilistic endeavors could not begin to compare with the strenuous weeks spent in making a serial. Jim intimated that if he had it all to do over again he would get himself in fistic trim by engaging in this hazardous screen work.

Mr. Corbett has just completed the eighteen episodes of the Universal serial, "The Midnight Man," which is scheduled for release in September. The subject was written by J. W. Horne and Kenneth B. Clarke and scenarioized by Harvey Gates. And it was produced under the direction of Mr. Horne. The star plays the part of Bob Gilmore, who earns his "Midnight" soubriquet because he starts out promptly in that hour of darkness, attired as a gentleman Raffles, with the object of learning his identity.

Bob has been brought up by foster parents and when he reaches maturity his ambition is to clear up the mystery attached to his name. He wears a jade signet ring with the letters "MOR." Assuming that these represent the first letters of his name he conceives the idea of entering at night the home of everyone whose name begins with "Mor," and leaving the imprint of his signet ring.

Gentleman Jim became enthusiastic over the serial and it is no wonder when the luncheon guests were piloted through two episodes. The second one shows him taking advantage of his good right arm—and left, in routing a vicious group of pickpockets. Indeed in all the episodes Jim shows why he earned the title of champion. But the picture is not all "fight," it is well balanced with thrills, action, and all the other necessary ingredients.

After Mr. Corbett is sufficiently rested from his strenuous activities he is going back to Universal City, where he will occupy his time in turning out Universal features.

Fire Destroys Single Theatre in Town

Fire, of a supposed incendiary origin, destroyed the Lion Theatre, McAdoo, Pa., at 4:30 o'clock on Wednesday morning, July 16th, entailing a loss of $8,500. The flames robbed the town of its only theatre, the Blaine Theatre having been totally destroyed by fire, also of a very mysterious nature, on Monday morning, July 7th, at exactly the same hour.

Butterfly, Milwaukee, Seeks to Establish Confidence in its Ads

By Leo A. Landau

Manager, Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee

Another instalment in the series which leading managers of the country are writing at our request tell the "why" of the advertising policy.

PHOTOPLAY attractions must be "sold" just as any other merchandise is sold.

Real salesmanship must be employed to sell a program to the public. Just as a salesman must be well dressed, so must the advertisements and the front of the theatre be pleasing to look at. The real salesman of today does not wear a checkered suit, a red tie, and a diamond horseshoe, topped off with a brown derby. Nor should the front of the theatre follow the same general idea in failing to observe good taste. Garish posters and newspaper ads filled with cheap superlatives create the same impression with the public as does the old-fashioned drummer whom I have pictured.

The old days of Rattlesnake Bill, who claimed the snake oil he sold was the world's greatest invention and would remedy anything from a sprained ankle to a rusty stove pipe, are practically gone. People fight shy of wild claims in business. The good salesman avoids the use of superlatives. He does not claim that his article is the world's greatest, that it is one hundred dollars' worth of goods being sold at ten cents, nor that it is the only thing in the world.

A sensible buyer steers clear of such arguments and is impressed by the salesman who speaks in a perfectly frank and easy manner. The buyer wants a legitimate return for his money and wants to know that the goods he is purchasing are of standard quality. If he has confidence in the salesman and has found that the salesman always tells the truth he is not afraid to place an order.

The same arguments hold in selling photoplays to the public. The readers grow tired of hearing that a certain theatre each week runs "positively the most startling, best staged and spectacular production ever made." They cannot help but question the truth of the statement that each successive photoplay featuring a certain star is that star's best work.

We believe in telling the truth about the programs of our theatre. If we have an exceptionally good offering we say so, but if the program is just ordinarily good we avoid trying to make it what it is not, and rather see if there is not a certain class of people to which it will appeal, and then we harp on that particular appeal. Naturally while sticking to the truth in our ads we do not emphasize the weak points. Recently we stated in an ad that we did not think the work of a certain star in a production which we were advertising was her best, but stated that the plot was a most novel one. We were interested to find that scores of people came to the theatre that week for the express purpos of seeing whether or not they agreed with us, and many of them said we had been too modest in our claims for the picture, as they liked it. On the other hand, less enthusiastic patrons told us that they entirely agreed with us in our statements and we felt that the ad had pleased everyone.

This ad, three columns by five inches, uses a half tone to advantage. Notice the phrase, "The somewhat sensational story"

Another time we showed a picture that was of too deep and serious a nature for youngsters. We could easily have advertised the old slogan "children positively not admitted," but we think that style of advertising hurts the theatre. In our advertisement we stated simply, "children will not be interested in this production." As a result there were scarcely any children in the audience, but they packed the house later when we staged a production to their liking.

I always give my personal opinion of the Butterfly shows in the ad and let the people take it for what it is worth. In advertising I follow one rule. After reading my criticism of the production I say to myself, "Is that what you would tell Mrs. Landau if she asked you what the coming show was like?" If I can honestly answer "yes" to that question I include the criticism in my ad.

I am sure that if I gave my wife a bum steer on a picture I would hear from her, and I feel the same about the public.

My personal criticism in my ads has the effect of creating an impression that the Butterfly is square and above board in all its dealings. I find that some people do not agree with my opinions of pictures, but they at least find that I am consistent. One woman told me that she never agreed with me in my criticisms.

"You and I have opposite views on what is good in motion pictures, Mr. Landau," she told me. "I will say, however, that you are consistent in your criticism, for I am always sure to enjoy the pictures you do not care a great deal about."

Your Idea and Ours

HERE is one of the drawn advertisements which are used so often and so effectively by the Strand Theatre, Omaha. It keeps strictly away from the sensational in both typing and design, but at the same time it stands out with the other advertising on the same page because it is so different. The main illustration shows two houses connected by a tunnel, and while this is not strictly in keeping with the story, it puts over the idea stronger than would have been the case had two adjoining big city houses been used.

Then there is the selling argument:

In this house Ruth Endicott was the caged wife of a millionaire, a man old enough to be her father. She was allowed to go nowhere, blinds were drawn, and her actions dictated by his prim old maid sisters. She was young and full of life, longing for a good time, and when she fell heir to a fortune—she bought the house next door and had a tunnel built; bought a wig and was known as "Vicky Van" where she entertained Bohemia, became famous for her wonderful "blow-outs" and had the time of her young life. Then her husband wanted to meet this famous woman! And when he did ? ? ? ? ? ?

That's certainly gossipy enough. We cannot imagine a woman in Omaha willingly staying away from the Strand during this engagement. And the men have just as much curiosity.

THIS seven inches, double from the Imperial theatre, St. Johns, N. B., is the first of the exact kind that we have ever seen. Universal makes it a practise of printing in its press books "At a Glance" about each picture so as to give the exhibitor the high points and information that he may need in his advertising. This is distinctly for the guidance of the exhibitor, but in this case this matter has been bodily transferred to the advertisement and placed next to one of the single column cuts provided by the exchange.

As a novelty it is interesting, but as advertising it is not good except as a novelty. We don't believe the ordinary patron is interested in the brand name, author of story and scenario, location and several other things that are cited. There would have been much more desire to see the picture created by using one of the selling talks suggested in the Special Service Section printed in the NEWS and by playing the name of Priscilla Dean stronger.

HERE we have a display of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, taken from the Ohio State Journal, which made the others in the same issue look sick just because the Majestic did not try to write a history of the film business in one ad, and used plenty of white space.

Practically the same results as this can be accomplished by any newspaper with type except that the white letters of the top portion of the display would have to be black and the black part white. We are inclined to think that it would look just as well set up that way for the reason if this is to be criticised at all, it is that it look a little "top heavy."

COLUMBUS is the capital of Ohio and Albany of New York. Above is what the Columbus printers do and below is what the Albany papers apparently insist on doing, aided and abetted by the exhibitors in furnishing too much copy for the amount of display space purchased. We leave it to you if this ad., one of a whole string set up in the same style, does'nt look as if it came out of the inside of a country weekly?

We are willing to bet that it is the practise of Albany exhibitor's to shove theatre managers enough space to properly display the bills which are to be advertised. This display was two columns by six inches. It should have been twice as large to accommodate the amount of matter contained.

HERE is an ad. of Sidney Grauman's taken from the Los Angeles Times which strikes us as ideal. It is two columns wide and 13 inches in depth and graced the front page of the theatrical section.

effect, week after week, if he is willing to spend a few dollars for a name cut and some border to match.

We want to call your attention to the program announcement. Every day, the music and other things that you use in addition to the feature picture to make up a show, are getting more attention from the patrons of picture houses and it is positively necessary to give them some advertising space. Just saying "and other numbers" won't do any more. Tell them about the whole show.

There are only two kinds of business that can get along by word of mouth advertising. One is a "blind tiger" and the other—well, not the show business.

SPECIMENS of the recent displays of the Princess theatre, Birmingham, Ala., give us something more than a chance to criticise this week. They offer opportunity to study some fundamental rules in advertising.

These two are good examples of how to advertise return engagements. The Princess played "Daddy Long Legs" to good business after an advertising campaign that merited attention. Then they booked the picture back for three more days.

Now they had told their story on the first showing and accomplished what they had set out to do—attract every one in Birmingham who they could reach to see the play, but of course they didn't get them all.

However, it is safe to say that by the time the first engagement was over that by word of mouth and the exploitation they had given the picture everyone who goes to the theater were fully informed—concerning "Daddy Long Legs," consequently this announcement of the second showing sufficient.

Five words tell the whole story. No one needs to be told what "Gold Medal Flour—Eventually—Why Not Just a plain statement of fact but enough. The cut serves to fill in an otherwise too large space for the wording of the ad. and attracts the attention.

If we always lived in the past like some exhibitors we'd be still wearing the beaver of the pre-Civil War days.

THIS is even better than the Daddy Long Leg's ad. for Mickey had been put over just as well on the initial showing as had the Pickford film and the Princess had nothing new to tell about this either so they made their simple announcement again.

First is the "Now—three days," which shows up big because there is lots of white space around it. Then a very good cut of Mabel Normand in a typical pose. The use of the black rule gives the ad. distinction and doesn't leave Mabel suspended in mid air. Then the anouncement.

It didn't take five minutes to write this ad. but it sticks right out of the page at you. We O K it as one of the best displays of it's kind yet inspected.

WE are giving this one space only because it is an example of what might be accomplished with the material furnished by exchange for the exploitation of pictures if all such material was of the calibre of the cut used for all but the last two lines of this ad. Here is a display that certainly attracted attention and it is entirely due to the fact that the cut was way above the usual standard for all the Rialto (Denver) did was to add the two lines at the bottom.

If exhibitors could get cuts as good as this from the exchanges much of the kick we hear continually against the exchange service would soon disappear. The Rialto was able to get with this all the results of a "made to order" ad. minus the expense which keeps most exhibitors from employing an artist.

The striking design, the balance and proper contrasts of this ad, is such that every exhibitor who plays the Firing Line should take advantage of it.

There's no art in hiding yourself away where no one can find you—and no profit.

THIS hand drawn design used by the Muse, Omaha, Neb., R. S. Ballayntyne, manager, attracts attention in spite of the fact that we do not call it extraordinarily good service the artist no doubt having spent considerable time in getting up the copy.

It does, however, attract instant attention and the eye catches the star's name and the title of the feature at first glance. In that much it is very good. The lettering on these points suggests "Chinese writing" and is different enough to be termed unusual.

In the selling talk, the argument is good and predicts the sort of picture Hayakawa's admirers like to see.

We do not like the theater name line. It looks as much like a "mule" as it does a "Muse." While the clipping we had does not show the column rule. This was two columns wide with a white space of about one-fourth of an inch on all four sides. It was ten inches in depth.

You sell a cake of soap today and forget it tomorrow, but your theatre is forever with you.

THIS quarter page display was used by the Tivoli Theater, San Francisco, a Turner & Dahnken house. The subject of a story in last week's issue that should prove an inspiration to every exhibitor, who trys to "do things."

It is to be expected that a man who has had the vision and the courage to make the Tivoli what it is, an unqualined success both financially and artistically, would come through with good advertising, and this display proves it.

We have seen very few displays that exploit a feature better than this one. The theatre, Miss Pickford and the title of the picture all get the eye at first glance. The line "Folk's I'm here," gives sort of a personal appeal that people who like "Little Mary" will appreciate. Then comes another mighty good sentence in the first person. "My First Extraordinary Picture." That tells without waste of words what may be expected, and there is no doubt but that the picture is making good it's promises.

If Mr. Dahnken didn't own the First National Franchise for San Francisco we would say that he might better have left his reference to who was releasing the feature out of the ad., because as a rule we do not believe that "tooting someone else's horn" is good policy, but since in this case he is tooting his own horn, it is all right.

If your patrons are merely coming to your theatre to kill time, they're apt to find the slaughter easier elsewhere.

CERTAINLY if there was any one in Denver who has just observed to his neighbor, "Is it hot enough for you today?" took a look at this twelve inch, five column display of the Theatre American lost no time in getting a good seat. It certainly has atmosphere all the way through it and the illustrations have been selected with intelligence and purpose. The figure of the dancing girl at the right gives the flavor of the dance hall and the larger scene at the top pictures the great open country and its snows. Then the drawn in dog sled and fir trees for the background of the theatre name completes the effect.

With the name of the picture properly played, the star brought out we then have the selling argument with:

She was married to a fugitive of the law; she loved a man from the States and a Canuck (Big Mitch Lewis) worshipped her. See what happened in "Jacques of the North."

We further commend this as an example of the way that adequate space pays. If this had been squeezed down into half the space there would have been lost the atmospheric details that make the display as it stands so thoroughly good.

The boast belongs only to the "confidence" game.

THIS is a reproduction of a full page in the July 6th, Sunday edition of the Columbia Record, Columbia, S. C. It was printed in two colors, the cuts, name of star, title of the picture and name of the theatre being in red and the balance black.

We do not consider it extraordinary except for it's size which is sufficient to inform every reader of the Record that "The Red Lantern" was playing at the Rivoli, and carries the idea that this picture is a super-feature. A lot of people judge a show the way they do a circus. The bigger the "flash" the bigger the show.

The Rivoli has gone pretty strong in it's selling talk. Nazimova in "Revelation," "Out of the Fog" and others has had pictures which merit great praise and to say that "The Red Lantern" is "positively without parallel in all the brilliant history of motion pictures" is making a statement that is rather broad. Without doubt the Rivoli management was not questioned concerning this statement by those who saw "The Red Lantern," and people have ben educated to expect the superlaticve in the advertising of shows, but we think the habit of calling a picture the "best ever" is bad. If the Rivoli had used some space to tell Columbia, S. C., something of what "The Red Lantern" was about, and compared the feature favorably with Mlle. Nazimova's other pictures, which without a doubt every person who saw them remembers, it would have been better.

As the ad. stands it is a big display that tells that the star will play at a certain theatre on certain dates at such and such prices. Only the cuts give an indication of the character of the story.

It's not the weather, but it may be in your bones at that—think it over.

IT'S pretty tough after a man adopts a style of advertising to find other theatres doing the same thing and blocking him in the plans that he had —to make his displays different. The only thing that can be done in such a case is to change again.

Now we are very strong for the hand drawn effect where the lettering is legible and the displays not too crowded, but if the fellow next door is doing the same thing, the drawn letter loses much of its emphasis. Now we have taken from one of the Pittsburg Sunday papers a block showing the advertising of five theatres, three of them under the same management. All of the lettering of these advertisements is of the same general style and all of the displays are much too crowded. The result is bad, the matter is confusing to the reader and the different displays lost their identity. As we have said the only thing to do in this case is to change again. Striking half tones and light Roman type effects would do the job in this case.

If you don't get out and try to head the batting list you're likely to find the sheriff pinch-hitting for you.

IT doesn't pay to try to make one of the ready prepared one column advertisements like this into a two-column display. If the Strand theatre, Cambridge, O., desired more space it should have used a straight single column stock cut of Mae Marsh and then have supplied the type matter. What has been done here is to employ a one column read-made ad. supplied by Goldwyn which already bears all the necessary lettering except the selling argument. Now to the right, in the type matter the same matter has been repeated—plainly a waste of space. And we distinctly do not like the expression "In five massive acts." All right for circus stuff, but not here.

We are not speaking of this specific case, but it too often happens that the theatre fails to get the right sort of material from his exchange and is left up against it at the last minute. Therefore the justification of our advice that it pays the exhibitor to keep on hand cuts of the stars he plays regularly—the cost is slight and the results certain.

Stop talking about what you "did;" make the public talk about what you DO.

SOME of you artists who want to write a book every time you start framing an ad. should study this little display of the Hippodrome, Buffalo.

In a page full of bigger displays it stuck right out as if it owned the page. If you are using small space as Shea's is doing (this was one column wide and three inches deep) you can't do better than to follow this style. This was the bill at this theater for the first three days of last week.

The show without pep is a pretty hard oyster to swallow.

WE are selecting this one of The Spoiler's because it will call your attention to the fact that just because a good picture happens to have been released in the prehistoric ages figured from this "fillum" game angle, that it isn't dead as an attraction. Especially is this true of a production like the Spoilers where the "clothes" aren't the sort that go out of style every fifteen minutes.

Clune's is one of the big houses of Los Angeles and can afford to use new releases if it desires so there was no thought of economy when this big Beach drama was brought back three years after it's first showing in the Southern California metropolis.

As for the ad. itself any reader who is "wise" will immediately ask why the general style of the lettering used in the cut wasn't carried out in the reading matter below. In explanation we will say that the paper from which this was taken requires it's advertisers to use certain styles of type above a certain point and this is a sample of what they require. Consequently Clune's could not do otherwise than it had done unless a cut was made up special to fit the type display. This is really what should have been done.

Commencing Tomorrow Matinee

Remember that the "co" in co-operative is largely yourself.

OUR sympathy goes out to the man who has to advertise double feature bills. And another portion of our sympathy is extended to the printer who has to get up ads. on double feature bills. For, with the best of co-operation from the exhibitor, his task is cut out for him. And where there is no co-operation—well, the result is too often seen in print.

The quarter page from the Providence Journal shown herewith is an example of what happens to the double feature bill in the ad. columns. The Strand and the printer have both done "the best they could," but when it comes to giving prominent and near-prominent display to two features and two coming attractions we are afraid the result could not be expected to be better .

The printer has not helped by the way he split up the words of the title,

"True Hearted Susie." Or perhaps the theater's desires were to blame for the clash that is present between the title and the names of the players. It does seem though that with "The Haunted Bedroom" box brought down, better display could have been given "True Hearted Susie," which certainly is the larger attraction.

The general effect of the ad. now is a scattering of the attention which is decidedly harmful. There is a lack of definiteness—no one picture is sold.

If you use the superlative today, what of the tomorrow?

PERHAPS some exhibitors have asked themselves: "What good to me is the Studio Directory, published by the NEWS?"

Here is one answer to the question. There are many others of course, but this is a most practical one. The reproduction shows a page from the Magazine and Program published weekly by the California Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.

The publication itself has been covered in THE NEWS previously, so we will only say that it is a twelve page book devoted to the interests of the California. In addition to the advertising carried and the billing of the program, the magazine contains other matter of interest to fans.

Knowing that the history of the players who they have come to know on the screen is a matter that people like to know about, the California has inaugurated a page entitled "Pen Pictures of Photo Players." The information contained in these pages is obtained from our Studio Directory and saves the California the time and expense necessarily involved if they were to attempt to compile the information themselves. In fact, we doubt if any single individual would be able to get together the theatrical records of so many of the the people who are now actively engaged in the motion picture business.

Certainly it could not be done at anything like an expense consistent with the benefits that one theatre could derive from it. That the page is a success from the "Magazine and Program" standpoint goes without saying. It is good stuff for any exhibitor and the idea may well be copied by others who wish to make their house organ readable.

People who get up early mentally are never troubled with nightmares.

THIS gets our attention and criticism from only one angle. There may be a picture legitimately titled "A Lion of the Hills," with Hart starred, but we never heard of it, therefore must conclude that this production is a bunch of old stuff put together to get some money from the unsuspecting. In fact, we are sure that it isn't even a re-issue.

While we are the subject of playing pictures, we want to say that this sort of thing is the very worst policy for any first class house. And as for the Gaiety, we are sure that any theatre which can afford to buy a five-inch, double column display in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Sunday edition, ought to be able to play pictures of a much better calibre than this.

WE can't very well criticise this ad. of the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal., because it is high class in every way but we would criticise the policy of giving so long a program. However, that privilege does not belong in this department.

This three column display is 14 inches deep and shows, without a doubt, that the designer, Axel H. Rasmussen, has put not only time and effort into his work but also a lot of brains. The Liberty is fortunate in having so capable an artist. Of course we do not know whether Mr. Rasmussen furnished the material for this ad. or not, but that is also out of the ordinary.

As we fear that the selling talk on both features of this double bill when reduced in size to fit our columns will not be distinguishable we reprint them as an example of mighty good work. This one is on the "Courageous Coward."

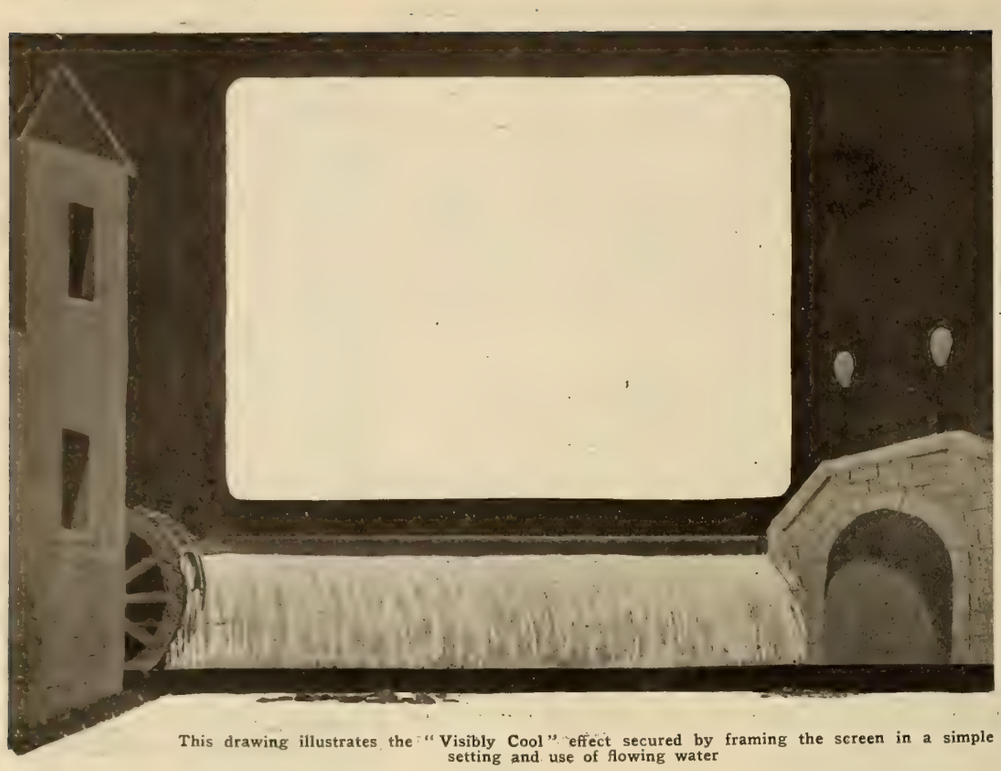
A romance of the underworld in 'Frisco's Chinatown, where love, murder, and the fantastic orgies of the notorious Barbary Coast are woven into a sensational drama. Hayakawa as a prosecuting attorney in a remarkable graft case reaches the pinnacle of his wildfire career in a role that calls for all of his wondertul acting.

Doesn't this just breathe melodrama and tense moments and all the other stuff that those who like this sort of a picture take seriously? The talk on the Alice Brady picture is even better.

She thought she could take everything—have the world to live in and give nothing in return. She was a tin-panner. A girl of the lizard type. She looked like real metal, but she rang hollow. She was not good. She was not bad. Just a tin-panner in this story of conflicting emotions and unexpected climaxes.

You will notice that the statement that the liberty is the coolest place in town is nicely suggested by the style of border around the ad. Even if a person should not see the printed words he will "feel" that the Palace is a comfortable place in which to spend a hot summer's evening.

Don't wait for Opportunity to knock, make the entrance so inviting that he'll walk right in.



This drawing illustrates the "Visibly Cool" effect secured by framing the screen in a simple setting and use of flowing water

Is Your Theatre "Visibly Cool?" Here's One Way of Cooling It

A LONG time ago as time is figured in the film business, the writer worked in a clothing store —for six dollars a week. It was a small city store depending largely on country trade. One day along in the early fall, when the nights were beginning to be crisp, a motherly old lady from the rural districts came into the store and after standing over our hot air furnace register a few moments remarked in all sincerity: "My, but that fire feels good."

As a matter of fact there hadn't been a flicker of flame in the furnace in three months, but the old lady's imagination was good and she warmed herself just as contentedly as if all the heat of Hades was pouring up from below.

This same idea to a large extent, only vice versa, is being put over by William F. Vance, manager of the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, by the installation of a cooling system which is visible to the audience and that is where the quoted words of our heading come in.

Mr. Vance, knowing human nature, and the effect that believing a thing has on the human mind, early in the summer began to hunt about for the best way to combat that bug-a-boo of all exhibitors —hot weather.

The New Lyric was as cool and well ventilated as the best of modern theatres, but even at that, when the weather was a hundred in the shade outside, some of this humidity was bound to work its way into the auditorium and people coming in after walking briskly would naturally feel that the theatre was hot.

Therefore Mr. Vance conceived his "visibly cool" idea.

With considerable effort but comparatively small expense, Mr. Vance arranged a special stage setting about the screen and extending obliquely for a few feet on each side of the stage, that proved not only artistic, but an effective means of conveying to his audiences that his theatre was cool.

On the left of the stage he erected an "old mill' with a water wheel extending out into view from behind the hill for half of its diameter. The wheel was practical and revolved slowly.

From behind the wheel and across the stage a large pipe with holes of sufficient size and number to make a "water fall," was laid. This was connected with a water main and a trough provided to carry the water away. On the right side of the stage a rustic arch bridge with two green lights atop was erected. Concealed beneath the arch of the bridge were several colored lights and above the "falls" at intervals of four feet small colored lights in blue, were placed also out of sight, their flame blending together in a glow.

The screen was lowered to within a few inches of the water fall, so that when the picture was thrown on it, an effect similar to what would be evolved if a picture was projected on a perpendicular sheet of water, was secured.

The colored lights played upon the falls, giving the running water an opalescent effect that was un-

A. H. Blank's New Des Moines Theatre Brings "Last Word" to Iowa Picturegoers

JULY 10th marked the opening of the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, a house which will stand as a model for many a year, in its sumptuousness, comfort and model equipment.

The auditorium ranges in size from 100 feet at the promenade to 75 feet at the proscenium arch. The lobby is 26 feet wide and 56 feet long, and is finished in terra cotta with the ceiling of ornamental design shaded with orange and high-lighted in gold.

The ceiling of the auditorium is 55 feet in height and ending in a dome which is beautifully decorated. Panels and semi-circled sections give the ceiling distinction.

The proscenium arch in front of the orchestra shell is 45 feet high in the center and 75 feet wide. The upper part of the arch is of glass illuminated from behind and forms the basis of some very unique and artistic lighting effect. Fifteen hundred roomy, leather upholstered orchestra chairs are located on the first floor. A mezzanine floor with comfortable reed chairs numbering 400 is a novelty in Des Moines. This section is always reserved. A promenade, telephone booths and a ladies' parlor have been provided, as well as a smoking room, and drinking fountain.

The orchestra pit is 18 x 40 feet and accommodates 25 musicians. A sound proof tuning box has been provided for the use of the orchestra. One of the largest organs in the Middle West has been installed.

The projection room is completely equipped with the most modern mechanism and a "screen room" has been provided. The ventilation system is ideal, insuring spectators plenty of fresh air and guaranteeing minimum heat in the summer.

The theatre is strictly fire proof and sanitary.

The Des Moines is operated by the General Amusement Company, with A. R. Blank, president; George W. Graeser, vice-president; A. H. Blank, secretary and treasurer, and A. G. Stolte is local manager.

The company operates theatres in Davenport, Marshalton, Des Moines, Mason City, Iowa, and Omaha, Neb. The Des Moines opened with De Mille's "For Better or For Worse."

Don't Forget the Children's Appeal in "Daddy Long Legs"

The appeal that Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" has for children is again demonstrated by the experience of the Rex theatre, Jackson, Mich., on its five-day run of this production.

It has been the custom of the Rex to cater to children with reduced prices, but on the "Daddy Long Legs" booking, the children evidenced such an interest that no concessions were offered and none asked for.

The children reserved box seats for every performance and a free list that had been in vogue was entirely suspended.

Plan De Luxe House for Hamilton, Illinois

A new motion picture theatre to be named the Palace is under construction at Hamilton, Ill. The house will have a liberal seating capacity and has been constructed along the general lines of the Rivoli, New York, and the Circle, Indianapolis.

It will be under the management of Harry Silver, formerly of Chicago, and associates .

The cost of the new structure is expected to reach $130,000. The theatre will open about Oct. 1st. The complete policy of the new house has not as yet been decided.

Pittsfield Stores and Theatre Cooperate

And Both Benefit—Show Your Local Merchants This Story of "The Red Lantern" in Pittsfield, Mass.

LAST week the news drifted in to this department that H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., was doing something unusual with the Red Lantern.

We wired Mr. Young to tell us all about his exploitation and to have photographs taken of his window and lobby displays.

Mr. Young came through all right, but he makes some apologies for his photographs. Here is what he said about them. It seems that Mr. Young is an amateur photographer along with his other profession that of a first class show man.

"Three of my displays are shown in the photos. The others didn't come out good, for as a photographer I am a good swimmer."

At the time Mr. Young wrote us, he was playing "The Red Lantern" his third day with a prospect of holding it over for a week. How is that for a city of 32,000 inhabitants?

Here is the way Mr. Young went after Mr. and Mrs. Public of Pittsfield for his week's run on the Red Lantern.

The bill boards of Pittsfield are not open to the Strand for some reason or other so big stands were not possible consequently Mr. Young began looking for windows which were available for displays and he found five and could have secured more only his supply of oil paintings of "Nazimova" which he had secured from the exchange, ran out and he could not get more in time for use in his showing.

Next came 500 window cards with which he decorated windows of stores in which he could secure space and the balance were tacked up in conspicuous places in all parts of the town.

Five thousand Heralds were placed into the hands "of five thousand persons" and the majority of two thousand cut out lanterns, an attractive small advertising medium gotten out for the Red Lantern campaign, were hung about the city. The balance of this lot of advertising material was hung on the door knobs of Pittsfield's residents during the night.

The next step in Mr. Young's campaign to put the Nazimova feature over to big business was a generous purchase of newspaper space and a careful framing of his ads. He didn't throw his copy at the printer but carefully considered how he could get the most publicity for his money.

A live book-seller teamed up with Manager Young to the benefit of both

Then Mr. Young rested awhile, for as he states in his letter to us on this subject: "I had that feeling of satisfaction in knowing I had done everything I could to let the public know that the Strand was the place to go too and that the Red Lantern was the picture to see."

Inaction however is a word which Mr. Young knows little about. Soon another idea came along and being practical he used it before some of his friends should tell him it was no good.

Mr. Young stood in so well with the management of the Street R. R. Co., that he was able to get a big card hung on the front of every car that operated in Pittsfield, stating that the "Red Lantern" was to be shown at the Strand, and giving the dates, prices of admission, etc.

Then Mr. Young found some more spare time which he didn't know what to do with and gathering his theatre force about him he began decorating the house. Five hundred Chinese lanterns were hung about the theatre auditorium and the lobby was decorated in Oriental style that attracted a lot of attention.

Still time hung heavy on Manager Young's hands and he looked for something else to do.

Now Woolworth's and Kresge's both operate stores in Pittsfield, and both sell copies of popular songs.

Young monopolized a window in each store and got rid of 500 hundred more Red Lantern cutouts on the interiors of the "five and ten" emporiums.

Down by the music counters were ten foot paper banners advising the public to buy The Red Lantern song.

If it hadn't come time for Young to get back to the theatre and take in the money his Red Lantern engagement was producing, there is no knowing what he might have done next, for ideas seem to grow in his fertile brain.

However, Monday, July 16th, was his opening day and at noon Wednesday he was way in the lead and going strong. We haven't heard but we are willing to gamble that he made the picture hold up for the whole week.

Boys, you can do the same thing if you will only wake up and go after the business. It's in your town just as well as in Pittsfield but it isn't going to come to you.

Is Your Theatre Visibly Cool—Here's One That Is usually pretty and restful. The blue lights above the falls made the white foam and spray which arose from the stage or falls base where numerous rocks were placed, a ghostly white appearance, and added realism. Two large stage fans placed at angles behind the right and left stage, blew directly toward the audience across the falls and forced a good portion of the spray from the walls forward, clarifying the air.

With wall fans, over a score of them, about the theatre and a big roof fan pulling out the old air, with the added effect of the unusual stage arrangement, it can be easily understood that the New Lyric was made "visibly cool."

Manager Vance received numerous compliments from his patrons and newspaper criticisms of his shows mentioned the unique cooling stunt.

Show your local merchants how these stores got live attention—bringing displays by cooperating with their theatre manager. The photo to the left shows Woolworth's store; the next, the Escher music store; then Kresge's display and at the right another view of the Escher display

Have you an ugly brick front that worries you? The story below tells how a Buffalo manager secured the "summer garden" effect seen above at little cost

Another Way of Getting that Much-Desired "Cool" Effect

CAMOUFLAGING the side of a theatre so that it looks like a summer garden has been most successfully accomplished by Elmer C. Winegar, managing director of the Central Park theatre, Buffalo, who also directs the policies of the Premier theotre, another big neighborhood house in the Central Park district of Buffalo.

The Central Park theatre, before Mr. Winegar began his camouflaging work, presented a somewhat barren appearance, in fact the brick side of the house was anything but inviting to one seeking relief from the hot weather. Mr. Winegar saw that if he was to keep his patrons coming when the mercury was threatening to go out the top of the thermometer, he must do something.

This "something" took the form of a transformation of the barren side of the house into a most attractive spot. With white lattice work, hanging gardens, flower tubs and attractive frames, Mr. Winegar produced the effect illustrated in the photograph. The result, according to Mr. Winegar, was an immediate jump in box office receipts. It was the application of Christian Science. Make the people think about cool things and they will forget about the heat, reasoned Mr. Winegar. With this in mind he also had a large sign painted with the words "Central Park Summer Garden" which he placed in front of the house.

So successful was the outside cooling process that Mr. Winegar determined to extend it to the interior, so he decided on a Japanese decorative scheme. Lanterns were hung over the electric lights, wind bells were hung throughout the house so that the least breeze would keep the audience reminded of the fact that there at least it was cool, lattice work was placed about the stage and a small fountain erected in the centre, surrounded by ferns and flowers.

The globes on the big street lights were repainted in a light green and new awnings placed over entrances and windows.

The Central Park is in a neighborhood inhabited by wealthy citizens, all of whom have large gardens and appreciate flowers, so Mr. Winegar's move was widely and favorably commented upon.

Inasmuch as a large percentage of the Central Park patronage is made up of motorists, Mr. Winegar has not overlooked catering to this class of business. In the rear of the theatre is a large vacant space which is never used, so Mr. Winegar decided to turn it into a parking lot for autos. The theatre is directly on Main street and few cars can park in front of the house on the street. The lot has room for about 75 machines. Motorist-patrons when informed that they were welcome to park their cars here were greatly appreciative and this part of the audience has also increased noticeably of late. The parking space has been attractively laid out with ferns and flowers and is also kept clean and free from stones, nails, etc., that might puncture tires. An attendant is always on hand to watch the cars.

Mr. Winegar is a great believer in keeping the community interested in THEIR theatre and he declares that the manager and the house staff were really employes of the patrons. During the war, Mr. Winegar was prominent in relief work and organized several soldiers and families' relief organizations in his own and other sections of the city. Whenever a contingent of drafted men left from the district Mr. Winegar held a special performance for them and presented the outfit with needed camp articles. Today Winegar is one of the most popular men in North Buffalo.

Butterfly, Milwaukee, Seeks to Establish Confidence in Advertising

So you see consistent, honest advertising has its effect on all classes.

In advertising a theatre the manager must look to the future, rather than to the immediate gain which he may derive from a sensational ad, full of exaggerations. This rule, of course, holds not only in advertising, but in the selection of photoplays, courtesy on the part of the ushers, quality of music and in fact every branch of the theatre. A reputation for reliability in advertising is worth untold advantage to a theatre, or in fact to any business institution.

In the matter of securing effective display in our ads we find this is a difficult thing. In Milwaukee, where rates are lower than in many towns, and where over two solid pages of advertising matter are used every week-end, one must be on the alert to get a good display for his ad.

In our ads we always try to do the opposite from the other local theatres wherever it is possible. If the other theatres are using one-half page ads we use about ten inches. If the other theatres are running small copy, we break forth with a big splash. Sometimes we run a small ad, surrounded by a lot of white space, and again we will run big ads with a great deal of display type. Sometimes our ad space will be practically filled with one good looking cut of a star, with a small amount of reading matter.

In all our ads we aim to keep out of the rut into which a theatre can so easily fall. It takes considerable thinking and watching the field to bring results.

Each town and theatre provides its own problem of advertising, but I think the paramount rules of salesmanship will always be found to apply to theatre advertising and should be followed by every theatre manager who cares anything for the good-will of the public and the reputation of his theatre.

Garfield, Chicago, Pleases Patrons with Parcel-Checking System

On Labor Day, Sept. 1st., the Garfield Theatre, one of the well known residential houses of Chicago, will celebrate its tenth birthday. Plans are being completed for an "Anniversary Week Program," which it is expected will bring the "Garfield" into the limelight. The Garfield is one of the Schaefer Enterprises and is managed by Charles H. Ryan.

It has always been a house which pays special attention to details and many good ideas in modern exhibition has originated there.

One comes to our attention at this time. The Garfield catering largely to residential patronage, found people coming to the theatre loaded down with packages, so they devised a checking system that is a great convenience especially on Saturday night.

Small aluminum checks, all numbered, were secured, and when a patron arrives carrying packages, the door man gives the person a check and writes the number of the check on the package.

A check room with shelves has been provided. The system has been in vogue for two years and gives excellent service. That it is appreciated by the Garfield clientele goes without saying.

"When the Printer Turns Film Exhibitor"

It Ought to Result in Some Good Advertising Copy —And in the Case of Smith, of Fond du Lac, It Does

PUBLICITY of the quality sort is a hobby with F. R. Smith, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Fond du Lac, Wis. Before becoming a moving picture house magnate, Mr. Smith was a printer and a good one. He spent some ten years as a disciple of Benjamin Franklin, after which he took his demit from the craft and engaged in the theatre business.

But he never forgot his experience at the case; he has never failed to draw on that experience in order that he may get the best results in the matter of display.

Mr. Smith believes thoroughly in newspaper advertising. There are two daily newspapers in Fond du Lac—the Daily Commonwealth and the Daily Reporter. Mr. Smith's contract calls for fifteen inches daily in each paper on the best pages carrying local news. On most days his copy calls for even larger space—sometimes it goes to a full page.

Before he "lays out" his advertisement or writes a line of copy, Mr. Smith studies his picture. He gathers all the information possible concerning it. He satisfies himself as to its merits; he sifts out the strong points from the weak; he studies and analyzes the publicity matter that comes with it; he studies the criticisms in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News, which he counts a "first aid" to all motion picture advertisement writing. He selects his illustration, first, with a view to catching the eye and compelling attention; second, with a view to getting the maximum amount of white space and opportunity for the largest use of selling points. Then he makes the layout and writes his copy.

Take the week opening Monday, July 14th, as an illustration. Mr. Smith had provided a strong program for that week—but his patrons are educated up to a point where they expect such things almost as a regular diet.

The program for the first three days was a Paramount-Artcraft Special, Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Mr. Smith began advertising it a week in advance by means of "teasers"—two six-inch displays, double threes, one on each of the best local pages of the two daily papers. There were ten of these—two new ones each day, up to and including Friday. On Saturday he used a double eight and a half-seventeen inches; on Monday he went to a four-column twelve, top column, upper right-hand corner, best local page. At the top was the name-plate—B-I-J-O-U—it is always at the top—it's the theatre's trade-mark. Then a strong display line—"A Woman's Soul Laid Bare." In the center of Space twelve and one-half inces across four columns is here used in neat fashion. The article explains the small print an attractive two-column illustration, leaving space on either side for type matter. In the first column the caption "Wife in Name Only;" the second, "What is Marriage?"

Below the illustration:

"I thought I could feel the atmosphere of other women about him—loose women, bad women it seemed to me—and my fear and disgust began to be mixed with a kind of physical horror."

—Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

Then in the boldest type of all, the title, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." There was sufficient white space to make the advertisement stand out in bold relief. On Tuesday and Wednesday the space was reduced, the seventeen-inch advertisement run on the previous Saturday being repeated.

But this wasn't nearly all the advertising that was done: Mr. Smith arranged with a local store to place the new song hit, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," on sale a week before the picture was to be shown. The bars of music were thrown on the screen at each performance. The chorus was also thrown on the screen with the name of the store where the song could be purchased.

Ordinarily he would have supplemented this work with a use of billboards, but no space was available in desirable locations. As a result, he confined himself to newspaper publicity, to screen publicity and store co-operation.

The fruits of this publicity campaign were shown in a large attendance at each performance. "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" went over big in spite of the fact that the weather was intensely hot.

The program for the last three days of the week was Elsie Ferguson in "The Avalanche." Mr. Smith made up his own copy for this advertisement, which first appeared in the Thursday papers. It was a double nine, a head picture at the bottom, the type at the top—Bijou—Elsie Ferguson—The Avalanche—well displayed. On Friday the space was somewhat reduced; on Saturday the space was given over to a three-section "ad"—last time Elsie Ferguson—announcement in the first section; announcement of the Sunday program in the second section; announcement of Monday's program in the third.

This is Mr. Smith's method of getting business. It is the result of experience and the trying out of various methods. As already stated, he is a firm believer in newspaper space; he is buying more newspaper space this year than he ever bought before. He says it pays. And he ought to know.

Another Way of Getting That "Cool Effect"

Mr. Winegar has been in the motion picture business in Buffalo for eleven years, starting as manager of the Grand and later of the Bijou Dream theatres. He then went with the local Universal branch and then took over the management of the Central Park and Premier theatres. He has during the past few years been active in taking pictures of local events for his own and other houses. So successful has he been in his present position that when other neighborhood houses are nearly empty, the Central Park and Premier are enjoying capacity audiences.

"Common Sense" a Safe Rule Says Schlichter, of Baltimore

COMMON sense in advertising," and "the public be pleased" are the slogans of Louis Schlichter, president of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland and head of the Edmondson Amusement Company which owns and operates the Bridge and Edmondson theatres in Baltimore. If results stand for anything, Mr. Schlichter has certainly proved that his mottoes are the correct ones because he has gained for these two theatres a place among the first class movie houses of the city.

"I go on the theory," he said, "that I must spend a lot of money to bring people to my theatres, but after they have started they will continue to come. You know, there is a right and a wrong way to advertise and some people could spend $1,000 for publicity purposes and not show as great results as another who has spent only $100.

"For instance," he continued, "some theatres advertise in Sunday's papers what they are going to show the following Saturday. That is all wrong. The average person doesn't remember that far. Why, people call me on the 'phone to know what I'm going to show on Monday after I've already advertised my program on Sunday. In order to overcome this difficulty, I give out at each performance these favors with my weekly program printed on the back."

He produced a handsome one by one and a half inch lithograph of Mme. Nazimova. Each week, he explained, he gave away a picture of a different actor or actress and most of his patrons, he added, were making collections of these with the purpose of framing them.

Another thing he declared would be a waste of money would be for him to stage lobby displays. He showed that the street on which he is located is the thoroughfare to several suburbs and few persons pass his theatre on foot. Most of them go by in motors or trolley cars and they would not have time he said to get more than a peep of such a display as they go by.

However, this does not mean that M. Schlichter does not stage advertising stunts. One Monday morning, residents in the neighborhood for miles around his theatres awakened to find hanging on the knobs of their front doors, imitation lanterns made of red pasteboard, announcing that Mme. Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" would be shown at the Bridge that day. The result was that the picture was shown at each performance to crowded houses.

On another occasion he brought Pearl White, the motion picture actress to his theatre to address his patrons. Nor is this all, every time his theatres celebrate an anniversary of their founding, he distributes a gift to each member of his audience.

Mr. Schlichter has succeeded in putting the personal touch in his advertising and building up

Stage Settings of Unusual Size for California Theatre, Los Angeles

FOR artistic and elaborate embellishment on the stage of offerings on the screen, the stage setting offered at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, for the week of July 14th, seldom has been surpassed, and large crowds for every performance attested to the attractiveness which local audiences found in the programme.

According to Managing Director Leonhardt and Stage Manager Whisler, who designed it, the big woodland setting used for the feature picture was the largest of its kind ever constructed in motion picture theatres.

The entire width of the stage was taken up for the setting. Depth and perspective were provided by the skillful arrangement of trees and shrubbery in the foreground, while a striking illumination of moonlight on the water effect was created on the background.

The whole served to provide a setting for a version of a "Midsummer Night's Dream," in which Miss Beatrice Neal, a local singer of note, sang several compositions that harmonized with the spirit of the staging and the feature picture.

This feature was "Other Men's Wives," the Thomas H. Ince production starring Dorothy Dalton, and came at the climax to a well-rounded programme. The first attraction was the presentation of the overture from the "Merry Wives of Windsor" under the direction of Nicolo Donatelli and his thirty-piece orchestra. Following the news reel and an organ recital came the Universal feature comedy, "Monkey Stuff," one of the most popular of the organization's subjects, in which Joe Martin, their unique chimpanzee, was starred. A new Mutt and Jeff comedy completed the bill.

"Merchandising" Your Film Attractions

Some Observations on the Method Pursued by Jensen and Von Herberg with the Figures on a Recent Campaign

ONE of the firms first to take stock of exploitation of motion pictures and decide to banish all previous forms of advertising in favor of the daily newspaper was the Greater Theatres organization in Seattle, more widely known under the ownership names of Jensen & Von Herberg.

This big firm controls the Coliseum, Mission, Liberty and Strand Theatres in Seattle, two or more theatres in Portand and the handsome new Rialto in Butte. Now, as well as over a period of three years, Jansen & Von Herberg are unquestionably the largest exhibitor buyers of newspaper advertising space in the United States.

The number of their theatres in individual cities makes their volume of advertising dominate. The meaning of this will be more clear when one learns that on a single Sunday in one newspaper in Seattle, for the exploitation of four shows simultaneously they have bought for each theatre five full length 300-agate-line columns per theatre—a total of 6,000 agate lines in a day; each advertisement on a separate page with separate publicity articles, pictures and advance reading or feature notices. Often on the larger of their attractions for a day a full-page of 2,400 agate lines will be bought for the one attraction and the three other theatres will have five full columns each. No department store in Seattle exceeds 6,900 agate lines in a single day.

In addition large space is used in the other Sunday newspaper of Seattle and second-in-volume space is carried in an evening paper of Seattle, the Star.

This is colossal advertising, broadly and intelligently conceived not by agencies that build hard, metallic copy on theories or philosophies of what ought to appeal to the Seattle public, but by skilled advertising men exclusively employed by the Jensen & Von Herberg organization.

In the same city James Q. Clemmer, owner of the Clemmer Theatre, and a direct competitor of the bigger organization, though with but one theatre, parallels any one unit of the bigger competitor with equally powerful and intelligent advertising and his house is a money-maker.

Jensen & Von Herberg have had at least two managers known to me with an abiding faith in newspapers; the same faith that Mr. Von Herberg has in person. These two managers were Ralph Ruffner, long their powerful man in Portland and later transferred to their Butte Rialto to launch it in keeping with the organization's policies. Mr. Ruffner has since left them and is now guiding the Rialto on Market street, San Francisco. The other strong stand-by of his two chiefs is E. J. Myrick of Portland and now in Butte at their Rialto. Both of these men are showmen who have always understood the vital sales power of the daily newspapers. Knowing all the tricks of the trade, knowing how to catch attention by stunts and outside exploitations, they have never rated their stunt knowledge as their first asset. They have counted on newspaper advertising power first and stunt-attraction as secondary; the latter a good thing in its way and place, but not the certain way of making the box-office figures come out right on Saturday night.

I imagine that the exhibitors in the larger cities of the United States, at least, will be interested in seeing a typical Jensen & Von Herberg advertising campaign on a single production and I have therefore collected such a campaign from our Seattle manager, Mr. P. G. Lynch, on "As A Man Thinks." This production has just finished its engagement at Jensen & Von Herberg's Coliseum, Seattle.

Mr. Von Herberg personally liked the show. It possessed many opportunities for good advertising and exploitation and he told his managers to "Go to it." They did, as is evidenced by the summaries appended herewith and by the pictorial reproductions of their entire series of advertisements. Tabulated in lineage their appropriation reads as follows:

Here on one production is a concentrated skilled advertising campaign with a total lineage of 6,390 agate lines covering the three daily newspapers of the city. The expectations of Mr. Von Herberg as to the "turn-over" at the box office on this production were fully realized.

Analysis of the copy will reveal that Jensen & Von Herberg's system of printed salesmanship is to sell the plot of the story to the public through the newspapers. There are many exhibitors who rank high in the industry who consider the revealing of plot to be unintelligent and damaging to business. In this attitude they are unmistakably wrong. Selling "plot" via advertising does not mean for the advertising man to tell all there is to the story, but to lead reader interest and imagination into the seeing of the show by taking challenging and inviting leads or angles out of the plot. Book publishers for a decade have founded their entire system of printed selling on this policy.

Similar selling of the plot of "As A Man Thinks" to the public of New Orleans resulted in an eleven-day run at the Saenger Globe theatre in that city and a like method exploitation gave "As A Man Thinks" a two weeks first run at the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles, with a third week held open by the management for the prolongation of the run to twenty-one continuous days. Similar advertising in St. Paul produced a ten-day continuous first run at the Blue Mouse Theatre in that city.

"Wow!"—Here's an Exhibitor Writing Editorials for Censors

REGARDLESS of the criticism that will probably come to him from other branches of the industry for inviting censorship, Ezra Rhodes, of Elkhart, Indiana, probably did much to increase his patrons support recently when he wrote an editorial favoring censorship.

Mr. Rhodes is secretary, treasurer and business manager of the LaSalle and Castle theatres at South Bend, Indiana; Orpheum, Family and Venetian at Elkhart, Ind., and the Jefferson theatre at Goshen, Ind.

Recently he penned an editorial which was distributed to patrons of his various theatres in the form of pamphlets. This editorial said:

"The size and number of the audiences drawn by the exhibition of the clean, interesting moving picture, "Daddy Long Legs" in South Bend and Elkhart, raise an interesting ,though by no means, a new question.

"If large profits can be taken from the exhibition of clean pictures, why do the producers insist in pandering to the curiosity that has its basis in perverted taste and immorality?

"This has been so largely a man's world that regulation of the motion picture industry is practically non-existant in forty-five states. Refusal by legislatures to interfere by creating censorships is due to the fallacious theory that the people are strong an dsensible enough to control the quality of their amusements by withholding their patronage from immoral films.

"The same reasoning delayed the restriction and prohibition of the liquor traffic for a number of years. The belief was that each man must work out his own salvation. When the people finally awoke to the fact that human nature was too weak for that, acts to abolish the saloon came with a rush.

"Has it ever occurred to many that the spending of millions in the schools for the inculcation of morality and uprightness only to have the effect of the teaching discounted in ten minutes at the cinema show around the corner constitutes an anomaly that would be ridiculous if it were not tragic? Yet that is what we Americans are doing in our misguided interpretation of what constitutes liberty?

"The question is, has an amusement purveyor the right to entire your daughter to have her mind tainted by contemplating vice? He has the legal right now, owing as suggested above, to our living in a man's world. But unless we are mistaken, the arrival of woman's suffrage will change that. Like the saloonist, the picture producer is abusing his privileges and hastening the day when they will be taken away from him.

"Good restriction will be preceded by some hopeless half-measures. Pennsylvania is one of

"Usherettes" as "Farmerettes" Attract Attention for Superba

HOUSE Manager W. E. Jones, of the Superba theatre, San Diego, Cal., didn't depend on Charlie Chaplin's name alone when he played "Sunny Side." Here is a photograph of his lobby display and his fair usherettes. Note the "farmerettes." Who wouldn't stop to see them, even if he had never heard of Chaplin and Sunnyside?

Seriously speaking here is a demonstration of what can be done at very small expense to attract extra business for a picture, and also add a little novelty to things about a theatre, which alone is good stuff because it starts people talking. Mr. Jones has used his stills to advantage and certainly the announcement of the star and title of the film could be seen "a mile away."

If this were a dramatic offering we might think that it is a little flashy, but on a Chaplin it is just the thing.

That this display attracted extra business which made the small expense of time and money more than worth while, goes without saying.

Weisfelt Heads Exploitation Department Started by Fischer in Milwaukee

A department of exploitation has been inaugurated at the Alhambra Theater, Milwaukee, by Manager George Fischer and has proved its practibility from the start.

Edward J. Weisfelt has been appointed Director of Exploitation, and it is his work to create ideas by which productions at the Alhambra may be more satisfactorily presented. In short, it is Mr. Weisfelt's job to get all there is out of an attraction in its staging, publicity and lobby display.

The new department recently demonstrated its practicability by its successful co-operation with the management in the presentation of "A Romance of Happy Valley." In the newspaper ads. the atmosphere of the play was started. As the patron entered the lobby the atmosphere was carried out further, as the lobby was turned into a rural roadway, with rustic fences and corn stalks on either side.

On entering the foyer of the theatre one found himself in an old fashioned living room. The stage resembled a barn yard and the musical specialty between shows consisted of a group of rural lads and lassies, who gathered around an old square piano and sang old fashioned songs.

The uniformity of ideas and the atmosphere which was carried out in each department was the direct result of the department of exploitation.

Another striking example of how this department may be used has been demonstrated recently in the staging of song numbers between shows at the Alhambra. Recently Princess Wasula, an Indian singer, was secured to give the customary musical number between shows. At most theatres the singer would have walked out on the stage, given her numbers and made her exit. But not so at the Alhambra with the department of exploitation on the job. The Indian singer was given a suitable background, with a wigwam placed in a splendid set, with special lighting effects.

The same results were obtained with a male trio, which instead of just walking out and singing their songs, were discovered in a club room set, one of them playing solitaire, another smoking and a third reading, while they sang.

The fact that there is a special department working to create these ideas results in the Alhambra shows being just a little different and more attractive than the average photoplay program. The Manager of the average large city house is too busy with the executive end of the management to do justice to exploitation ideas, but with an aide, who does nothing but think of methods of presentation, the most can be secured from film productions.

The Michigan Tyro Who Showed Some Speed

Lane, of Jonesville, Michigan, Had Plenty of Warnings From Oldtimers, But He "Just Went Ahead and Did It"

EXPERIENCED small town exhibitors may say after reading this story "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," all of which may be true and then again it may not. There is many an "old timer" in this business who is five years in arrears in his exhibiting ideas, and doesn't know it. He is using the same old methods that have always made him a living since he first used General Film service and thought he had to have it, never knowing that he has existed only because the interest in motion pictures has grown and not because he has progressed.

Anyway this is the prize exploitation story of the season and concerns the phenomenal success of Alfred Lane, manager of the one and only theatre in the town of Jonesville, Mich., boasting 1200 souls within the corporation limits but with a good rural district surrounding it. This is what Mr. Lane did:

He booked "Daddy Long Legs" for two days at a rental price of $150, plus a percentage of the receipts when his previous record price for film service had been $6 per day.

He charged thirty-five and fifty cents admission for the feature, when his usual admission had been ten and twenty cents.

And He Got Away With It.

How? By exploiting the picture in a way and to such an extent that Jonesville is talking about it yet.

Here are some of the exploitation ideas that Mr. Lane used. Many of them are not at all new but they were new in Jonesville and the result was "dollars net" which is what Mr. Lane has to consider if he is to remain a "theatrical magnet" in Jonesville.

He purchased a quarter page in his local weekly. Heralds of this display were placed in envelopes bearing a picture of Mary Pickford in a scene from "Daddy Long Legs' and turned over to the postmaster, stamped, to be placed in every rural free delivery mail box within a radius of 27 miles.

He engaged an energetic youth to strap on high stilts concealed by trousers with 12-foot legs and shoes nailed to the bottom, to distribute the dodgers and accompany a truck carrying a piano and a local quartette which visited the neighboring towns. "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs" was sung by a quartette until a fair percentage of the inhabitants could hum verse and chorus a week before the dates of showing.

He contracted for 20 gallons of ice cream which he announced would be distributed free at each performance, and used plenty of "Daddy Long Legs" paper in front of the Jonesville theatre, which has a seating capacity of 500.

Then he mustered an orchestra of six pieces and opened his advance sale with an encouraging response. Seats for all showings were reserved both in the balcony and on the main floor.

Incidentally it is most interesting to note that Lane's first knowledge of the film was only gained from reading the ads in Motion Picture News, the review published by this trade journal, and the description furnished by the exchange salesman.

Lane, by the way, came to Jonesville only a few months ago and obtained a lease on the theatre which had become a white elephant to its owners. At the time the war had its beginning he was more or less famous as a jockey on the British turf and when he came to this country he obtained a position as a piano salesman in Detroit. Attracted by the motion picture theatres in Detroit, he set about to obtain one of his own and limited means necessitated seeking a location far from the beaten paths of the city exhibitors. After signing his lease and installing his projection booth and machine, Lane's knowledge of the business he had chosen was so limited that he did not know of the existence of trade journals or the customary manner of obtaining films and this knowledge had to arrive in the shape of film salesmen who were attracted generally by curiosity and an eagerness to view an exhibitor possessing the temerity to open a house in a community with apparently nothing to draw from. It was Starr, of the Detroit First National Exchange, who loaned Lane the first trade journal he had seen—a copy of the April 5 issue of Motion Picture News.

It is charitable to pass over some of the first programs Lane offered Jonesville, but Jonesville tolerated them and Lane slowly gained a requisite knowledge until he determined to give his rural and faithful audiences pictures that would not compel him to bend low over the piano which he played while his wife sold tickets, in order to hide actual blushes of shame for the quality of his entertainment.

During the showing of the picture, Lane used a slide with the chorus of "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs" between each reel and it was a dignified president of the Jonesville Bank, who led the audience in singing it.

Saturday's shows were patronized almost exclusively by the farmers and their families from the surrounding territory. Automobiles lined both sides of the Main street and the center of the town was so crowded that the visitors, eager to see "Daddy Long Legs" joined in the singing and eat free ice cream, used flivvers of their neighbors as anchorages for buggies and farm wagons.

Starting his show at 8:30 p. m., Lane used a short comedy, which with the chorus slide between each reel of the picture, held his audience until 11:30 o'clock and every merchant in Jonesville kept his store open and did a lucrative business when the theatre closed. It was a unanimous verdict that "Daddy Long Legs" had provided Jonesville with its biggest day in history. Aside from the record financial returns, Lane profited in having gained the friendship of every farmer within a radius of 30 miles or more, scores of them forming delegations that waited on the manager and pledged their patronage in the future if pictures of that sort were to be shown at frequent intervals.

"They all figured I'd lose money," said Lane. "I wouldn't have cared very much if I had, because with this picture I've made more friends in two days than I could gather in a lifetime in any ordinary way. These country people have proved my contention that they'll pay for good pictures and at least once every month I shall launch a similar campaign and put on a big feature. No more junk for me. After 'Daddy Long Legs' there isn't an inhabitant on a rural free delivery route in this section that won't come in for my show. Practically all of them have told me they would and that's the only way I can reach most of them."

The dates of Lane's "Daddy Long Legs" showing came right in the very middle of a harvest season during which the farmers had spent even Sundays in the fields in an effort to make up for the complete lack of labor.

Lane's expenses were confined to $18 a day for his six musicians, making $36 for the four shows; hire of an automobile truck to carry the quartette, postage for the rural free delivery notices, a low rate for his advertisement in the weekly and the ice cream. Members of the quartette and the stilt walker found so much fun in helping put the picture over that they refused all offers of payment and are anxious to join in future campaigns. "This is the spirit to be found in almost any small community," said Lane. "Even in so small a town there is great civic pride and an intense eagerness to help in anything that will make their town shine over surrounding ones.

The auto truck and quartette used by Manager Lane covered all the nearby towns in boosting "Daddy Long Legs"

Harold Franklin Warns Against Misrepresentation in Publicity

By Harold B. Franklin
Managing Director, Shea's Hippodrome

IT is hard to believe that anyone can over advertise, yet I have seen many do this very thing. I do not mean to infer that I am not in favor of advertising, for in fact I am an enthusiastic supporter of it. I favor it in every shape and form and the bigger the better. But I refer particularly to the theatre that exaggerates in its advertising. There is nothing so harmful as misleading the public. Unless advertising is based on truth and sincerity it does more harm than good.

I am personally acquainted with an instance in which a certain theatre took almost a half page to advertise William S. Hart in a re-issue of an old picture, loudly acclaiming it to be the latest production of this star. The management secured a telegram from Mr. Hart indorsing the supposedly "latest release," and this telegram was used by the enterprising exhibitor, in his advertisement, inserting the name of the re-issue in place of the picture Mr. Hart referred to. The result, when the fake was discovered, was that the manager really did more harm to himself than he imagined. Today his public cannot help but question any advertising that he may do. Mr. Hart personally gave me the facts in the above case.

The exhibitor owes it to himself and to the industry at large not to misrepresent in his advertising. Today the motion picture is held in high esteem by the American public and no one has the right to endanger it by bogus advertising. Show me the ad of a theatre and I will show you the personality of the man who runs the house. It is the impression that we get from the advertisements that help to formulate the character of the theatre. An ad should look your public straight in the eye—and tell the truth.

Your patrons invariably can sense insincerity. It is a sense that does not always work rapidly, but in the end misrepresentation fails whether it originates from the exhibitor, producer or distributor.

Advertising which raises hopes that the show does not fulfill is worse than no advertising at all. Every ad should be a straight-from-the-shoulder talk to your audience to be. True advertising builds up prestige for your theatre when properly applied and the reverse is the rule when it is abused.

Truth in publicity is as necessary for success to the theatre as good music, good service and good pictures. Unless advertising can create business of a more than temporary nature—advertising cannot succeed. This is best summed up in the words of Lincoln when he said, "You can fool part of the people all of the time and all of the people part of the time; but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

Experience has shown that the theatre that lies in its advertising is spending money in digging a grave into which sooner or later it will fall. If only one patron discovers the fake he will pass the word around so fast that like a hurricane it will soon be known to the entire city.

Truth in press notices should also be the aim of exhibitors. Superlative adjectives should be tabooed as much as possible. If the picture is a good one it will need few laudatory descriptive phrases and the fewer used the better. Highly colored press notices make tiresome reading, as the average theatregoer can soon decipher their exaggerated phraseology. Some exhibitors in showing re-issues in which stars, who a few years ago were not so well known, and who were featured together, loudly shout that this is the only production ever made in which both players appear. When patrons attracted by your announcement, see how old the picture is, it will be their last visit to your house.

Truth in all theatre publicity is one of the necessities of success.

Talley Springs Innovation

TALLEY'S, Los Angeles, sprung an innovation on Los Angeles with the showing of "Sunnyside," the latest Charlie Chaplin release. The picture was played simultaneously at the Broadway Theatre and Kinema for the first week, then during the second week the showing was confined to the Broadway, where it had to be extended to three weeks.

The advertisement shown to the right is one of the quarter page ads used in the exploitation of the subject. L. A. Weingarten, director of publicity for Talley's Broadway Theatre, declares:

"Working on the basis that advertising is the art of stating the truth attractively we have built a big business here. Chaplin is the biggest card in the city and when we sprung the dual showing

Laurie Goes After Children with Special Shows in Mornings

THE photographs to the left illustrates one of the means used by Manager A. J. Laurie, of the Strand, Ottawa, to arouse interest among the children in a series of special morning matinees. There are three sides to the sign used on the pony-cart. One side reads as shown in the photograph. The other reads, "Special Children's Show Tomorrow Morning at the Strand Theatre." The back reads, "Children—Our Special Morning Shows for You Start Tomorrow Morning."

In addition to the cart as an advertising stunt, about three hundred window cards were placed on the special children's performance, and about ten thousand circulars distributed.

In newspaper space five inches across two columns, Manager Laurie used the following talk under the display heading, "A Message to the Mothers of Ottawa:"

"One of the most perplexing questions confronting YOU—the mother of children—when your LITTLE ONES cry 'Mother, take us to the Movies today,' is 'Where shall I send them?' We know that All Children love the Motion Pictures and You know that All Motion Pictures are not suitable for their immature minds. The Special Saturday Morning Show for Children at the STRAND will meet the long-felt need for Photoplays that are suitable for the LITTLE ONES. Starting next Saturday at 10 A. M. we will present the first of a series of shows consisting of subjects of special appeal to the children. 'Babes In the Woods,' a screen version of the Kiddies best beloved Fairy Tale, will be the feature offering. Charlie Chaplin will be there to add the necessary comedy relief and other subjects chosen for their appeal to the Kiddies, will be presented for the amusement of YOUR CHILDREN. Send them to the STRAND next Saturday morning—or better still—bring YOUR CHILDREN with you and watch them enjoy the Pictures to their heart's content at a Show specially arranged for their Own LITTLE SELVES."

I just received a copy from one of the film companies and think it is fine. If the price is more than I am sending, send the NEWS on and a bill for the rest.—Thomas R. A Teaser Campaign that Worked Wonders

"Worked?"—Why That Isn't the Word for the Results That Followed McWilliams Campaign on "A Midnight Romance"

EXHIBITOR nerve which unhesitatingly cast aside all petty fears that the introduction of new exploitations would bring him scoff from the high-heeled, reform class, enabled J. F. McWilliams, manager of the Grand theatre of Madison, Wisconsin, to accomplish one of the greatest feats in the motion picture history of that state on a special feature attraction recently.

Launching his teaser campaign with all of its mystery generated from no place except a detective headquarters with expert publicity agents, McWilliams shot a broadside into Wisconsinites that in a mild way had them sleeping with "gats" under their pillows and burglar alarms installed on their front doors.

It was during and previous to the run of "A Midnight Romance," starring Anita Stewart, that McWilliams found occasion to pull off a stunt he'd been thinking about for months.

A week before the attraction opened, a mysterious want ad appeared in the classified ad page of every Madison newspaper. Set in a big box, topped with a word, "WANTED," the six lines read:

"Information of the whereabouts of Marie Alexander. Disappeared from a party of refugees, landed on the Atlantic coast. Medium height, dark hair, brown eyes, figure slender. Has soft hands with long tapering fingers. Speaks four languages fluently. Known to have friends in Madison. Address X. Y. Z., Democrat."

Everybody began looking for the beautiful Marie.

Next day a warning to local ladies' clothiers, advising them that Marie was very likely to steal anything she could get her hands on, appeared in all newspapers. In this way Mr. McWilliams gained the attention of all managers, employes and owners of clothing stores.

The next day a letter sent to McWilliams by H. J. Fitzgerald, of Milwaukee, was published in the Madison newspapers. Everyone in the film business knows Fitzgerald is manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Milwaukee, but the Madison population didn't know it. They thought he was "a detective or something."

Poor Madison! It's days were spent in looking for that mysterious woman. The city is just the right size for city dwellers to be more or less familar with all the other city dwellers. The thought that a stranger was in their midst caused no end of local scandal.

And then Mr. McWilliams let everybody in on the great mystery. The papers ran an ad. reading "SHE'S FOUND. THANKS" as a heading and told the whole story, referring the reader to the next page where a larger display announced the coming presentation of "The Midnight Romance" and extolling its merits.

"Common Sense the Safe Rule," Says Schlicter

of a patronage. Visitors to his theatres seem to feel that he is their friend although many of them have had a chance to do more than bid him the time of the day. However, they have become imbued with the idea that he is constantly working to their benefit instead of his own.

He has done this not only by greeting his patrons with a pleasant "Good Evening" as they are entering or leaving the theatres.

It has gone more deeply than that. One striking example of this attitude was an occasion when he contracted for a well-known picture without the chance to see it exhibited privately. When the reels were delivered, he and his wife reviewed it and when his patrons gathered to see the picture they had a shock awaiting them. At each performance, Mr. Schlichter appeared before his audience and announced that because he had learned the feature he had advertised was very vulgar, he would not show it. He could not, he said, display such a picture before the many young folks and children that comprised a part of his audience. He added that he had gathered some substitute pictures at the last minute, but because some of them were old films he would be glad to refund the admission price to those who did not wish to stay. But everybody stayed.

Another occasion on which he showed his concern for his audience was when the "flu" had gained such headway in Baltimore. He immediately began running between his shows slides which told his patrons what to do to avoid the malady. When an agitation was started among the people of the city to close up the theatres and moving picture houses, he pointed out that a better way in which to educate the people who do not read the papers, how to prevent the "flu" would be by means of the motion picture screen. Mr. Schlichter does not look upon such things as these as advertising but he says that they have a psychological effect. They impress people that your idea is "the public be pleased," he said.

Mr. Schlichter's task is difficult because his audience is a mixed one. He has to show pictures that will appeal to the working class that patronize his theatre as well as plays that will impress folks in the fashionable surburbs who motor in to see his evening performance. But he does this by feeling the pulse of his audience, as it were, and by showing the latest pictures that will appeal to both.

M. Schlichter has been in the motion picture business in Baltimore for five years. Last January he was elected president of the Exhibitors' League by a large majority.

"Oh Boy" to Be Staged a La Ziegfeld in Omaha

"Oh Boy" offers opportunities for special exploitation stunts of which exhibitors are taking advantage.

C. H. Ballentine, manager of the "Muse" theatre, Omaha, has arranged a campaign with the department stores and music stores on "Oh Boy" music and the principal soda fountain will soon be selling an "Oh Boy" fizz. The orchestra at the Muse is playing selections from "Oh Boy" at every performance, although the picture does not open until August 3rd.

In the cabaret scene of the picture "Lefty" Flynn requested the orchestra to play the Flat Bush number from "Oh Boy." The picture will be stopped and six girls dressed exactly as chorus girls in the story will do the Flat Bush number on a run-way over the audience—in other words the picture will be put on as a musical comedy.

Thornton of Springfield, and His Recipe for Theatre Success

GENTLEMEN, meet Mr. Harry Thornton, manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Springfield, Illinois, one of the livest exhibitors in the state! Probably you have seen him before. Before he turned into an exhibitor he was seen in big-time vaudeville for many years. He saw the possibilities of the "moving pictures" way back in the days when "The Great Indiana Train Robbery" was the "Birth of a Nation" of its time. It happened somewhere between Joplin, Mo., and Erie, Pa. Mr. Thornton came to Springfield, put his savings into a small "moving picture" show, and started in to get rich.

Father-in-law W. W. Watts owned the Vaudette, and soon took over the Gaiety. Mr. Thornton was placed in charge. At first it was difficult to get folks into the Gaiety to see pictures, as the house had always been a vaudeville theatre. The biggest features on the market were booked, and the best program available was secured. Things began to look up. After some time the Triangle program was formed, and Thornton grabbed the rights to it for Springfield.

People here didn't know a thing about Griffith, Ince or Sennett—never heard of them. But it wasn't long before they became acquainted. The Triangle stars soon began to flash on the film horizon, and it was not long before the Gaiety was the most popular theatre in this city.

The Gaiety secured the Artcraft-Paramount program, added Goldwyn, and booked in all the big features that were good. Fox comedies, Billy Parsons comedies, James Montgomery Flagg comedies, L-Ko comedies, and other makes were booked. The Gaiety always uses a feature and a two-reel comedy. No travel, scenic or educational films are used, because it would make the program too lengthy. No show is ever speeded up at the Gaiety, even though there are a thousand people waiting in the lobby. Everything is run on schedule.

Big specials like "The Heart of Humanity," "Mickey," etc., are put in for a week's run. The two pictures named broke the house record for attendance, one coming the first week in Lent, and the other the last week in Lent. This was considered phenomenal.

Today the Gaiety spends thousands of dollars annually with the local newspapers, and the amount is steadily growing. Space sells at a very high rate in Springfield, the picture houses being charged at the same rate as the legitimate and vaudeville theatres. One inch of cut is allowed free for every inch of advertising, and one half of reading matter.

The exhibitor can take his choice. This is a liberal arrangement, and seems satisfactory to both parties. It is not unusual for the Gaiety to run a half-page ad. on a big production. Two were used on "The Heart of Humanity." Big space always brings results. Shows are not advertised as being the "greatest we have ever shown." Only the extra good ones are billed in such lavish terms.

The Gaiety Theatre has always made a feature of its orchestra. Under the direction of George Ecklund it has developed into a fine organization. Patrons often say the music alone is worth the price of admission. A giant pipe organ is also used. Each picture is reviewed before presentation and the music for it selected by Mr. Ecklund. It is doubtful if there is a theatre of the calibre of the Gaiety in the country where the picture is put on better.

Mr. Thornton is a crank on projection. As a result the projection at the Gaiety is as near perfect as it can be.

How McVoy Used "Orphan Idea" to Advantage Showing "Daddy Long-Legs"

ROSS A. McVOY, manager and treasurer of the Morgan theatre, Auburn, N. Y., has the distinction of being the first exhibitor in York State to sign a contract for "Daddy Long Legs," with a booking for May, some ten days after the picture's exhibition at the New York Strand.

Just what kind of a showman Mr. McVoy is can be judged by those who were approached on the subject of first bookings on this picture. McVoy was not dismayed by what he knew his expense account would be on this feature and recognizing the unusual possibilities the picture presented, he began work immediately on his advertising campaign. Before his showing dates of three days had arrived, the Regent theatre, Rochester, asked for an eleven-days' showing, and Mr. McVoy consented to later dates, finally accepting June 8-9-10.

Then to use Mr. McVoy's own expression as written in a personal letter to a member of this department: "Old Man Weather sat in the game and it blew off hotter than the exhaust from a Liberty motor."

McVoy knew what hot weather does to business and Central New York summers are just as extreme as its winters, so he began planning to overcome the handicap that nature had thrust upon him.

McVoy had been running a few Saturday morning special shows for children, and when he had his dates on "Daddy" all fixed and was sure that he would have the film barring the fact that it might be delayed in arriving, he went up on the stage of the Morgan one Saturday morning and made a speech about "Daddy Long Legs." Now "Mack," besides being a first-class showman, is a good talker, and the way the children took to his "oration" convinced him that he was on the right track in letting Auburn know that "Little Mary" would soon be at the Morgan.

All that Mr. McVoy said in his speech probably he doesn't know himself, but the children had been able to gather the announcement that their favorite star in a story after their own hearts would be shown at a special matinee the following Saturday morning.

Did they start out and begin the word-to-mouth advertising? They did.

The next move was to personally go out to the Home for Orphan Children and make arrangements to have the matron bring all her charges to see the screen story of one who fictionally at least had lived as they were living. Mr. McVoy had previously made himself acquainted with the matron by giving the orphan children entertainment at the Morgan at different times and found that this invitation was accepted with even more enthusiasm than usual.

Then he had a real idea. The matron of the home is musically inclined and evidently being quite different than the matron whom "Judy" lived with, it was no trouble for Mr. McVoy to induce her to train the children in a little drill, appropriate to the song "Dear Old Daddy Longs." Of course the Morgan manager furnished the songs and also helped in training the children.

The children were given their lesson every day until they were letter perfect in the tune of the song and knew the steps of the drill, and then four of each sex, all under twelve years of age, were loaded into a big automobile and driven about the city singing "Daddy Long Legs." The car had been appropriately decorated and banners stating where and when the picture could be seen were properly displayed.

Not content with so much good publicity, Mr. McVoy went the limit with his children stunt. He had advertised the picture heavily in the papers, laying particular stress on the children's matinee and the part the orphan children would play in the presentation.

How New York Stages the Show

THERE is a striking similarity this week between the three Broadway shows, the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand. They are alike as three separate bills could be. Women stars are featured, broad comedy provides the laughs, and the current events numbers are largely duplicated in all three houses.

Again also the feature offerings are romances, with no hint of melodrama. Just plain love stories, which after all in the main, please more people than the more emotional, tense offerings. It has been a good many years according to Darwin since Man began to make love to Woman. It will be a great many more before the last lover will have had his day. So the love story always interests—on the screen—on the stage—in real life. "All the world loves a lover."

At the Rivoli, the feature picture is "The Better Wife," a romance of an American girl who finds her happiness with a husband in Old England. Clara Kimball Young is the star and in support are such well known people as Lillian Walker, Barbara Tennant and Nigel Barrie.

The Comedy is "Among Those Present," a Paramount-Sennett production and the scenic and educational is combined in a Prizma release, "Oahu," an island of the Hawaiian group. The colorings are beautiful, while the educational values are contained in information concerning pineapples. The pictorial is specially selected and especially interesting.

At the Rialto, Vivian Martin in "Louisiana," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, is being shown as the screen feature.

This is a romance of the New South with a mountain bred girl finding her lover and husband in New York. The comedy is "Are Married Policemen Safe?" and the educational and scenic are also combined in a Universal offering titled "The Bear Hunt." The Magazine is interesting also.

At the Strand, "Through the Wrong Door," with Madge Kennedy starred, is presented for the larger feature. Miss Kennedy meets her lover in the West, but marries him in Philadelphia.

The scenic is an Outing-Chester, "Haitian Nights Tale," being a trip to this land of an ex-slave's futile dream and the comedy is the same as that shown at the Rivoli, "Among Those Present." An educational, "How Animals Behave," released by Pathe, is an analysis of motion.

The announcements for next week are:

Strand—The Love Burglar, with Wallace Reid.

Rivoli—The Way of a Woman, with Norma Talmadge.

Rialto—Nugget Nell, with Dorothy Gish.

Rivoli Theatre

THE stage setting usually prepared for the overture at the Rivoli is withheld to the third and fifth numbers this week, the bill opening with the orchestra's rendition of selections from "Samson and Deliliah", a bibical subject with splendid choruses. The music is decidedly oriental in color but is of a character particularily appealing in its harmony and as rendered by the Rivoli orchestra earns rounds of enthusiastic applause.

"Samson and Deliliah" (Camille Saint-Saens 1835—) was first produced in Weimar in 1877 and later was played in Paris. As an opera in America it had only a single performance in Italian prior to 1908 when Oscar Hammerstein produced it at the Metropolitan. There is no overture to the opera and the only portions for orchestra alone are from the ballets. These are given at the Rivoli.

With the lights in amber and the proceniоum arch and curtain draped to heighten the effect, the music begins with the strings and reeds carrying the burden for a major portion of the score, the brasses and drums coming in to full volume only a few minutes before the number closed.

The Prizma offering is a trip to "Oahu" of the Hawiian Island's group, combining the beautiful and the educational most artistically. The subject deals with the pineapple from its planting to the time it is sealed in the can ready for the table. At the screening and until the title "On this fertile field", "Brunette and Blond" is played when the change is to "Sunset Land" and "Hawaiian Moonlight" to the title "The Laborers." A fox trot is then taken up and continued to the end.

The third number is a novelty in a mechanical piano, called "The Ampico Reproducing Piano", a demonstration of which accompanied by the orchestra held interest for the rendition of "First Movement Concerto in D Minor", with Leo Ornstein as the "Invisable soloist. A stage setting designed by Art Director Wenger accentuated the really very beautiful instrument. This number was lighted in purple.

The Rivoli Pictorial is screened to especially convincing wind effects as a close view of aeroplanes are shown. The orchestra plays a lively gallop for the footage up to Gaumonts contribution of horse races at Paris, France, changing to "At The Race Course" for the title prior to the one man, "home made" aeroplane scene, (International) of "Little but Oh, My", "Sugar Lump" is then taken up until the aeroplane flies out of the camera's vision, when the orchestra remains tacit and effects are used to the views of the illfated Hadley-Paige machine wrecked at Parrsboro, N. S. (Gaumont) when Redemption is played for the footage covering Gaumonts views of a collapsed bridge at New Bern, N. C., and to International's releases of notables in England recieving University honors, up and to "In College Cap and Gown—" when "Wedding March" is played to the Hooligan cartoon comedy title.

"At The Fountain of Youth" with effects serves to screen "Hooligan" continuing to title "Widow Jazzbury,' when the change is to "Milo" for the footage up to Holligans wedding morning title. Siam is then played for the rest of the comedy with a change to "Fairy's Greeting" International's views of "Yanks in Practice" and Kintograms strip concerning Canada's trout streams, with "Wash Rag" used for International's "Easy to Keep Cool" scenes of boys in New Orleans and "The Flying Dutchman" until title "Yankee Athletes" when the change is to "Our Boys Across the Sea" on the views following the title "French and Yankees Celebrate—". This is continued to the end of the pictorial. These latter strips are released by International, and include scenes of the Life Guard at Cape Cod drilling.

Number five on the bill is Edoardo Albano, baritone, rendering the Neapolitan song, "Torno A Surreniento" in Italian, costumed in the clothing of a Neapolitan boatman. A special setting representing a "street" in Vienna with a back ground of typical Viennese buildings, beautifully lighted embellished this number.

At the screening of The Better Wife, the Rivoli feature, Clara Kimball Young starred and such support as Lillian Walker, Barbara Tennant in prominent parts, and for the scenes to the title, "The following afternoon," the orchestra uses "From The Country Side" when "In Holland" (D. S.) is taken up to the title "Count of Cheveral", after which "Romantic Suite" No. 1 is played to the title "At the Baronet's Home", when the change is to "Suite Poetique No. 1" for the footage to title "Dusk finding Lady Beverlay—."

For the sequences following this title and to the scene where the car overturns special selections from the Rivoli library are played to the title "The Days Drag By" when "Sunshine and Shadow" is the selection for the scenes to the title "Helen Has Told Me You are Leaving", after which "Cavatina" the theme is rendered.

On the title "Then In Southern France", "Ma Poulette" is played, to the title "And a Letter from France" when the organ relieves the orchestra.

With the organ accompanying, a violin solo rendition of the theme is given beginning on the title, "You don't mean that you really don't love me?", with the orchestra returning on the title, "Through The Long Night Hours", and again playing the theme. This is continued to the title, "But When Helen Kingdon—" then "Shadowland" is taken up for the scenes prior to the title "The Following Afternoon" with a change to "Lyric Pieces No. 1" for the scenes following. On the title "Hands Up," "Hunkatin" is played, with a return to "Lyric Pieces No. 1" to "Charmian I Do Not Hope—", when the theme is again used to the end of the picture.

Rendition of the "Dollar Princess" by the orchestra is the seventh number on the program and the eighth number is a Mack Sennett comedy, "Among Those Present."

For the screening of the comedy, and to the title "Adrift", "The Booster" is used when a change to "Jolly Good Fellow" is made.

This is played for the footage to the scene when the man sees the girl in the restaurant, when "Any Kind of Man" is taken up to the sequence of the husband rushing home.

From this point, "Ruspana" is used to the title "In the Mountains" when the change is to "Are you Prepared For the Summer" for the scenes up to the first time the Indians are seen. Here "Minnehaha" is played until the Indians begin to dance, when "Indian War Dance No. 9" is used until the title "Tie the Fat Head Up" when a change is made to "War Dance No. 450" and continued to title "Do A Salome."

The selection for the scenes following the title is "Waikikid" with "Sailors Horn Pipe" as the cheif does does a hornpipe dance, and when he finishes dancing, "Hawaiian" Sunshine" is played. "Red Skin" finishes the picture.

The organ solo as played by Professor Firmin Swinnen is "Chant Seraphique" by Henri Bonto.

Strand Theatre

THE Strand overture is from perhaps the most popular of all operas, "Carmen." The music has been played so largely that it is familiar to everyone and therefore brings an added enjoyment when it is well rendered as it is at the Strand.

The excerpts taken from the famous "Bizet" composition, which tells the dramatic story of the reckless and beautiful peasant cigarette girl of Seville and her handsome soldier lover, so well known that it does not need repetition, are as familiar to most ears as a popular melody but that audiences never tire of it is evidenced by the enthusiasm with which it is being received when played by the Symphony company.

With the house dark and the stage lighted in scarlet a liberal number of excerpts of the full score is brilliantly played.

The Strand Topical is screened to the march "Olympia" which is played through the opening strip from International, views of whaling industry. With Pathe's first showing in this number a view of the U. S. warships at Boston, "Chicago Tribune" is played with a change to "Serenade Rococo" on another Pathe strip, "Zoo Babies." For the Topics of the Day, compiled by the Literary Digest, "Eternelle Ivresse No. 1" is played with a change to "Marche Russe" on International's footage devoted to the Czecho Slovak demonstration at Petrograd.

Pathe again furnishes views from Join Le Pont, France, concerning the allied athletes, "Pride of the Army" being played throughout and to International's scenes from England of notables receiving degrees from Oxford University, when "Carry On" is rendered, for the balance of the film.

The Outing Chester shows interesting views on the island of Haiti and is titled "A Haitian Night Tale." It is screened and projected to appropriate music from the organ, with realistic effects as the natives dance.

The vocal number for third place on the program is "Idle Hours" by Jacques Grandei, sung by Walter Pontius, tenor, with an encore number equally brilliant. This number is given with the stage in scarlet and the singer under a spot.

The feature, Madge Kennedy in "Through the Wrong Door" is screened and projected to the title "The Golden Hope Mine" with "Alphonso and Estrella" as the orchestration, with rain effects used at times. At this point the organ relieves the orchestra for five minutes and on the scenes where the bear is chasing the lovers, "bear growl" effects are interpolated.

Following the sequences the "Lion Chase" introduction is used to the title "Just Oscar on a Candy Hunt" when "Mignonette" is played to be followed by "Arabesque" until the scene of the telegram the second time, when telephone bell effects are produced and then "Allegretto" until the title "Wait a Minute."

"Guglielmo Ratcliff" at No. 2 is the next selection and is continued through to the title "His One Consolation" when "Romance" is used followed by "Dramatic Reproach" until the title "I'll Get the Seats for the Follies."

"Budding Spring" (after the introduction) is then played until the scene where Burt opens the door, where there is a short pause.

The orchestra again comes into action on the title "Once As Written—" playing "A Lesson in Flirtation."

After this composition is rendered, the organ relieves again for seventeen minutes which covers the sequences to the title "Gerald? I Sent Him Away."

The orchestra returns on the scene where Burt goes to the door, playing "Agitato Con Moto" until the scene where Miss Kennedy and her father exit, when "Can I Forget?" is repeated until the title "Help, Father"—when "Caprice" is used to the scene where Burt and Miss Kennedy ride away in the limousine. For the rest of the picture "Can I Forget?" is repeated again, beginning at 10 bars before the first ending. Throughout the picture on all the scenes showing the terrific rain storm, rain and wind effects are used effectively. The second vocal solo is "The Valley of Laughter" by Sanderson sung by Dorothy South, soprano. The stage is again lighted in scarlet and the house remains dark.

The educational is "How Some Animals Behave" and is shown to music from the organ.

The comedy, "Among Those Present" (Mack Sennett) is screened to "And He'd Say Ooh La" continued into the action of the picture and is followed by "Mamy 'O Mine" played twice.

"Dance and Grow Thin" is next taken up and is continued until the title "Burglars" when "Agitato No. 40" is used to the title "In the Mountains To Forget", and then the organ is used for the sequences to the title "They Got My Wife."

"Sweet Siamese" is played to the action prior to the title "I'm Satisfied" when an agitato, with "I wonder what William Will Tell" as the Indian shoots the arrows. "Turkestan" follows this selection until the dancer loses his wig and then "Sarah Come Over Here" is used to the end.

The organ solo is "March Solonele" by Semore.

"NOTHING BUT PRAISE"

"I HAVE but praise for the new size of Motion Picture News. It is far more readable than the former issue and allows you the greatest scope for the exploitation of the various features that have made the Motion Picture News a vital necessity to every exhibitor. I wish to compliment you for your progressiveness and to congratulate you on the undoubted success of the new and greater News."—J. A. Partington, Imperial theatre, San Francisco.

Rialto Theatre

THE Rialto overture is from "Raymond or the Queen's Secret" an opera first produced in Paris in 1851 and one of the most tuneful of the author's (C. Ambroise Thomas' 1811-1896) comforms one of the most interesting numbers of the bill and merits the applause with which it is greeted.

The second number is "The Bear Hunt" an unusual picture of a man, Major Jack Allen capturing a bear, without resort to a weapon of any positions. As rendered by the Rialto orchestra it kind. "Woodland Lore" is played through the screening, with this melody and others of similar character used throughout.

"In the Garden of My Heart" sung by Greek Evans, baritone, is rendered with the house dark and the stage in scarlet and the singer covered by an amber spot. The selection is by Ernest Ball. Orchestra accompaniment is given the singer.

The Magazine opens with some exceptional shots of our soldiers in Paris (Gaumont), screened to a stirring march "Here They Come" which is continued throughout the strip to pictures of the whaling industry. International's scenes concerning the capture of whales is run to an Agitato with rushing water and shot effects timing with the action depicted on the screen.

Pathe contributes scenes from the famous ostrich farm at Pasadena, Cal., "Rondo Capriccioso" being used for this footage.

On the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy "Tents of Arabs" is played until the chickens crowing scene, when the change is to "La Cocque" (Manuscript) for the rest of the footage. International shows the world's largest ships on the Hudson, played to "Chicken Cackle."

Scenes taken of the Petrograd Russia, Bolsheviki demonstrations, are furnished by Kintograms, are played to "Coronation March" and "Hymn of Free Russia" with a change to "Tchaikowsky Symphony" when Pathe's views of the recent conferring of University degrees on notables are shown. At the close of this selection "Cleopatra" is used to the end of the number.

An aria from "La Giaconda" by Amilcare Ponchielli (1834-1886) is rendered by Athens Buckley dramatic soprano as the fifth number, to be followed by the feature picture, "Louisiana" with Vivian Martin in the title role.

At the screening "Lonesome Tunes" is played twice slowly, with a change to "Spring Tide Fantasy" on the title "While in the World Below—", with a return to "Lonesome Tunes", starting at number eleven, for the sequences following the title, "Meanwhile Luke Rogers—" until the title "At Oakville Springs" when "He Will Understand" is played.

When "Louisiana" arrives at the summer resort, "Butterfly Dance" (from sign and D. S.) is used to the screening of the title of "The Title of Being Alone," when "Tulips" played softly is taken up to the fade in of the father, when the theme (Lonesome Tunes) is played to the title "That Evening Passes," after which "And Yet," played hesitatingly is continued for its length.

With the title "Grim Forebodings," the organ furnishes the music through the sequences up to where "Louisiana" goes back to the mountains and then the orchestra playing the theme comes back into action.

"Canzone Triste" (from sign) is used on the change of scene to the library, when the theme is again used beginning on the title "Daddy Why Don't You Ever—," and continuing to the scene where Lem is seen to enter the house.

At this point "Mountain Music" is taken up and played to the point where the father enters, when the theme is resumed for the sequences shown to the title, "Just Before Sunset," when library music is played to the end of the picture.

The second orchestration number is "Sari" by Emmerich Kalman and is placed as number eight on the program, to be followed by a Sunshine comedy "Are Married Policeman Safe."

"I've a Shooting Box in Scotland" is played at the screening of this and throughout to the scene where the cells are shown, when "Dinner Time on the Levee" is played for the footage up to the title "Speed Officer Penny," where the change is to "Miss Simplicity."

"Girl of Mine" is begun on the title "She Wasn't Afraid" and played until the "chase" sequences begin when "Some Sweet Day" is used, with another change on the title "Real Love—" when "Do What Your Mother Did" is taken up. Following this selection "Creole Bells" is used to the title "Get My Voters" when "Boy of Mine" (from sign) is the selection until the next title, "Sit and Roll Your Hats," when "Electric Galop" is played to the end of the picture.

The Organ solo is from "Sonata in E Minor" by J. H. Rogers and played by George C. Crook.

the states with censorship, but you can see vicious pictures there just as anywhere else. But the state has taken the step and it won't be long until the outraged public opinion demands teeth for the law and power in its execution.

"Mrs. Ellen A. O'Grady, deputy poliec commissioner of New York, remarked recently that 'the clergy, educators, judges and welfare workers might as well lock up the churches and the schools and close the courts if they are going to permit filthy motion pictures.' Every intelligent parent of adolescents knows that Mrs. O'Grady spoke the substance of truth.

"We do not want national censorship with a horde of political viewers in control of a political bureau. Police power is vested in the states and present responsibility rests with those just representatives who will frame acts that will drive out the vicious films and with an aroused citizenry that will demand their passage."

Ezra Rhodes is 50 years of age. He was born on a farm in Berrien county, Michigan, and resided there until eleven years ago when he entered the motion picture business in South Bend, Ind. He started in the business with a crude storeroom picture show. Today he owns four of the finest motion picture theatres in Northern Indiana, and they maintain an absolutely clean record. Mr. Rhodes has never permitted a vicious sex picture to be shown in any of his theatres.

As the result, Mr. Rhodes enjoys clean, orderly audiences and has been an unusual success in the business. He never has attended school, but despite this handicap he is an unusually interesting conversationalist and a shrewd, keen, business man. Besides owning his theatres, Mr. Rhodes has one of the most beautiful homes in South Bend.

The deal in which he became the owner of the Family and Venetian theatres at Elkhart, was only completed July 19. He expects to remodel both houses and maintain his reputation.

How McVoy Put It Over

Promptly at the time he had advertised his morning showing the orphan children were driven to the theatre, and after being "lined up" in the lobby they marched down the aisle to specially reserved seats, singing their song, the words of which they had memorized. Mr. McVoy also did this part of his publicity stunt artistically. His organist had rehearsed with the children and when the drill had been presented, all the little shavers turned, facing the audience, to sing the chorus of the song, as the lights were gradually dimmed down for the picture.

Did McVoy do business with his matinee? It was the best house he had during the engagement and caused so much talk that Auburn hasn't forgotten it yet.

The orphan idea itself is one that will present itself to every exhibitor who books "Daddy Long Legs" of course and will be effective wherever used but it remained for McVoy to get more than just publicity out of the one picture. He made people talk about the Morgan and about "Mr. McVoy" by doing things a little better than some one else might have done. He made friends of people who perhaps never had attended his performances and when ever an exhibitor can do that he has a probable permanent customer.

The Morgan will bring "Daddy Long Legs" back for a return engagement and is expecting to do as much business if not more than on the initial showing.

Mr. McVoy began his picture career at a little town called Union Springs, N. Y. That he was a born showman is evidenced from the fact that he actually made money running every night in a village of 600 population for over two years and only sold his theatre to take over a larger proposition in Auburn.

In this theatre an upstairs house Mr. McVoy put up such a strong fight that the Morgan owners decided it was better to have him with them than against them and after a year or two he went to the larger and better house as manager. Since then he has reorganized the company owning the theatre and became a part owner, the treasurer of the company as well as its manager.

Help Next Brentwood Release

The second release of the Brentwood Film Corporation through the Exhibitors Mutual Exchange will have a novel advertising feature when it is shown during the week beginning July 27th at the Symphony theatre. The studio staff have cooperated with Manager A. R. Patton of the Exchange in preparing the 1902 Ford Car used in the picture as the mode of conveyance from the station to the hotel where Zasu Pitts was the "moving spirit."

Fay, of Providence, Shows the Balance Between "Screen and Vodvil"

EDWARD M. FAY, manager of Fay's theatre in Providence, R. I., declares that good pictures have the greatest actual pulling power in theatres where vaudeville is run. His theatre runs six vaudeville acts, a feature picture ,a news weekly and a comedy. His treatment of his program is easily seen when his display advertiseing is taken into consideration. In one Providence newspaper this theatre runs on Sunday of each week, previous to the introduction of the new show for that week a seven-column layout of about 100 lines deep.

Of the 700 lines used about 500 lines is used each Sunday to feature the picture, while the remainder of the advertisement simply tells the name and calibre of the vaudeville act.

This advertisement is run from a drawing. The manager employes in addition to his regular press agent and artist, the best that can be found in the city to draw the layout. This is photographed by the engraving department and made into a cut which takes the place of the ordinary type-set advertisement.

Asked why he adopted this form of advertising Mr. Fay will tell you in simple words: "I get better results. A typesetter can set a mechanical advertisement, but it takes an artist to outline an artistic one—one that will set the patrons of the theatre talking before they have ever seen your show. The small increase expense is insignificant in comparison to the satisfaction the manager gets in seeing his advertising handled in an artistic and business-like manner. We play more on the pictures, because we believe the pictures are the thing. There is more competition in that end of the theatrical business and to get your share of it, your advertisements must be as classy as your show. We use the best runs of pictures, featuring the best known artists and we advertise them to the limit ,and the limit is about five-sevenths of our total advertising space."

Fays theatre seats about 2500 persons and three performances are given daily.

Live News from the Producers

Famous Players Dines S. Chaplin

Farewell Sendoff Given Before Departure for France

FRIDAY, July 18, was a big day for Sydney Chaplin, for on that day the Famous Players-Lasky company gave him a dinner at the Hotel Claridge which was attended by the elite of the newspaper profession.

The dinner was a farewell send-off previous to his departure for France, where he will produce his first picture under his million-dollar contract.

After the usual bantering amongst the editors and editers, may we say, for there were ladies present, Mr. Chaplin appeared, accompanied by Mrs. Chaplin, Carlysle Robinson, who for the past three years has been identified with Charlie and Sydney Chaplin as director of publicity and Carl Pierce, toastmaster of the occasion.

In as neat and witty a speech as the scribes ever heard Mr. Pierce introduced "Sydney" to the bunch.

And then in a speech that would do Cicero proud both in diction and phrasing, for he certainly can handle that old English language, Sydney said, but we cannot give it to you in his words:

"Many of you may wonder why it is that I am taking all this trouble and expense to go as far as France for the making of a picture.

"My first film calls for a number of scenes in the various quarters of Paris. Although it would be possible to construct the sets in Los Angeles and take the exteriors in and around there, still it is my desire to give the public genuine color and therefore I am going to the logical place.

"But there is another reason why I am so anxious to go abroad," and here he spoke with much feeling. "It is my keen desire to meet and spend some time with my mother whom I have not seen for six years.

"Outside of my professional work, my mother and relatives come first. This production could have been my second, but inasmuch as I am to make it eventually, will take this opportunity to make it my first."

After Mr. Chaplin's speech each member present was handed what was at first thought to be the scenario of his coming production. On the outside cover, however, it read: "Remarks of Mr. Sydney Chaplin, July 18, 1919." But the inside pages were all "Greek" to the wise men present, for they contained writings in the Greek language. Maybe they were from the old Greek plays written in scenario form for the Chaplins of the bygone days, when Darius, Xerxies and Arti-Xerxies, the Persians, used to enjoy the Greek comedies in the open and then for a strong finish call in a hungry lion or two to "eat up" the comedians.

However, we are not going to worry about what the old timers did. What we want to know is, who was the originator of this trick and who had the gumption to put it over?

The guests of honor were Sydney Chaplin, Mrs. Chaplin, Carlysle Robinson, studio manager; Henry Clive, art director, and Alexander De Bray, scenario writer.

Carl Pierce was toastmaster, Sam Palmer represented the trade papers for Paramount, J. A. Creelman the newspapers and Emel Shaner the foreign trade. The trade papers and newspapers were well represented.

Fox Foresaw Shortage of Good Comedies

"Give us comedies," is the plaint of the motion picture exhibitor, who these days finds a big supply of dramatic subjects but a dearth of what he can really call good broad comedies. The supply is far below the demand.

William Fox, with his Sunshine Comedies, has gone a long way toward solving the comedy picture perplexity of the exhibitor. Mr. Fox, whose ear is always to the ground, long ago sensed the increasing demand for comedies that were not merely amusing, but genuinely funny, and began to assemble a comedy organization that should be capable of supplying a first-class article.

Heading the list of Sunshine Comedians, is Chester Conklin, known wherever motion pictures have been shown. As the "Walrus" he has shown.

Other of the Fox Sunshine stars are Polly Moran, Jack Cooper, Billy Armstrong, Ethel Teare, Glen Cavender, Slim Somerville, Harry McCoy, Bobbie Dunn, Tom Kennedy, Ed Kennedy, Bill Franey, Harry Booker, Laura LaVarnie and Alice Davenport.

New Faces in Universal Subjects

Many Players Signed for Forthcoming Productions

IN the production of Universal's new fall releases as announced some time ago, Universal has signed some new players, re-engaged others and assigned some of its directors to new fields. One of the exceptionally outstanding features of the new productions is that each and every new player engaged was secured with the idea of fitting the best players obtainable to the part dictated in the story of the production. This is evidenced by the variety of new names and faces that will appear in Universal productions and the variety of the roles filled.

Some of the newer players and new assignments are as follows: Carl Miller, who supported Mildred Harris in several of her Lois Weber Jewel productions, and who was recently seen with Anita Stewart in "Mary Regan" will play opposite Marie Walcamp in the continuation of "The Famous Spur and Saddle Stories" series of two-reel Western dramas which are now being made under George Holt's direction.

Kathleen O'Connor, who played opposite James Corbett in his recently completed serial, "The Midnight Man" has been re-engaged to be Harry Carey's new leading woman in his newest Western drama, "The Eternal Savage."

Kenneth Harlan, who supported Mae Murray, Mary MacLaren and Carmel Myers in Universal productions before joining the army, has returned to Universal City to be featured in the same production just mentioned.

Helen Eddy, who played opposite Monroe Salisbury in "The Blinding Trail" and "Hands Down," has been engaged to play the leading role in an all-star production, "Who Knows," which Director George Seigmann is producing from the story by Kenneth B. Clark.

J. Barney Sherry, who supported Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams in Lynn Reynolds' production, "The Little Brother of the Rich," is playing in support of Harry Carey in "The Eternal Savage."

Anna May Walthal, sister of Henry Walthal and well known for her recent work in the Carey production, "Bare Fists," has been cast for an important part in "Who Knows." Gertrude Astor who was last in Universal productions in support of Priscilla Dean in "Pretty Smooth" has been given a role of prominence in the same production.

George Holt, who has been directing Pete Morrison and Madda Lane in two-reel Westerns, has been given directorial tutelage over Marie Walcamp, while Jacques Jaccard, who previously directed Miss Walcamp, has been assigned to produce a five-reel feature.

"Lois Nelson's dog is clever" say the Rainbow players. Also discriminating

Empey at Work Again

Arthur Guy Empey has returned from a vacation spent in the North Woods, and is now preparing to buckle down for work on the second of his series of six pictures, the first of which was "The Undercurrent," soon to be released through Select.

Title New Universal Western Series

Universal's new series of Western two-reel dramas are being booked heavier than was ever expected by the producers. This is the Marie Walcamp series which has been definitely titled "The Famous Spur and Saddle Stories."

New Lasky Laboratory

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has obtained the Estees Studio and Laboratory, located at 361 West 125th Street, New York. This addition is necessary to handle the big producing activities contemplated by the corporation in the East.

A group of William Fox representatives: Abraham Carlos, general representative, headquarters in Paris; Earnest Reed, for the United Kingdom; Fred W. Lange, New York; Jos. R. Darling, Jos. P. Bryan, district manager of South America; Alberto Rosenwald, manager for Brazil; Aquileo C. Calve, manager for Central America, and Sidney E. Abel, foreign representative

Fox to Step Closer to Exhibitors

FOX Film Corporation, by the establishment of additional exchange offices, has brought about an important development of the Fox policy of getting into direct touch with the exhibitor. It is an additional step in the determination of the Fox organization to reach the exhibitors direct, doing away with the middleman. It means a considerable financial saving to the exhibitor and affords him advantages in the selection of pictures.

This Fox policy allows the exhibitor a wide range of freedom hitherto unknown. He now may exercise his own judgment and never is in the dark as to the merit of the photoplay he plans to show. He is enabled to see pictures a considerable time before their release date. This is an advantage that exhibitors are not slow to appreciate. Already many of them have warmly commended this considerable arrangement,—which appears certain to bring Fox Film Corporation and the exhibitors into closer relationship.

Clarity of Announcement of Policy Is Liked by Showmen

The Fox policy not only aims to bring pictures direct to the exhibitor, eliminating the middleman, and it aims also to bring them to him under the most favorable conditions possible.

The latitude which the plan of showing pictures sometime before release allows the exhibitor is indicated, for example by the following: Exhibitors can see now at the Fox exchanges "Wolves of the Night" with William Farnum not scheduled for release until August 10; "Rough Riding Romance" with Tom Mix not scheduled for release until August 24; "Checkers," not scheduled for release until August 31; "Her First Kiss," Sunshine Comedy, scheduled for release August 31; "Dabbling in Society" Sunshine Comedy scheduled for release Sept. 14; "Mutt and Jeff in London" released August 24; "The Frozen North," released August 31; and others of the new series of comedies and cartoons.

Under this arrangement of pre-release showings, there is no uncertainty with the exhibitor. He sees, well before the date for release, the Fox pictures and he has ample time to use his best judgment.

Another marked advantage to the exhibitor from Fox Film Corporation: In announcing, as it did its entire program for the coming year, it calls the attention of the exhibitor to the fact that this announcement is something definite and dependable upon which to build his own plans.

It is an innovation in the motion picture field—this announcing an entire year's productions at the outset of the year. Producers hesitate to make advance announcement, in the fear that they may not be able to fulfill their promises; but Fox Film Corporation has no hesitancy, as its great facilities guarantee the execution of the program in every detail.

Fox Film Corporation's announcement for the year even goes so far as to state the exact number of productions—162—and tell how many pictures each star will make.

The addition of Pearl White and William Russell to the Fox galaxy is a big factor in the year's plans. With a fine array of stars and a definite program, Fox Film Corporation certainly is in a very favorable position to serve the exhibitor.

Metro Star Disports in Unique Dance

Nazimova's talents as a dancer have ample opportunity for display in "The Brat," her own and Charles Bryant's adaptation of Maude Fulton's stage success of the same name, in which the Russian star is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, for release September 1 and which will be distributed by Metro.

"The rabbit dance" is the terpsichorean number performed by Nazimova in "The Brat." It is described as even more fantastic and fascinating than the sword dance, or "Dance of Death" that Nazimova did as the Bedouin girl Hassouna, in Henry Kistemaecker's drama, "Eye for Eye."

To Write Titles for Pearson Film

Lawrence McCloskey has been engaged to write the titles for the second Virginia Pearson production "Impossible Catherine," which will be released sometime in the near future.

Mr. McCloskey has long been prominent in the scenario field. Many remember him as scenario editor for Lubin.

Two Players Added to National's Roster

Ann Little and Jack Hoxie are the two most recent announcements of the star roster of the National productions, having been signed this week by William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, to appear in an eighteen episode serial titled "Lightning Bryce," from the story by Joe Brandt and Harvey Gates. Paul Hurst will be the director.

Sterling Film Purchase

Contract was entered into between Phil Goldstone of Omaha, Nebraska, operating the Sterling Film Exchange, whereby Mr. Goldstone acquired the rights for the series of Texas Guinan two reel Westerns, Mack Swain single reel comedies, for the territory of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

"The Girl from Outside" is a Rex Beach production for Goldwyn. Action is said to be plentiful

Demand for Comedies of Model Company

In a report received from headquarters of the Model Comedy Company in New York, it is stated that the number of bookings for Gale Henry comedies are steadily increasing throughout the United States. A number of exhibitors in Eastern and Middle West states, it is pointed out, who were showing Gale Henry comedies when the comedienne was under contract with Universal, have resumed a showing of them since Miss Henry went into the producing end of the industry for herself.

Second Paramount-Artcraft Week

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that the second annual National Paramount-Artcraft Week will be inaugurated Sunday, August 31. Every city, every town in the United States, no matter what its size so long as it contains a theatre, is provided for in the exploitation campaign which involves the showing of Paramount-Artcraft pictures every exhibition day in as many theatres as it is possible to supply.

Paramount-Artcraft Week last year was an extraordinary success, it is cited in the announcement, and there is no doubt that the prestige of the Paramount-Artcraft pictures, the advertising that has already announced the coming of the new season and the nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign that will be put directly behind the selling effort, will make the Paramount-Artcraft Week of 1919 set a new record for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The idea of an intensive campaign aimed to place Paramount-Artcraft pictures before the public in every theatre possible for a solid week originated a little over a year ago in the New York branch exchange, which tried it out in New York City.

Nation-Wide Campaign to Exceed Last Year Display

So successful was the experiment that the larger campaign, covering the entire country, was launched for the first week of September. It resulted not only in the biggest week's business in the history of the company, it is stated, but so enhanced the popularity of Paramount-Artcraft pictures that its effect was felt in increased sales and increased patronage for Paramount-Artcraft exhibitors throughout the year.

The full page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post last year announcing the week proved to be of such great value that another page will be used this year for the first formal announcement direct to the public. This advertisement, which will bear conspicuously the catch lines, "A Drive for Better Motion Pictures" and "Beginning the Greatest Motion Picture Season in the History of the Screen," will appear in the issue of August 30th, on the stands Thursday, August 28th. The line, "A Drive for Better Motion Pictures," will be the slogan of the campaign.

The newspaper advertising schedule provides for a full-page in about ninety of the largest cities of the country. The copy calls for a general top-page display with space beneath for a list of all the theatres in the city co-operating. So far the plan is the same as last year.

This year, however, the campaign calls for advertising in 375 other newspapers, in every city over ten thousand population in which there is a theatre to present properly Paramount-Artcraft pictures. In the larger of these cities the advertisements will be of half-page size, space being provided for the listing of theatres just as in the full-page advertisements in the largest centers. As in the former campaign, the exchanges will supply the names of theatres, plays and stars to the newspapers carrying the full and half-page ads, as far in advance as possible and will see to the proper okaying of this part of the advertisement.

In the smaller cities the copy will be about 420 lines, probably five or six inches deep.

Exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are already reporting a large number of requests for extra bookings for the week, and the exchange machinery is in readiness to handle the biggest amount of business during the next month in the history of the organization.

Art Personnel Shifted in Lasky Studios

J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced a change in the personnel of the Art Department, necessitated by the departure for Europe of Richard Murphy, formerly director of the Art and Technical Department of the Famous Players-Lasky studios in New York and W. C. Menzies, his assistant, who have gone to join the staff of Al. Kaufman, in charge of production with the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

Robert M. Haas has been placed in charge of that department and is assisted by W. E. Keller in architectural work. Associated with Mr. Haas is O. O. Cecil, interior decorator, and William Reilly, chief property man.

Returns to First Love

After a year in vaudeville, Alexander Gaden has submitted to the call of the movie public and after a series of negotiations, has affixed his signature to a contract with Arthur E. Beck, the president of the Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc.

Mr. Gaden's initial appearance on his return to the Cooper-Hewitt's will be as leading man for Miss Doris Kenyon in the first Dietrich-Beck Corp. productions, starring Miss Kenyon, "The Bandbox," by Louis Joseph Vance.

More Territory Sold on "Virtuous Men"

Following on the heels of the sale of thirteen states for "Virtuous Men" reported last week, S-L Pictures announced the disposition of further territory. The special feature which stars E. K. Lincoln and is stamped as a Ralph Ince Film Attraction, has been sold for Louisana and Mississippi. Messrs. Varret & Johnstone, important state rights purchasers with headquarters at New Orleans, have acquired "Virtuous Men" for these two states.

Following the method of various other purchasers of "Virtuous Men," Verrer & Johnstone will present this attraction as a road show in Mississippi and Louisiana for several weeks prior to releasing it on a stright rental basis.

Players in "Dawn" Cast

J. Stuart Blackton, president and director general of the J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., has signed Harry Davenport, Flora Finch and Gladys Valerie for important roles in the screen version of "Dawn," the latest best seller from the pen of Eleanor H. Porter, author of the "Pollyanna" stories, which he put into production at his reconstructed studios in Brooklyn last week.

Favorites on F. P.-Lasky Program

Two favorites of the screen are starred in productions of widely divergent character which are scheduled for release July 27 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. They are William S. Hart, who will be seen in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Wagon Tracks," an Artcraft release, and Dorothy Gish, whose Paramount vehicle is "Nugget Nell."

In "Wagon Tracks" Mr. Hart portrays a guide in the fifties, leading a wagon train across the deserts and mountains toward the golden West by way of the historic Santa Fe trail. There are battles with Indians, a struggle with gamblers, a revenge motive, and love and adventure galore, it is declared. Jane Novak has the leading feminine role.

"Nugget Nell" was written expressly for Miss Gish by John R. Cornish and as in the case of all of the star's previous Paramount pictures, Elmer Clifton directed. The story is a travesty on wild Western pictures and is said to be chock full of fun.

Artistry Apparent in Hayakawa's Latest

In the opinion of those who have seen the picture the latest Sessue Hayakawa film. "The Gray Horizon," is one of the most artistic photoplays ever made. All of his pictures released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual have been commented upon from the artistic standpoint, but it is conceded that the latest is the best of them all.

The greater part of the production was made out of doors, and it has as its background the splendor of the Sierra-Nevada Mountains. The entire locale is located in the hills, and every advantage was taken of the extraordinary light and cloud formations that at times take place in these famous mountains.

Arrow Canadian Deal

The Arrow Film Corporation has closed a deal with the General Film Company of Canada, T. S. Cooper, manager, for the Western serial, "The Masked Rider." Mr. Cooper recently closed this deal in New York and states that he will use ten prints and put on a big publicity campaign.

Metro Facing a Booking Problem

Exhibitors' Demands Would Nullify Open Booking

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are said to have already created a big advance demand for bookings of the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc. feature productions to be made from famous stage successes and celebrated novels and distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation.

This demand comes just when the executive organizations in the Metro offices at 147 Broadway have been tuned up to the highest pitch for the exploitation of these screen offerings on a scale of magnitude. Now W. E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, finds his desk deluged with letters and telegrams from every section of the country, in which exhibitors seek to book solid the entire thirty-six productions announced as the first to be made by Screen Classics, Inc., under Metro's "fewer, bigger and better" pictures policy.

Metro has stood consistently for "open booking" and has advocated it in its advertising for more than a year. For exhibitors, as they now seem anxious to do, to take each and every one of the new specials as soon as they are released, would amount in effect to a return to closed booking.

Hence the quandary in which Mr. Atkinson finds himself. He is therefore awaiting the return from abroad of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., with more than his natural eagerness. The problem arising from the demand for the forthcoming super-features has assumed such proportions that Mr. Atkinson plans to make it the subject of one of his very first conferences with Mr. Rowland after the latter's arrival home from his personal survey of the European field.

Metro is gratified by the remarkable response to its recent announcement of policy expansion. The announcement was deferred until all plans had been carefully matured to insure its unqualified success. The company's studios on the Pacific coast have been several times enlarged since the completion of the original plant, and Maxwell Karger, Director General, has enough material in the thirty-six plays and novels purchased by Screen Classics, Inc., to keep its stars busy for a twelvemonth.

Production of three of these big offerings is under way. May Allison is working in a picturization of Avery Hopwood's farce success, "Fair and Warmer"; Bert Lytell has started the Hatton comedy success, "Lombardi, Ltd." and Viola Dana is well along in "Please Get Married," the Cullen-Browne farce that recently suspended a six months run on Broadway for the summer interim.

Metro's exploitation plans are laid on a big scale. Among other things these plans include advertising of the most liberal sort, and a tremendous advance in the arrangement and volume of press material, photographs, stunt suggestions and other advertising aids prepared by experts to make certain that every exhibitor showing the Screen Classics, Inc., specials shall reap their money-coining possibilities to the full.

Goldwyn Service System Started

Fourteen Experts Are Now at Work in the Branch Offices

THE recent announcement by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation of the inauguration of an interlocking system of press and service men throughout the entire Goldwyn organization, has been followed by the appointment of fourteen exploitation and publicity men who are already at their desks in the Goldwyn branch offices. On July 28 seven more begin work, and the entire staff will be complete. The work in New York will, of course, be taken care of by the home office. All the press and service in the field will be under the General direction of Charles D. Iasacson,who has appointed Morton Blumenstock to assist him in keeping the men in the field informed of the plans of the organization and to supply them with publicity and exploitation matter for the various Goldwyn productions.

According to the ideas outlined by Mr. Isaacson, the duties of the men in the field will, on one hand, bring them in personal contact with Goldwyn exhibitors, and on the other, with the newspaper and other advertising and publicity mediums in their particular districts. Besides consulting with the individual exhibitors as to the best method to pursue in exploiting a particular picture, the individual press and service men will be equipped to offer to the exhibitor the experience of every other Goldwyn press man in the organization.

A series of daily and weekly reports, embodying suggestions and plans has been instituted whereby the home office will receive a contsant stream of information from the branches regarding the feasibility of publicity stunts, advertising methods and other material which will be of interest to a Goldwyn exhibitor anywhere. This matter will come to Mr. Isaacson, who will pass it on to all the men in the field with suggestions for local application. In this way the press and service man will be the personal representatives of the Goldwyn office among local newspapers and magazines, and the personal advertising and publicity advisor to the individual Goldwyn exhibitor.

The plan of the home departments which will take care of the men in the field is so organized that service and exploitation matter will be furnished by the present service department, under the direction of Hunt Armstrong, who will give his material to Mr. Isaacson.

It will then reach his assistant, Mr. Blumenstock for final distribution to the service and press men in the branches. In a similar way, press material arising in the home editorial office, which is under the directorship of Ralph Block, will be sent to Mr. Isaacson, who will distribute it according to the plan outlined .

In the course of a week Goldwyn expects to have the new organization in running order.

Veteran of Many Wars Aids Hampton

Lt. Arthur Clayton, who for nearly twenty years has been in uniform and fought in almost every war during that period, has brushed aside the sword and has been engaged by Jesse D. Hampton to assist in the production of H. B. Warner productions for Robertson-Cole, which Exhibitors Mutual distribute.

Clayton is giving the benefit of his knowledge of situations, the life and manners of the people in the different countries in which the Warner stories will be set.

Produces, Directs and Stars in Picture

From scenario writer, director and producer to screen star is a jump that is seldom taken, but George Brackett Seitz, the youngest serial maker in the business, has made it and is now preparing to "present" himself under the Pathe banner.

Without ceremony or blare of press agent trumpets, Mr. Seitz has stepped before the camera under his own direction in the stellar role of Frank Leon Smith's ten episode serial, "Bound and Gagged." When this is released, it will be a sort of Seitz jubilee. The leader will read something like this: "George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., presents George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot in 'Bound and Gagged.' Directed by George B. Seitz."

S. L. K. Serial Demands Costly Settings

It is claimed by S. S. Krellberg, president and general manager of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, that the setting in the new Helen Holmes serial are the finest ever built for a serial. In the main setting alone, the props are valued at $25,000. They are massive and beautiful. Most of the settings and paintings and furniture come from wealthy Fifth Avenue mansions.

More thrills will be given the public by Helen Holmes in the S. L. K. serial "The Fatal Fortune"

Supreme Announces a Serial

J. Robert Paulding, Hypnotist, Star in "Brewster's Mysterious Millions"

EVERY episode of the fifteen in the forthcoming production "Brewster's Mysterious Millions" will be a five reel feature packed into two reels, according to the announcement by Sidney Reynolds, President of Supreme Pictures. J. Robert Pauline, hypnotist and vaudevillian is the star of the production.

The news that he was to make a serial production was kept as a complete secret from the film world by Mr. Reynolds who has been quietly working for the past four months with his director, William Davis, on the story for the serial, making the selection of his cast and putting the finishing touches to the new Supreme Pictures studio at Flushing, L. I. With all preparations completed and the script in perfect shape, Mr. Reynolds has given the word to Mr. Davis to "shoot."

Pauline has played the big vaudeville circuits and has mystified thousands. He is said to have drawn one of the largest individual salaries in the two-a-day field.

In commenting on this serial which he has just started to make Mr. Reynolds expressed himself vigorously to the effect that the demand for good, live, well-thought-out and artistically-conceived serials was never as great as at the present time, and believes that "Brewster's Mysterious Millions" will blaze a new trail in serial effects."

William S. Davis, who has been associated with a number of big stage successes is to direct "Brewster's Mysterious Millions." In the cast supporting Mr. Pauline are Stuart Holmes, Violet MacMillan, as the heroine, Peggy Shanor, Edwin Rogers, George Clarke and others.

Exchanges Prepare For Drive

Metro Branch Managers Ready to Handle Increased Business on New Plan

METRO exchanges, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border, have the docks cleared for action in preparation for their fall drive with the Screen Classics, Inc., super-productions that Metro Pictures Corporation is to distribute under its newly announced policy.

Several changes in the personnel of branch managers have now been completed and every exchange has settled down with all plans perfected to handle the big business to come.

W. E. Atkinson, business manager of Metro, who has direct personal supervision over exchange activities, placed a new manager in charge of Metro's San Francisco exchange this week. He is Fred W. Voight, who has been with Metro as a salesman in the Pacific coast metropolis office for three years. He succeeds L. Reichert.

J. Grauman is now under full steam in charge of Metro's Chicago exchange at 5 So. Wabash Avenue. Mr. Grauman was recently transferred to Chicago from Milwaukee. His successor in the Wisconsin city is H. L. Conway, another salesman raised to the position of branch manager in accordance with the Metro custom.

Another recent transfer was that of W. N. Skirboll, from Omaha, Nebraska, to Detroit, Mich. Mr. Skirboll's transfer made an opening for S. Mac Intyre, a former salesman, to become branch manager in Omaha.

To Film in Holy Lands

The organization of a new company to be known as the Cosmo Pictures Corporation was announced in Los Angeles by Jules Ratzkowski, first vice-president of that concern, who has just left for Egypt and Palestine to stage a motion picture which it is said will contain much of the romance and life of the near East.

Authority on Theatre Joins Vitagraph

George Randolph Chester, Vitagraph production editor, has by special arrangement enlisted the services of Arthur Edwin Krows, who will adapt for the screen several important literary works purchased by Vitagraph.

Mr. Krows was for a number of years associated with Winthrop Ames at the Little Theater. He is the author of several notable works dealing with the theater and the screen. His first work for Vitagraph is the screen adaptation of "The Winchester Woman," a magazine story, now being produced under the direction of Wesley Ruggles with Alice Joyce in the stellar role.

Lubin in Sanatarium

Bert Lubin, who returned to New York last week after disposing of twenty-five states for "Virtuous Men," is now at Stern's Sanatarium, New York City. Mr. Lubin has found it necessary to undergo an operation on his nose and throat. Arrangements have been made whereby the same surgeon who performed a delicate and successful operation upon Herbert Lubin will act in a similar capacity for the general sales manager of S-L Pictures.

Marshall Neilan arrives at DeMille Field, Los Angeles, after an aeroplane ride

Travels by Air Route; Saves Money

Following the completion of some exterior scenes in "Old Kentucky," at Santa Cruz, which did not require the presence of the star, Anita Stewart, Marshall Neilan was in a hurry to get back to his studio sets. There were no immediate trains.

The Mercury Aviation Company boasts a taxline by air route, and Neilan gave them a ring. From San Francisco came the aeroplane. In five hours Mr. Neilan was set down safe and sound at the studios. The cost was five hundred dollars. The saving in time and company salaries, several thousand.

Jewish Editors View Drama of Radicalism

At the invitation of Augustus Thomas, the author, an invited audience of thirty or more editors of the leading Jewish daily newspapers and periodicals in New York saw his latest Four-Star screen drama, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird, in private projection room in New York last week just prior to the shipment of prints to the Hodkinson managers throughout America.

"The Volcano" is a drama of radicalism in America. It was produced by Harry Raver with Leah Baird as the star and under the direction of George Irving.

Cartoonist Turns Actor for One Picture

Because of the interest which the public has in his cartoons and his motion pictures, Clare A. Briggs, producer of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, which will be released on a weekly basis beginning September 1 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, turned actor last week, when he was photographed for a special picture which the Philadelphia Public Ledger is producing.

The Public Ledger, which is the leading newspaper in Philadelphia, makes a big feature of the Briggs cartoons. To increase its circulation, the Public Ledger is producing a special one-reel motion picture showing Briggs at work drawing a cartoon.

"The Westerners" Plays the Strand

New York Playhouse Is to Run Hampton Picture Soon

STEWART Edward White's "The Westerners," the first of the Benjamin B. Hampton productions for Great Authors Pictures, Inc., and distributed exclusively by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been booked by the New York Strand and will be presented for the week beginning August 10th.

This recognition of the new production standards established by Mr. Hampton, comes from Moe H. Mark, president, and Walter Hays, treasurer, of the region-wide Mark-Strand interests in the East controlling more than a dozen big theatres.

Few productions have been booked under more curious circumstances at the Strand than "The Westerners." Mr. Mark is virtually commuting between three big eastern cities owing to the building activities of his great firm, now rushing to completion big houses in Brooklyn and Albany. He arrived in New York from Buffalo, the headquarters of his organization, at midnight held a showing of "The Westerners" after 1 a. m. and signed his contract at 2:15 a. m. displacing one picture entirely and setting back two others to give "The Westerners" its August 10th play date for its metropolitan presentation.

The following morning the print was placed in initial rehearsal with the Strand orchestra under direction of Carl Edouard and Jack Eaton, the new managing director of the Strand, was devising his showmanship plans along with a campaign with his publicity director.

An unusual feature of this booking is that it will throw into action for the first time in Greater New York with a motion picture the full power of the Grosset and Dunlap organization under the direction of Sam A. Jenkins, their general sales manager. Grosset and Dunlap are the publishers of the moderate priced editions of two score of authors, and Stewart Edward White's book takes high rank in leadership in sales through that organization. Mr. Jenkins personally is handling a simultaneous window display and counter display of "The Westerners" in more than 200 bookstores and drug-stores in greater New York for the week preceding the showing at the Strand and continuing throughout the week that the picture is being shown.

This link-up incidentally is nation-wide and will be co-ordinated and maintained in all towns of 5,000 population and upward and in all cities as well as for the neighborhood first runs in large cities.

"The Westerners" has had its American pre-release only at one point, at the Los Angeles Kinema and Quinn's Rialto in the same city where the production was made. Analysis of its receipts at the Kinema revealed that it had whipped the corresponding week in each year since the Kinema was opened.

"The Westerners" has a cast headed by Roy Stewart and including Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Wilfred Lucas, Frankie Lee, Mary Jane Irving and Graham Pettie.

Exhibitor–Producer Battle Seen

Seeley of United Says Exhibitors Will Band Together

THAT the real and vital question now exercising the mind of the thinking exhibitor is not so much "What is to be my booking method?" but rather "Is Capital going to gobble me up, or, at least, make a mere hired man of me?" is the conclusion arrived at by C. R. Seelye, secretary of United Pictures Theatres, Inc. Mr. Seelye in an interview this week says in part:

"Many of the best informed exhibitors are viewing with consternation the process now going on among certain producers of more or less quietly acquiring all the theatres they can lay hands on, and thus forging a powerful chain of houses from coast to coast. These exhibitors do not hesitate to express their alarm at the realization of this project. To them, this is a more vital thing than the consideration of any particular booking method, except in so far as the two things are inter-related. True, it is as yet only the bigger minds among exhibitors that have sensed the danger that lies in the menace of a huge combine of capital. To the rank and file of exhibitors 'the camouflage of open booking,' as one showman put it, has up to now succeeded in concealing the greater issue at stake."

Mr. Seelye quotes one exhibitor as saying, "We exhibitors have grown rather accustomed to being catered to with fair promises at this time of the year. The summer season inevitably brings its announcements for exhibitor consumption as regularly as it brings the yarn of the seaserpent's visit. But this year the promises go further and are more specious. We are to be released from evils, we are to have surcease from thralldom. We are to enjoy selective booking and no longer are we to be forced to take the bad with the good. The trouble is, it is too good to be true. There must be a joker," concluded the exhibitor. "This courting of the exhibitor on the part of producers and distributors, it seems to me, is being overdone," Mr. Seelye went on. "Promise a man too much, and he grows suspicious, and that is exactly the condition of mind I read among exhibitors at this moment.

"When one is in danger he hollers for help. His natural thought is to 'get together' with his own kind, with those who have similar interests. Thus the tendency is for exhibitors to band together into one great body, for there is no use in mincing matters, there's going to be a fight; indeed, the fight has already begun.

"The fight is to be between leading exhibitors and an able, daring and hitherto always successful capitalistic leader and his followers, and while this leader has always been successful, we must remember, too, that the leading exhibitors I have in mind have won many a tough battle themselves."

Emerald Comedies Will Set High Mark

Frederick J. Ireland, president of the Emerald Motion Picture Company, announces that each Billy West picture produced by his organization will bear the seal of 100 per cent quality and class. A cast of the highest merit will support Mr. West. Elaborate settings will give him every opportunity to bring forth his clever acting and infinite humor. The sterotyped bathing girls and the burlesque atmosphere will be eliminated in their two-reel comedy productions. While femine beauty is always desired and is an attraction, strongly in evidence, it will be a case of charm and beauty plus ability.

Emmy Wehlen has a part calling forth expression of many emotions in the Metro production, "A Favor to a Friend"

Vitagraph Players on Location in North

Harry T. Morey and his director, Paul Scardon, together with his supporting company, cameraman and all others needed in the taking of a picture, left last week for Waterville, Lancaster and Campton, New Hampshire, where they will "shoot" the outdoor scenes for Morey's new feature, "Out of the Dark." Nearly all the outdoor scenes were laid in lumber camps and these are not usually working at this time of the year. Newspapers are printed the year round, however, and they must have paper. Paper mills do not shut down in the summer, and paper mills must have wood. Consequently Vitagraph found the desired location through the kindness of J. P. Riley of the International Paper Company.

Jean Paige will be seen as Mr. Morey's new leading lady. Others in the cast will include Anna Lehr, George Majeroni and George Howard.

Managerial Changes in Hodkinson Branches

A number of new exchange managers have been appointed by F. B. Warren, vice-president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

In Chicago, Sidney J. Goldman, for a year in charge of the Goldwyn office, will look after the Hodkinson interests. Marx Nathan has been named successor of George F. Lenehan in the New York exchange, while in Pittsburg, J. J. Mooney replaces Carlos E. Moore who goes elsewhere.

R. H. Allan takes over A. J. Huesman's place in the Omaha branch, while H. E. Thompson succeeds H. R. Wimsatt in Albany. J. C. DeWalt is appointed to the Oklahoma City branch.

Critics Silence Has Preserved Mystery

The fact that critics in reviewing the stage productions of "The Thirteenth Chair" kept the mystery as to "the murderer" a secret in their writings, has redounded to the benefit of Pathe Exchange which is offering the play in film form.

Marie Shotwell has the dominant part of the clairvoyant.

Child Series Is Sought For

Short Comedies of Rogers Film with Lee Kiddies Starred Are Attractions

THE LEE KIDDIES, Jane and Katherine, have been in Oil City, Pa., putting finishing touches on their first Rogers Film, prior to starting on their next subject.

Tom Bret is announced as the one who will write the titles for all of the two-reel comedy playlets the child actresses make.

In the meantime all preparations have been completed for the filming of the next story. In connection with the series in which the Lee children are starring, Lou Rogers, president of the Rogers Film Corporation, says:

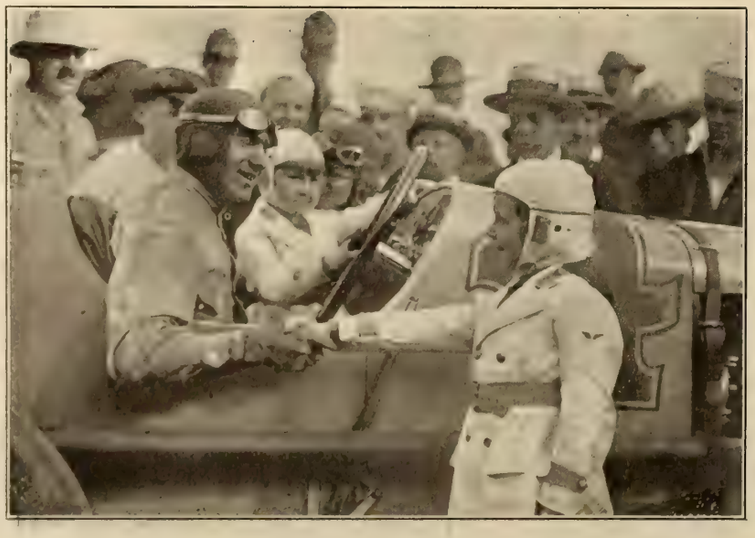
"It was after much consideration that we decided to make two-reelers, as after a personal campaign to the exhibitors all over the country, and we based our plans on their replies."

"In our quest for stories, we considered one angle mainly. Older people children, but they like to see them in stories with a theme and plot, and we began by obtaining the first story from Phillip Bartholomae, the noted playwright, and his work was so satisfactory that he has been engaged to write the second story, and work by other well-known authors have been contracted for.

"That the popularity of the Lee children is proven, is evidenced by the flood of requests we have received from exhibitors all the country over asking for the release date, which incidentally will be September 1, 1919.

"I have taken great pains in this first picture, and we have worked on a big feature basis for a two-reel comedy by giving as much attention, work and material as to a feature."

"Exhibitors will be greatly assisted by the publicity campaign which will be given to Jane and Katherine Lee, and as it will be one direct to the public, it should increase their already great popularity."



Jane and Katherine Lee, now making two-reel comedy playlets for Rogers Film Corp., congratulate Ralph De Palma on a recent victory

McIntyre Leaves World

Robert B. McIntyre, who has been the casting director for World Pictures for several years, has resigned to assume another position in California.

Contracts Closed for Kremer Offerings

Several state right contracts already have been signed and inquiries are pouring into the Victor Kremer headquarters at 1333 Argyle Street, Chicago, for the thirty-one reel pictures released by Victor Kremer Film Features August 4.

These pictures include three blocks of ten each, Fables in Slang, by George Ade, Broncho Billy western dramas and the Snakeville western comedies, produced by Essanay.

"The great demand for these pictures proves my contention that pictures of real intrinsic worth are not dead with one issuance," said Mr. Kremer. "I have contended that good pictures like good books and rare paintings have a constant value and the public is always glad to welcome them back."

Rogers Will Score in a Comedy Drama

A comedy drama with a really unique twist is such a rarity that the plot of "Almost a Husband," the new Goldwyn release in which Will Rogers is starred, will come it is said as a pleasure both for the "twist" and for the histrionic ability which Rogers displays.

In this picture the humorist shows that he is an actor as well, an actor with an intellectual grasp of his medium and character and the personality to express his understanding with clarity and force. Rogers plays the part of the homely village school teacher who "accidentally" gets married and finds out immediately that his troubles begin.

Pathe Opens Exchange

Fred C. Quimny, Director of Exchanges for Pathe Exchange, Inc., now on tour of the United States, has opened a new Branch Office for Pathe in Little Rock, Ark. The Little Rock territory will consist of the entire States of Arkansas, the Northwestern part of Mississippi and Western Tennessee, also Dunklin and Pemiscot Counties in the Southern part of Missouri.

Pathe a Factor in Tax Fight in Cleveland

The tribute to the educational value of the motion picture, as set forth in the expressions given by thirty-five Governors of the United States, on the occasion of the recent celebration in honor of the visit to America of Mr. Charles Pathe, is claimed by Pathe to have been a powerful factor in defeating the proposition to tax the motion picture theatres of Cleveland.

Strong opposition to which a number of clergymen were energetic contributors, developed to the plan, to take the tax off the film theatres, but the committee representing the exhibitors went ahead with the argument and won. In repealing the tax ordinance, the Cleveland City Council went on record in recognizing the screen as a powerful instrument in the education of all classes and of all ages.

Returned from France

Fannie Ward Leads the Week's Pathe Program

In the lead-off position on the Pathe batting order, for release on July 27th, is a society drama of abnegation and self sacrifice, "Our Better Selves," with Fannie Ward as star.

The story and scenario are by Ouida Bergere and the production is made by the Astra corporation.

Another number on the Pathe program for July 27th releasing is a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Never Touched Me." As usual, this comedian has the assistance of Snub Pollard and Bebe Daniels in distilling laughter.

"The Tiger Face," episode No. 15 of the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, brings the chase for the Pact of Three and the Tiger Idol to a successful conclusion.

Realart Appointment

Harry L. Hollander, who has been engaged in the selling of photoplays for the past five years, has been appointed manager of the Minneapolis exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation by Mr. J. S. Woody, General Sales Manager. He started in his new position on July 14th.

Hart to Remain With F. P.-Lasky

Signs Contract to Make Nine Pictures in Two Years

WILLIAM S. HART will make nine big productions for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation within the next two years.

This definite announcement was received in a telegram which reached the home office of Famous Players-Lasky last week and allays the many rumors which have been circulating in the industry regarding the future affiliations of the popular star.

According to the information received from Los Angeles, Mr. Hart on July 18 signed a contract with Vice-President Frank A. Garbutt, representing the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the deal being consummated by Attorney Neil McCarthy, acting for the company, and William Grossman for Mr. Hart. The contract calls for the delivery of nine pictures to be made within a period not to exceed two years and is stated to be one of the biggest ever signed involving the productions of a single star in the history of the industry.

According to the terms of the contract the limitations to exact footage are removed and the pictures will deal with the big outdoor subjects of the type which Mr. Hart has made distinctive and in which he has become one of the most popular figures and greatest box-office attractions in the picture world. The producing organization of Mr. Hart remains intact and the same quality which has characterized the Hart pictures of the past few years will be maintained in future productions.

Following the signing of the contract Mr. Hart authorized the following statement:

"Ever since I have been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which means with Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and other officials, our relations have been most pleasant. They have always been fair and square and kept their word with me. I want my next two years in pictures to be free from worry about business so that I can devote my time to making good photodramas. I am happy to maintain my affiliations with the company and look forward to a very agreeable two years of active film work."

All the production and studio business affairs of the Hart organization will be under the management of E. H. Allen.

For the past two years Mr. Hart has been appearing in Artcraft pictures under Mr. Ince's personal supervision, the productions being: "The Narrow Trail," "The Silent Man," "Wolves of the Rail," "Blue Blazes Rawden," "The Tiger Man," "Selfish Yates," "Shark Monroe," "Riddle Gawne," "The Border Wireless," "Branding Broadway," "Breed of Men," "The Poppy Girl's Husband," "The Money Corral" and "Square Deal Sanderson." On July 27 "Wagon Tracks" will be released and Mr. Hart has just completed "John Petticoats" which will be released early in the Fall.

Minimum of Leaders in "Gray Horizon"

Since the advent of the feature production, producers have been striving to turn out their stories titleless. Their aim has been to make the entire action tell the story without the use of worthy explanations. It has become the lot of the Haworth company, featuring Sessue Hayakawa, to approach this goal. In the filming of "The Gray Horizon," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual they have succeeded in reducing the use of titles to a minimum.

At the present time five reel productions require about one hundred titles and in some cases more. In "The Gray Horizon" only 65 titles are used all told, and these are so brief that the general effect is such that it hardly seems as if there are many titles in the entire production.

Production Started by Constance Binney

Constance Binney will attempt to take time enough from her appearances in "39 East," the current stage sucess now playing at the Maxine Elliott theatre in New York, to make her first production for Realart. She will make the start by beginning work on "Erstwhile Susan," a picturization of the successful stage play of the same name, which served Mrs. Fiske as a starring vehicle a few seasons ago.

Production will be started at her New York studios on Monday, July 28, under the direction of John S. Robertson. This will not be the first time that Mr. Robertson has guided Miss Binney in her screen career as he directed "The Test of Honor" in which she made her third appearance on the silver sheet as John Barrymore's leading lady.

M. A. Shauer Home Again

The motion picture industry is welcoming home another of its representatives with the A. E. F. in France in the person of Lieutenant Melville A. Shauer, formerly assistant studio manager of the New York studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the son of Emil E. Shauer, assstant treasurer of the corporaton. He will return to Famous Players-Lasky.

Von Tilzer Opens United Artists' Office

The New York branch office of United Artists Corporation—the "Big Four"—is in full swing on the ninth floor, at 729 Seventh Avenue, with Jack Von Tilzer presiding as Sales Manager.

Mr. Von Tilzer, who is a member of the well known musical family, came into the motion picture business two years ago. His rapid rise in the exchange field is due not only to his sterling qualities but likewise to his vast experience in the amusement business.

Music publishing is so closely allied to the theatrical field that Mr. Von Tilzer was equipped with the experience and the acquaintances that have stood him in such good stead as exchange man.

American Reissue is Sought

"Damaged Goods" Again on Market Is Considered Good Buy; Territory Sold

SINCE publishing an official announcement that the re-issue of its famous propaganda picture, "Damaged Goods," would be offered to the State Rights market, the American Film Company, Inc., Chicago, has been deluged with letters and telegrams from buyers everywhere, submitting bids for their respective territories.

The demand for this subject is explained by the national importance this subject assumes in the present reconstruction period.

As an instance of the strong official backing "Damaged Goods" has received in all quarters, comes the report of the National Board of Review. When it met to review the film, the board invited for consultation a former District Attorney, members of the Committee of Fourteen, the Society for Moral and Sanitary Prophylaxis, the American Society for Social Hygiene, several skilled physicians, an author of numerous books and reports on the social evil, a well-known lecturer in biology and a representative of the Physical Department of the International Y. M. C. A. This unusual group of qualified critics went on record as saying that "Damaged Goods" is "a dignified, accurate, dramatic and convincing presentation of this difficult subject."

A deal has just been closed disposing of the rights in the New England states to F. Alland & Bros., of Boston, Mass. The territory controlled by this deal embraces Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island. Negotiations are now pending with various other well-known State Right buyers, and further announcements will follow shortly.

No Rest for Realart Player

Alice Brady Will Make Pictures at Time She Tours Country in Her Play

A SOMEWHAT new era in the amusement world will be inaugurated when Alice Brady, star in Realart pictures, starts making photoplays while touring the country with her last season's stage success, "Forever After."

Miss Brady will make a number of pictures during the summer in New York. This work will be in the nature of a vacation as compared with what she will do on the road later on. When that time comes, she will have to travel, work at pictures by day and on Sundays and appear in "Forever After" at night. This will mean "on the jump" from before eight in the morning until after eleven at night.

The route of "Forever After" will take Miss Brady to Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles and other large cities. There are well equipped photoplay studios in all the cities mentioned with the exception of Boston, where exteriors can be made and special arangements made for interiors. Miss Brady's contract calls for her appearance in eight Realart productions the coming year.

Four pictures will be divided between New York and Los Angeles and four among Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Miss Brady's entourage will include not only the players and staffs connected with the stage play, but also all the principal people associated with her motion picture productions, including her director, his assistant, supporting players, cameramen, business and technical staffs.

The appearance of Miss Brady in "Forever After" will have the effect of personal appearances for the photoplays which are being shown at the same time in the cities where the stage play is scheduled to appear.

Our English Cousins as Foils for Humor

Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn picture, "Strictly Confidential," is the film version of Jerome K. Jerome's humorous story, "Fanny and the Servant Problem." The story was first made into a play under the title of "The New Lady Bantock," and in this form entertained thousands of playgoers in England and America. In its latest form, millions will have an opportunity to enjoy the many dilemmas of the young actress in a touring company, who marries an English lord, only to find that all her servants are her relatives.

The humor of the situation arises from the fact that each of the relations takes it upon himself or herself to groom the new "lady" in the details of her position.

John Bowers has the leading male role.

Geo. Walsh to Appear in "From Now On"

Fox Film Corporation announces that the next George Walsh picture will be from the story "From Now On" by Frank L. Packard.

R. A. Walsh will direct the production and has already begun casting for it. He is a brother of George Walsh, so that this picture brings the interesting combination of brothers as star and director.

"From Now On" was published in the All-Story Magazine and attracted wide attention. It is a strong story, adapted to motion picture use, and the character of the hero is peculiarly suited to the personality of the Fox star. It is expected to be one of the most successful starring vehicles Mr. Walsh ever has had.

Universal Featuring New Western Stars

Four two-reel western melodramas are being made at Universal City featuring Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill, two new Western stars.

The titles of the four two-reel subjects are "Fighting Bloods," "The Four-Bit Man," "At the Point of a Gun" and "The Jack of Hearts." Reeves Eason is directing the productions.

Many Exhibitor Aids on Big Production

Metro Pictures Corporation, sole distributors of the Screen Classics, Inc., super-production of "The Man Who Stayed at Home" has already supplied its exchanges with elaborate facilities for exploiting this big feature, which is listed for release in September. The exploitation and promotion material, together with accessories, is described by W. E. Atkinson, Metro's general manager, as the most voluminous and complete ever put out by the organization for any of its big releases.

A flashy press sheet printed in two colors and containing a wealth of suggestions for newspaper advertising and exploitation of the super-feature and for lobby displays and other stunts is among the exhibitor aids. It was compiled by experts with an intimate knowledge of exhibitors' needs.

Warm Testimonial on United Productions

An unsolicited appreciation of the service its organization is rendering to its exhibitor-members has reached the United Picture Theatres, Inc., offices from the Harding Brothers, who operate the Liberty theatre, Kansas City.

They wrote: "This letter goes to you unsolicited, because we think it is only fair to United that we say a good word for its productions.

"It will always be a pleasure to run United productions at our Liberty theatre. We ran Florence Reed in 'Her Code of Honor' all week. The first three days the weather was stormy, but even under these conditions we played this attraction to capacity business."

Pacific Fleet Passes in Kinogram Review

The departure of the Pacific fleet from Hampton Roads, Va., for the west by way of the Panama Canal is pictured in Kinograms No. 50, the mid-week release reaching Eastern exhibitors for screening Wednesday.

The second and final installment of pictures from Petrograd under Bolsheviki rule is also contained in this issue of Kinograms, as well as other subjects.

Robertson-Cole a Foreign Leader

Recent Deals Almost Cover All Civilized Lands

ON the heels of a statement calling attention to the quick rise of Robertson-Cole in the domestic motion picture world, during the first half year of its existence, a resume is issued this week showing that Robertson-Cole productions are now to be found in every civilized country in the world with the exception of Mexico, West Indies and Brazil. Negotiations are now pending covering these countries which, when consummated, will result in the entire Robertson-Cole output being disposed of in all foreign lands.

Since the first of this year, the foreign department of Robertson-Cole has been active in consummating one big transaction after another, until today the organization is rated among the leaders of the film world, outside as well as within the United States.

Starting with the contract which gave Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd. the whole Robertson-Cole series of offerings for 1919 for distribution in the United Kingdom, foreign motion picture interests have been compelled to recognize Robertson-Cole because of the importance of its deals.

In turn the following contracts have been recorded:

Chester Beecroft, representing the Scandinavian Film Agency of Copenhagen, closed with Robertson-Cole for its entire output for Continental Europe and Egypt.

The Australasian Film, Ltd. has taken over all the Robertson-Cole stars series for Australia and New Zealand.

The distribution rights for Canada have been secured on all the Robertson-Cole attractions, by the Exhibitors Distributing Corp., with offices in every important city in the Dominion.

Saenz and Mai have purchased the rights to the Hayakawa, Warner, Barriscale, and Desmond series for Argentine, Paraguay and Uraguay. The rights for the same territory on all other Robertson-Cole offerings including Rhodes, Walthall, Kerrigan and Rubens, have been taken over by the North American Motion Pictures, Ltd.

The Oriental Trading Company controls all the Robertson-Cole pictures for the Dutch East Indies, and the Federated Malay States.

In Japan, the Nippon Matsudo Shasin Kaisha control the rights. The Indian Films, Ltd. have the Robertson-Cole series for India, Burma and Ceylon. The rights to Africa, below the Equator, is controlled by the African Film Trust.

Numerous special contracts have also been negotiated by the Robertson-Cole foreign department.

All the Kerrigan features have been disposed of in the United Kingdom, Scandinavia, Canada, India, Durma, Ceylon, Egypt, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand, Dutch East Indies, Argentine, Paraguay and Uraguay and Continental Europe.

In addition to these sales, the Robertson-Cole foreign department acting as American representative of Sir William Jury, purchased for his organization the United Kingdom rights to the Maurice Tourneur productions, "Woman" and "The White Heather."

Robertson-Cole points with pride to its record in the foreign field, as well as in the domestic, and claims a record for progressiveness attained by few motion picture organizations.

To further the interests of the foreign buyers who control the rights to Robertson-Cole features, the organization has issued the Robertson-Cole Cinema News, devoted exclusively to foreign interests.

Lillian Walker in Serial Field

Signs with Grossman to Make Release for Pathe

LILLIAN WALKER, one of the best known woman stars in pictures, last week became one of the long list of celebrities who will appear in serials under the Pathe banner when she affixed her signature to a contract with H. H. Grossman, President of the Grossman Pictures, Inc.

For some time, Miss Walker has headed her own company, the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, but following the general trend towards serials, determined to enter this field which is practically new to her. The serial in which she will be starred by Mr. Grossman and which will be released through Pathe Exchange, Inc., is entitled "One Million Dollars Reward." The authors are Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray.

Miss Walker arrived in New York from Los Angeles on Thursday, July 17, and remained in the City only long enough to complete her arrangements with Mr. Grossman. She left the following day for her home at Saratoga Springs where she will rest until beginning work on the serial about August 1st.

The Grossman serial will be made at the Wharton studio at Ithaca, N. Y., where Mr. Grossman last week shipped eight huge motor truckloads of sets and props. The sets, he has announced, will be the most massive and elaborate ever used in a serial. This means that two Pathe's forthcoming serials will be made in Ithaca. Theodore Wharton's serial, "The Crooked Dagger," starring Jack Norworth, is to be made in the college city, and Mr. Wharton began work last week on a new studio which is to be ready for occupancy not later than August 15th when Mr. Norworth will make his first plunge into pictures.

Mr. Reeve and Mr. Gray, the authors of Miss Walker's serial, have an imposing list of screen successes to their credit. Mr. Reeve is noted as the creator of the famous detective of fiction, "Craig Kennedy," and his works include Pearl White's serial, "The Perils of Pauline," the three serials released under the title of "The Exploits of Elaine," "The House of Hate," Ruth Roland's latest serial "The Tiger's Trail" and "The Carter Case." Mr. Gray has collaborated with him for some time.

Laura Trainor, who achieved fame some time ago by riding her pet horse from Missoula, Mont., to Los Angeles, Cal., has been engaged by Universal to play with Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill in "Fighting Blood."

Monopol Pictures Has "Crimson Shoals"

Max Cohen of Monopol Pictures Corporation has just completed a deal whereby his organization has acquired the world rights to "Crimson Shoals," a six reel "special" designed for state right consumption. This production was made by Louis Burston under the direction of Francis Ford who also appears in the star role of the picture.

Max Cohen is presenting "Crimson Shoals" for the consideration of state rights buyers as the most unique territorial attraction yet offered. It is said that triple exposures are the most perfect ever made and in many instances Ford is shown in one scene in his three characters, at one point apparently struggling with himself. The production has been given its final touches as regards titling and cutting and will be ready for the state right buyer within the next week.

Small Exhibitors to Get Griffith Film

"Hearts of the World" is to be released to the small exhibitors of the West Coast territory on a rental basis, it has been announced by Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., following arrangements which have been completed with David Wark Griffith, the producer.

Since "Hearts of the World" was originally released Lesser, who controlled the feature for twenty-two states, has exhibited it solely as a traveling percentage attraction. Practically every big city and town in the country has been visited by one of the many "Hearts of the World" companies, each of which carried its own special effects and orchestra.

President of Tyrad

An article in last week's issue of the NEWS concerning the growth and future plans of Tyrad Pictures Corporation, referred to Jacques Tyrol as President of the company. As a matter of fact Mr. Matthias Radin is president and general manager, while Mr. Tyrol is director general of the company.

Tyrad is in receipt of two more offers for the United States rights to its feature "The Red Viper."

H. B. Warner in "Pagan God"

Absolute Fidelity Secured in Chinese Settings of Big Production

IN "Pagan God," second of his series of productions under direction of Jesse D. Hampton, distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, H. B. Warner is said to have surpassed his work in "The Man Who Turned White," his initial Robertson-Cole production.

"The Pagan God," a story of China, of its intrigue, its subtleness, and its inbred hatred for the white man, shows Warner in the role of an American diplomatic agent, who to foil a heathen outbreak against Christians is compelled to risk his life among the Chinese plotters.

Warner is supported by a competent cast, which includes Carmen Phillips, Ed Piel, Jack Abbe, Carl Stockdale and Margurite De La Motte, the young Los Angeles girl who has proved one of the biggest finds of the year in the California film circles.

The production of "The Pagan God" was accomplished on a massive scale. Entire Chinese streets had to be erected on the Hampton lot for the production. Hundreds of real Chinese men were engaged to appear in the big scenes. Every detail of atmosphere was correct, because Hampton engaged Chinese experts to supervise the technical feature of the photoplay.

The gowns worn in the play are the same that can be seen any day in Peking. In fact, the entire production might have been laid in the Chinese city, it is said, so perfect has been the attention to detail.

The story was written by F. McGrew Willis, who made an exhaustive study of Chinese conditions before beginning the piece. It was whipped into form for screen production by George Elwood Jenks, who has been highly successful in his literary efforts since joining the editorial forces

Big Cast for Blanch Sweet

Jesse Hampton Selects Well Known Players in Support of His Star

NO sooner had Jesse D. Hampton signed the contract with Blanche Sweet to appear under his management, and with Pathe Exchange, Inc., for distribution, than he selected a supporting cast of unusual strength. It is his intention that his first production, featuring Miss Sweet shall not only be elaborate and spectacular, but that the star and the story will have the benefit of the most capable actors and actresses of the screen.

Miss Sweet's initial production as already announced, will be "A Woman of Pleasure," from the popular London melodrama by James Willard, and selected particularly on account of its intense dramatic values, unusual plot and action. Wallace Worsley, for many years a stage player and producer, directs the feature under Mr. Hampton's supervision

Wheeler Oakman, noted for his work in "The Spoilers," "Ne'er Do Well," "Mickey," and other screen successes, was immediately engaged.

Wesley Barry, the famous "freckle-faced boy" who made such a hit in "Daddy Long Legs," has an excellent part in the production.

Wilfred Lucas, actor and director so well known to screen audiences, also is engaged. Walter Perry, the well-known character comedian, has an excellent role.

Carmen Phillips, who has made a series of characterizations in "heavy" roles in Hampton productions, also will support Miss Sweet.

On a Long Road Trip

J. S. Jossey, representing the Arrow Film Corporation, is on a long road trip around the country in the interest of the various features being sold on a State Right basis by Arrow.

Dennig with Goldwyn; Block Changes Duties

With the co-ordination and elaboration of Goldwyn Publicity, Service and Advertising Departments, Howard Dietz, Assistant to Ralph Block, Director of Publicity, changes his duties to that of Assistant to Charles D. Isaacson, Director of Advertising succeeding Kenneth MacGowan.

The change makes place in the publicity department for the entrance of Lynde Dennig, who leaves his important post as editor of Wid's Daily to be associated with the director of publicity as assistant. He will at once take up the work of co-operating with the trade papers in the interests of Goldwyn publicity.

In the publicity department of Goldwyn, Mr. Dietz' duties have been to look after publicity in the trade publications. His task in the advertising department will be to look to the preparation of trade paper advertisements.

Beck Signs "Villain" of Many Plays

Another motion picture star to be added to the list contributing to the production activities of Arthur F. Beck is announced in Stuart Holmes, and thereby all picture appearances of this player will be confined to those productions made by Mr. Beck.

And the further announcement that all of those features starring Mr. Holmes, will be released on the Pathe program, follows deals by Mr. Beck whereby he has signed on long term contracts Miss Leah Baird as star in Hodkinson's releases, Doris Kenyon as star of the Louis Hoseph Vance feature-series, and Miss Frankie Mann as a co-star on the program, thus demonstrating that as an independent producer, Mr. Beck is rapidly commanding a leading position.

Big Things Expected of Alma Rubens' Picture

"Finer and bigger" than anything she has yet done is the promise held out for the forthcoming production by Alma Rubens of "Paradise Annie," which will soon be released by Pathe. Daniel Carson Goodman, who has supplied the story, is on record as saying that he regrets it as superior to "Hagar Revelly," the novel which brought a large measure of fame to the author.

Mitchel Lewis' time is valuable, so he takes the one sure method of keeping abreast of happenings in the industry

Mitchell Lewis Keeps Abreast of Times

While Mitchell Lewis, Select Pictures star, is working on the edges of civilization on his forthcoming picture, "La Rue of the Strong Heart," he finds time between shots to read about the activities of his fellow actors in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

On the day the accompanying photograph was taken, which shows the big actor and his camera man, E. MacManigal, scrutinzing the pages of THE NEWS, Mr. Lewis had just finished a shot on "La Rue of the Strong Heart." The story he is reading is about himself, telling about the progress of the production on which he is now working. This shot was made at Keen Camp.

"La Rue of the Strong Heart" is now practically completed, and a print of the production is expected in Select's Home Office shortly.

Care to Be Taken in All Dooley Comedies

Johnny Dooley is again hard at work on a new comedy under direction of William Nigh. C. L. Bach, president of Johnny Dooley Comedies, has big expectations of the comedian's future productions.

"Johnny Dooley is an international asset," he said. "His four years of pantomime experience abroad, his intelligence, together with his Scotch birth, will make him an international favorite. There are none of the exaggerated slapstick, pie-throwing incidents in the Johnny Dooley pictures.

"We will not rush out a lot of cheap comedies. Our program will be limited to twelve pictures a year, and a full month will be occupied in making each production and making it a finished product."

Select Announces Three Features for August

Sergeant Guy Empey, in his forthcoming Select Pictures special attraction, "The Undercurrent"; Olive Thomas' Selznick Picture, "The Spite Bride," and Eugene O'Brien in his first Selznick Picture, a Ralph Ince Production, "The Perfect Lover," comprise the list of attractions which Select Pictures announces for release during the month of August.

In "The Undercurrent," which is announced as a photodrama of today, Sergeant Empey will be supported by Florence Evelyn Martin.

Day of Cartoon Comics Here

Earl W. Hammons, Vice-President of Educational, Sees Coming Perfection

WITH the public's interest sharpened in the direction of cartoon comics, due to the continual improvement of these subjects, Earl W. Hammons, vice-president of Educational Films Corporation, which releases the "Judge Rumhauser" and other International cartoon productions believes the real future of such comedies is at hand and that development will bring forth subjects which may honestly be advocated as one hundred per cent. perfect achievements. The prediction is also advanced that these laughmakers may not for long be confined to single reel lengths.

"These pictures can express real comedy. A director is not hampered by an actor failing to "get over." There is no such thing as a player having the necessary "spark" missing. If advisable, we can go over the picture, polish it, change, perfect, smooth the faulty parts. The characters are puppets which respond in all sincerity and hit the real notes of comedy. The theory is intact. Perfect execution is but a matter of time."

Summed up, that is Mr. Hammons view of the subjects which bear the much abused appelation "animated cartoons." The view is echoed by Gregory La Cava, director in charge of the production of the cartoons for Educational release.

Whether or not he was first to realize that a real story, smoothly hung together, was necessary to further advance the standard of film cartoons, it remains that Mr. Hammons is today among the strongest advocates of that theory, and is largely instrumental in having it put into effect. Educational's bookings of the subjects, and the fact that from "fillers" merely tolerated as program curiosities, they are today ofttimes featured in the bigger houses, is regarded as a proof of the soundness of his beliefs.

The fact that there are today comparatively few artists of first water, capable of grasping an idea and putting it over in perfect manner in comedy cartoon form, is a matter of regret to Educational officials. Yet, withal, Mr. Hammons points out improvement has been gradual but sure, and today the "actors" in these pictures faithfully express ideas and emotions and have achieved demand from the best class of picture-goers. In time it is his belief that they may in part supplant acted comedies.

Many Critics Like MacDonald

Katherine MacDonald Finds Favor in Eyes of Many Leading Picture Writers

KATHERINE MACDONALD, star of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, has by her recent work won unstinted praise from newspaper critics the country over. Her artistry, in addition to her acknowledged beauty, has apparently drawn the attention of many writers to her.

In the New York Evening Mail, T. E. Oliphant, dramatic editor and special feature writer for that paper recently printed the following under a large two column picture of Miss MacDonald. "It was when I saw Katherine MacDonald in the role of Lady Diana in "The Squaw Man" that I said to myself, "there is a photoplayer to be heard from." That was some time ago, but whatever Miss MacDonald may have done since then there is no question that she is being heard from—and with considerable emphasis. I am chagrined now that I didn't go further and predict a really remarkable success for her, for that is exactly what she is achieving."

Harriet Underhill, writing in the New York Tribune, said "Miss MacDonald is a flawless beauty," while the photoplay editor of the New York Sun said "Miss MacDonald must be credited with a triumph."

Guy Price, of the Los Angeles Herald, a critic who probably sees more pictures than any other newspaper man, said the following:

"Miss MacDonald's artistry, combined with her youth, personality and beauty, should carry her far to the cinematic heights her hard work deserves. Close-ups depict Miss MacDonald as one of the few really beautiful stars of the screen, who not only have beauty, but remarkable dramatic sensitiveness. Her remarkable portrayal will long be remembered by those who saw the photodrama."

Rumors have gone by the board with the announcement that William Hart has signed a long term contract with F. P. Lasky

Strand Again Books a "Hall Room Boys" Film

So successful was the first release of "The Hall Room Boys" at the Strand Theatre last week that Manager Jack Eaton has booked the second of the series for his comedy feature for the week of July 27th.

The second episode of "The Hall Room Boys" comedies is called "A Howling Success," and in it Percy and Ferdie, play by Flannigan and Edwards, appear as the well known dry goods store clerks in a story that is said to be particularly laughable and packed to overflowing with legitimate laughs.

This series of comedies were made by the National Film Corporation at their California studio and are founded on the N. Y. Evening Sun cartoons of the same title. Distribution is being handled by Jack and Harry Cohn who arranged the Strand Theatre showings.

Major Beith Forced to Return to England

Major Ian Hay Beith, British author and playwright has deserted the Los Angeles film colony and is now en route to London, where he will report for military duty. During his stay in Southern California, Major Beith has been a member of Cecil De Mille's literary staff in the production of "Male and Female (Created He Them)."

Major Beith has been on furlough from the British army. Before leaving he was host at a dinner attended by his studio associates.

Pioneer Head Studies Market Conditions

In order to make first-hand observation in person, with which to guide both himself and his associates in the formulations of the Pioneer Pioneer plans for the coming season, M. H. Hoffman, Pioneer's general manager, is now touring the section east of and including Chicago.

Within a few weeks several large productions now nearing completion on the coast and in the east, will be delivered to the Pioneer, and then will begin a most extensive and thorough sales campaign.

Stage and Screen Have Claims on Barrie

Lt. Nigel Barrie, who plays opposite Marion Davies in her latest Cosmopolitan starring vehicle "The Cinema Murder," to be released in the Fall as a Paramount-Artcraft picture by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one of the best known leading men on the stage and screen.

In England Lt. Barrie created a record for himself by his work with Sir Frank Benson, Sir Herbert Tree, Fred Terry, Julia Neilson and others. Later, playing the title role in "The Count of Luxembourg" and the lead in "Gypsy Love;" with John Drew in "Much Ado;" opposite Grace George in Barrie's "Half an Hour" and "The Younger Generation;" playing leads in "The Laughing Husband," "Queen of the Movies," and with Lawrence Grossmith in "Nobody Home," Lt. Barrie became widely known as a stage favorite, here and abroad.

With Joan Sawyer, dancing in vaudeville several seasons ago, he created a record at the Palace Theatre, New York, where the couple danced for fourteen consecutive weeks.

Short Paramount Subjects Programmed

"Among Those Present" is the title of the newest Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy which is listed among the short subjects released July 20 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In this comedy Ford Sterling and Phyllis Haver are the featured players.

The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue for July 20 is "American Women in France."

Cohen and Woodruff Get Selznick Appointments

Exhibitors will be interested to learn of the appointments this week of Ben S. Cohen to the position of Manager of Select Pictures Corporation's Denver Exchange and Lorenzo F. Woodruff as Exploitation Representative for Select, with headquarters at the Atlanta branch through which office he will serve exhibitors throughout the Southern territory.

"Her Kingdom of Dreams" is a recent Anita Stewart picture, made by the star's own company

Film Title Subject of Debate

Big Anita Stewart Production Will Be Seen as "Her Kingdom of Dreams"

AFTER weeks of discussion as to the advisability of changing the title of the next Anita Stewart Production, it has been definitely decided to keep the original title of the story on which the production is founded, namely "Her Kingdom of Dreams." No one ever thought of suggesting a change in this title until after the picture was finished on the coast, and Louis B. Mayer and his co-workers got a peek at the completed negative.

What they saw immediately raised serious doubts in their minds as to whether the title "Her Kingdom of Dreams" was significant enough to give a fair idea of the film's class.

Numerous other titles were suggested, but none of them seemed adequate until Mr. Mayer hit upon "The Way of the World." This title was considered not only appropriate, but also conveyed the idea of immensity which characterized the production. This title was sent to the New York office, and to say that it caused a shock is putting it mildly. A complete advertising campaign had been planned on the original title of "Her Kingdom of Dreams," Miss Stewart had already written a song to be used in connection with the exploitation of the picture, and exhibitors generally had come to expect the production under the title of "Her Kingdom of Dreams."

Joe Lee, general sales manager of the Stewart Company, immediately got busy and wired these facts to Mr. Mayer on the coast, also urging that the original title be retained. In addition to the reasons given above he stated that as millions of readers were familiar with the story as published under the title of "Her Kingdom of Dreams," it would cause the loss of valuable publicity, and no end of confusion to make even the slightest change.

Mayer was still undecided but finally decision was made to keep to the original title.

Further "Sahara" Bookings

Last of Larger Circuits Takes the Picture in South; Other Contracts

VIRTUALLY the last big motion picture circuit of theatres in America came into camp during the past week and booked "Sahara" the J. Parker Read, Jr., production starring Louise Glaum and directed by Allan Dwan when the Saenger chain in New Orleans signed with Hodkinson.

This booking was made presonally by Julius Saenger in the absence of his general manager, E. V. Richards, Jr., and the first run of "Sahara" will be held the week of August 3rd at the greatest of the New Orleans theatres, the Strand. Immediate playing dates on "Sahara" will follow throughout the territory on the Louisiana and Mississippi cities and towns booked by that organization.

The points included in the booking are: Shreveport, Pensacola, Jackson, Baton Rouge, Alexandria, Hattiesburg, Lake Charles, Meridian, New Iberia, Monroe, Texarkana, Greenwood, Clarksdale, Greenville, Natchez, Columbus, Plaquemine, McComb, Gulfport, Donaldsville, Natchitoches, Thibodeaux, Lafayette and Vicksburg.

Among the other important first run contracts signed during the week by Hodkinson managers are the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., the Unique, El Paso, Texas, Elizabeth Johnson's Liberty theatre, Houston, Texas; the Crescent, Austin, Texas; the Orpheum, Waco, Texas; the Jefferson, Dallas, Texas; Tom Furniss Rex, Duluth; the Empire, Mobile and the Liberty, Beaumont.

In virtually every city where "Sahara" has been presented, the first run exhibitors have liberally advertised and exploited the picture.

Saenger Houses to Run Prizma Color Films

Many thousands of dollars were involved in a contract that was signed this week between World Pictures and the Saenger Amusement Corporation. The contract has to do with the presentation at the theatres in the Saenger Amusement circuit for the coming year of Prizma Natural Color Pictures. This is one of the most important deals so far put through by World Pictures for Prizma.

The Saenger Amusement Company, through Mr. Richards its general manager, gave Prizma natural color pictures a thorough trial covering several months at the Strand Theatre, New Orleans. Mr. Richards was convinced when he first saw Prizma pictures that they had a value over black and white, but he wanted to be convinced that the public appreciated the superiority before taking on the pictures for the several houses of the circuit. So pronounced was the success in New Orleans evidenced by the box office statements with Prizma Pictures featured that the Saenger Amusement Company will now show them in Pensacola, Meriden, Shreeveport, Baton Rouge and other prominent cities in which this company maintains and operates theatres.

Fay Tincher Amuses in Comedy of Bad West

"Dangerous Nan McGrew" is the title of Christie Special Comedy in which Fay Tincher is being featured as "the lady McGrew of Dead Dog, Wyoming."

Dangerous Nan McGrew is the fourth of the Christie Specials in which Fay Tincher is featured and is a role created to her liking for "rough stuff" and western flavor. Christie produced the picture on quite an extensive scale, with an entire western town, through which stage coaches, cow punchers, dance hall girls and hundreds of others rollick with carefree abandon.

In the cast of Dangerous Nan McGrew, in addition to Fay Tincher, Earle Rodney and Eddie Barry, are Tom Ricketts, who plays the mayor of the town, Jack Henderson, the minister, George George, the bar tender, Bob Kortman, the very bad man, and a number of Christie Follies who for the time being had to make themselves un-beautiful in chaps and spurs.

IN booking this Universal Special Attraction, bear in mind these facts. Fannie Hurst is the highest paid short story writer in the world. Fannie Hurst's stories have but once or twice before appeared in pictures. Fannie Hurst has a following of millions who will go to any length to see her great work on the screen.

Bear in mind that this story—"THE PETAL ON THE CURRENT" appeared in COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE with a list of readers reaching from one end of the country to the other.

Bear in mind that in this great production Mary MacLaren does her greatest emotional work, greater than her wonderful work in "SHOES" that was a sensational financial success for exhibitors.

We can't tell you, nor are we going to tell you the story. It's far too big to describe in words. It must be seen to be appreciated.

On that basis we urge you to review "A PETAL ON THE CURRENT" privately, where undisturbed you can appreciate it's possibilities. Your Universal exchange will appoint a time for you. Communicate with them at once.

UNIVERSAL

Special Service Section on

Monroe Salisbury in "Man in the Moonlight"

IF you are going to play "The Man in the Moonlight" you will have secured a picture which is typical of Monroe Salisbury's starring subjects in that it is melodramatic and mostly concerns the star himself.

"The Man in the Moonlight" is from a story and scenario by Elliott J. Clawson and was directed by Paul Powell and in support is William Stowell, Colleen Moore and a good cast of correct types.

The feature is a story of the Canadian Northwest in which the "Mounted" figure largely, but which centers about Monroe Salisbury, as "Rossignal," a French-Canadian outlaw, a strange mixture of "good man-good devil." The picture purports to have its plot laid in the section of Longfellow's "Evangeline," and the period is that of a decade ago. It comes very closely to being a costume offering, although not much attention has been given to details in this connection.

If you are playing this, we presume that you have already secured an adequate following for this star's features, who will remember his recent productions, "The Sleeping Lion," "The Guilt of Silence," "The Blinding Trial" and "The Desire of the Moth," and therefore you will bill your star big enough to let his admirers know that he is again at your theater.

The feature is in six reels and will screen far better than an average six-part production.

HERE is the plot of "The Man in the Moonlight": In the village of St. Pollinaire, Canada, a few miles from the border of the United States, lives Pierre Delorme (Sidney Franklin), his good wife (Virginia Foltz), and their daughter, Rosine (Colleen Moore). There is another member of the Delorme family, Louis (Arthur Jasmine), a son who has wandered from the straight and narrow path and is now known to be in bad company, that of Rossignal, the outlaw (Monroe Salisbury), and called "The Nightingale," a man to be feared and shunned, not alone because of his deeds of evil daring, but because of his strange, almost supernatural, powers over both men and women.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the pride of Canada and the fear of all evil-doers, hunt continually for Rossignal but his face is known to few and his hiding places in the mountains are seldom found. No more faithful member of the "Mounted" than Sergeant O'Farrell (William Stowell) rides with Captain Hendricks (Alfred Allen), the grizzled old veteran of many years' service. A trusted man is he, with duty first in his thoughts. It is O'Farrell who follows a clue that leads to the arrest of one of Rossignal's band, and some brandy that is being smuggled over the border, falls into the Royal Mounted's hands. Louis had a hand in the smuggling job, but being fortunate has managed to slip by the officers and make good his escape for the time.

TO his father's house, the tavern of St. Pollinaire, goes Louis, hoping to hide until the officers grow tired of looking for him. Following closely at his heels, rides the "Mounted." It is unwelcome duty to Sergeant O'Farrell, for Rosine is his sweetheart.

When the officers reach the tavern, Rosine warns Louis, and while they are being detained by the genial landlord who welcomes his future son-in-law and his companions with open arms, not knowing the reason for their visit, he slips away to the hills.

Two years pass and the day of Sergeant O'Farrell and Rosine's wedding arrives. There is much joy in and about the home of Pierre Delorme, but it does not extend completely to the heart of Rosine. Her brother, wayward lad that he is, has been caught and together with Rossignal is serving a term in prison at Fort Magrue.

Through the one street of St. Pollinaire rides an unusual figure. He is tall and well built and strangely dressed. There is a sardonic, carefree smile on his lips. There is a confidence in his air that almost suggests bravado. The stranger dismounts at the tavern door and as if in disdain of the Royal Mounted, continues his way into Pierre Delorme's house. "My name is Barbeau and I am a hungry man," he tells the landlord, and while waiting for his repast to be prepared he wanders from room to room, attracting attention and seeming to exert a strange power over the girls who have come to attend the wedding ceremony. To the tavern comes another stranger, a woman well dressed and beautiful. She brings a letter for Mother Delorme's eyes alone. She, too, will rest at the tavern before continuing her journey.

AS the marriage ceremony is about to take place, a messenger comes with orders for Sergeant O'Farrell, Rossignal and Louis have escaped from prison and are in the vicinity. O'Farrell is ordered to carry this information to his captain. Not even a wedding must interrupt him in his duty. Sadly he takes his letter to Rosine, sadly she goes to her room. Her own wedding postponed that her brother may be captured is indeed a strange fate.

At the window of her room, Rosine finds the stranger who has given the name of Barbeau. She is not startled, for women of this land grow up to expect strange things to happen. Barbeau, still the careless, mocking stranger, sits lightly on the window sill. He has a message for Rosine. "Your brother is at the cabin at the head of the Passage Du Mort. He is badly wounded. There was but one good horse. I gave it to him. He must have food and bandages. I have come for those things," is what he tells her.

"You are Rossignal?" she whispers, and the stranger smiles his assent.

Then he continues, "Sergeant O'Farrell's scaled orders must not be delivered," and he tells her why. Instructions to capture both Rossignal and Louis are within the sealed envelope.

BY saying that she wishes to read the letter, which Captain Hendrick has sent to O'Farrell, Rosine is able to extract the sealed orders from the envelope and O'Farrell rides away with only the letter on his person.

At midnight, Rossignal, the Nightingale and Rosine ride out toward the Passage of Death and the cabin where Rossignal has said Louis lies wounded.

Sergeant O'Farrell discovers that his orders are missing when he delivers his letter to the captain, and the whole troop gallops madly back to St. Pollinaire in search of them. They arrive while Pierre and Mother Delorme are reading the letter which the mysterious woman has delivered. The letter is from Louis and states that the woman is an angel, that he,

Rossignal and Rosine arrive at the cabin where Louis is supposed to have have gone, but he is not there. Rosine accuses Rossignal of bringing her to the cabin under false pretenses, to which the bandit replies in explanation that the pass they have just ridden through is impassable to one who did not know the road and infers also that he would possess the girl.

ROSINE rushes to the door, but before she can make her escape, Rossignal has blocked her passage. The girl struggles in the outlaw's arms until her strength fails, whereupon Rossignal is moved by a better impulse and lays her gently on the wreck of a sleeping bunk, and prepares to leave her. As he nears the door of the cabin, Louis appears. His story is short. A horse with a broken leg. A five-mile struggle over the mountains with a bullet in his shoulder. The mounted police are coming. Rossignal plans quickly. His instructions are for Louis and his sister to hide in the forest and on the first shot to dash for the boundary line. Louis objects, but Rossignal commands and his command is law. Moved by a strange impulse, Rosine kisses Rossignal and then runs through the door.

The officers surround the cabin and wait an opportunity to kill the outlaw. As Rossignal is about to step out into the moonlight a hand detains him. It is that of the strange woman who stopped at the tavern, and proves to be the girl Rossignal loves and who loves him.

But the lovers are not to be united in happiness. There is a duty to perform.

Out into the open in plain view of the waiting officers, Rossignal walks. The old smile of reckless disdain is on his lips. His time has come and he knows it, but before the bullet can find its fatal lodging place, his revolver has been fired in the air, and Louis and Rosine are racing toward the border.

Don't forget this point in your ad- Rossignal's life ebbs away with the woman who has loved him and followed him to the mountains, sobbing at his side.

Has the law been cheated? Rosine believes not. She believes that his death, that another might live, atones for his crimes. It is inferred Sergeant O'Farrell and Rosine are married in the United States.

IN presenting this feature to your patrons you should tell them to expect plenty of action, for there is little that may be termed characterization in this picture. It is a story which keeps moving in spite of the fact that it is evidently one provided for the particular use of the star, or in other words a made-to-order production.

We imagine if you are using Monroe Salisbury's productions regularly to good business that your patrons know what to expect, and in this picture you have the usual melodramatic incidents for them.

We would not dwell too much on the love story, as the romance of William Stowell and Colleen Moore is incidental, and that of Mr. Salisbury does not end satisfactorily, so the least said the better.

You should get over the fact that this is a great vehicle for acting so far as the star is concerned and that in it he effects the style of the late Richard Mansfield, of whom Mr. Salisbury was a great admirer. In fact, Mr. Salisbury openly states that his ambition is to be the "Mansfield of the screen."

In this picture we are inclined to think that he had in mind Richard Mansfield's performance in "Peer Gynt" and that thought suggests a good line of selling talk.

Monroe Salisbury, "the Mansfield of the screen" in the "Peer Gynt" of pictures, "The Man in the Moonlight."

Both Mr. Mansfield and his famous classic play, "Peer Gynt," are well-known by reputation, and you should incite interest by suggesting the association of the two names and the two titles.

You do not want to forget the "Royal Canadian Mounted" in this, as there is always a great interest in this fine body of men who have the reputation of always "getting their man," besides, "brass buttons" are always good for the glad hand, especially from the ladies. There are no cuts provided showing the "Mounted" in uniform, which we think is a mistake.

THIS is another picture with very beautiful backgrounds used in filming the exteriors. Some great scenic shots have been secured, showing mountains and big trees and the great outdoors at its best.

vertising. This is vacation time and these things are of interest to people who are contemplating a two weeks' rest in some quiet place.

TO those who want a few lines of selling talk for the display ad, we think this fits very well:

The story of a Canadian outlaw—half French, half Indian, who duels with the Canadian Mounted Police, saves the brother of the girl his enemy loves, and in doing so meets death with sufficient bravery to atone for his sins.

Here are suggested some catch lines for your display:

No man who wouldn't fight for him —no woman whom he couldn't kiss. The scourge of the Canadian border —Rossignol, the Nightingale.

A romance of the Canadian Mounted.

"Good man—good devil was." He gave his life to save another.

It would seem that this is a good picture for a lobby display if you go in for them, for the reason that the offering is a bit on the costume order and provides an opportunity of using characters dressed in the style affected by Mr. Salisbury, an idea of which you will get from an inspection of the accompanying photographs. As the locale of the story is mainly out-of-doors you have a chance for nice decorations by recourse to a forest for evergreens and ferns and "log cabin" effects are very easily accomplished by any amateur with a brush. Suppose you were to select some man who looks like Salisbury, dress him as nearly as you can to Rossignol and, after covering your lobby with the green boughs easily available from the woods and painting a small cabin front with a door, post your "Rossignol" at its entrance in a pose affected by this romantic character?

JOE MARTIN SOLILOQUIZES

For once in my life I have to laff!

It'll either make you laff or cry when I tell you.

It's simply this:--The boss of the Universal has gone and had my life insured for twenty-five thousand dollars.

Me, the funniest, brainiest, best actor on the screen and yet the boss is so tight and stingy that he insures me for a miserable twenty-five thousand.

Great pups!

Of all the abused, mis-treated stars that ever lollygagged into the very teeth of the camera, I am the original stepchild! I always get the worst of it.

Why I ought to be insured for a thousand times twenty-five thousand and the boss ought to be glad to pay the premium, even if he cancels the policy after he's got the newspapers to fall for the publicity stunt.

Boys, take it from me, this stuff of being a movie star is simply bunkalorum. I go out on the stage and do things in perfect seriousness and then everybody simply dies of laughter.

Suddenly the boss of the Universal hears that there's something to laugh at in the studio. So he immediately wires out, "Make a big star out of the monkey. Get the best authors to write his stories. Let's prove that we can make a star out of a monkey. If this works we'll try it with an educated jackass next."

And just a tip from me friends! This same boss is going to soak you good and proper for my pictures. Somebody's got to pay for the laughs I bring you. Yes, and somebody's got to pay for this measly little insurance policy, too.

And it's going to be you! You're going to be the goat, even if you make a profit at it. By the way, why don't you come into the movie star business as the only unbuttable goat in captivity.

P. S.--The boss asked me to say that you can get my stuff at his exchanges but I don't get a cent for writing this stuff, so I'll be damned if I'll do it.

Happy? Why not? Young Wesley Barry has been featured with Mary Pickford and will appear in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three"

"Checkers" in Film May Outdo Stage Version

William Fox, in announcing to the exhibitors a motion picture production of the stage success, "Checkers," emphasizes the fact that the presentation of this play in screen form is on a scale that lifts it far above the stage version. It is announced as a "glorified edition" of the stage play.

Tremendous scenes, scenes that could not be attempted on the stage, are found in this motion picture. For example, at one point a seaplane swoops down over the river, and picking up Checkers and the heroine from a dory and carrying them skyward; there is a sensational train wreck, a big gambling scene and a wonderful race-track scene.

Richard Stanton directed this picture production of Henry M. Blossom, Jr.'s racing melodrama, and it was made by an all-star cast, headed by Thomas J. Carrigan and Joan Acker.

S-L Feature Booked Far in Advance

An unprecedented amount of bookings has been reported to the S-L offices from the various state rights purchasers of "Virtuous Men," the first Sawyer-Lubin special attraction. Despite the usual slump caused by hot weather and the general unsettled conditions of the various companies booking policies, exhibitors throughout the country have contracted for "Virtuous Men" far into the future. Arthur S. Hyman, who controls this production for Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan reports a list of bookings for Indiana and upper Michigan which runs into October

Two Features Ready for Show

Billie Burke and Vivian Martin in F. P.-Lasky Pictures Now Offered

TWO more productions are announced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as ready for inspection at the various branch exchanges preliminary to release in September under the selective booking plan. They are Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow" and Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss." Both these pictures have been shown at the private projection room at the home office at 485 Fifth Avenue, and were enthusiastically received by the executives of the corporation and the members of the Exploitation Department who saw them.

"The Misleading Widow" marks the return of Billie Burke to the screen after a period of several months since the release of her last Paramount picture, "Good Gracious, Annabelle," and is the first production made since the arrangement with Flo Ziegfeld was consummated whereby Miss Burke, under a new contract, will continue as a Famous Players-Lasky star. It is an adaptation of the successful play, "Billeted," by F. Tennyson-Jesse and H. M. Harwood, in which Margaret Anglin appeared in the leading role when it was presented in New York a season or two ago.

Although the word, "billeted," is a military term, it must not be inferred for an instant, Famous Players-Lasky states, that the pictures or the play from which it is adapted is a war or military subject.

James L. Crane is Miss Burke's leading man.

"The Third Kiss," Vivian Martin's contribution to the list of September Paramount-Artcraft releases, is, in the consensus of the Famous Players-Lasky executives, the best picture which Miss Martin has ever done. Not only has it a good title but it has, they declare, the real goods to back it up.

In the past Miss Martin's work has been largely confined to the sweet and dainty type of picture, pretty and sentimental, but possessing but little drama. In "The Third Kiss," it is stated, the best qualities of her previous pictures that served to gain her her present position in the world of film favorites has been retained, but added to them is a vein of drama.

Next Production of Nazimova

"The Hermit Doctor of Gaya" Begun in Place of Another, "The Native Born"

NAZIMOVA started work before the camera last week in "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya," a screen version of the novel by I. A. R. Wylie. This production will follow "The Brat" in the release schedule of Metro Pictures Corporation.

Upon her return to California after her recent trip to New York Nazimova had practically made up her mind to do "The Native Born," another of Miss Wylie's novels of India and the Far East. But a careful study of the screen possibilities of "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya" gave it the preference, although "The Native Born" is scheduled as a subsequent Nazimova production.

Charles Bryant adapted "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya" and also wrote the scenario. In the capacity of player as well, Mr. Bryant assumes the leading male role opposite the star, playing Major Tristram. Mr. Bryant, it will be recalled, collaborated with Nazimova in the adaptation of Maude Fulton's play. "The Brat," besides serving as leading man. He is an extremely versatile Englishman and as Tristram, a British Major stationed in India, he has a role that should fit him like a glove.

After a very careful selection with a view to obtaining the precise "types" depicted in Miss Wylie's novel, Maxwell Karger announces that the supporting cast for the production in addition to Mr. Bryant includes the following screen players: Charles W. French, as Colonel Boucicault; Margaret McWade as Mrs. Boucicault; Herbert Prior as Barclay; Millie Davenport as Mrs. Smithers and Bhogwan Singh as Ayeshi.

Japanese Actress Is to Star

Tsuru Aoki, Wife of Hayakawa, Is Signed to Feature for Universal

THE rumor that Universal had been negotiating for the services of Tsuru Oaki, or Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa, has been confirmed and Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, announced last week that she had signed a long term contract to appear in Universal productions.

This is considered one of the best star contracts of the coming year and Universal expects to cast Mr. Hayakawa in some of the most dramatic screen plays of the year.

In all probability her first production with Universal will be "The Breath of the Gods" written by Sydney McCall, really Mar McNeal. She has written many books and articles on China and Japan. The author lived for eight years in Japan and was deeply interested in Japanese customs and life.

Mrs. Hayakawa, who has played opposite her husband in several Japanese productions, was born in Tokio, Japan. She was educated in a convent in the United States. The diminutive actress has been with the Lasky company, Lasky-Paramount, Essanay and more recently with the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Laemmle announced that the best dramatic productions obtainable would be used for Mrs. Hayakawa's productions. A number of them will have a Japanese atmosphere and possibly some American themes will be selected.

Improvements Found in Lehrman Studios

Marking a distinctive advance, it is said, in motion picture studio construction, the structural and mechanical features of the new studios of Henry Lehrman at Culver City are attracting wide attention from other producers.

Especially ingenious is said to be the diffusing system. Running above the center of the stage is a small "A" shaped glass roof under which all diffusers are pulled in case of rain and when work is finished each day. The system is really made up of two sets of diffusers which meet in the center, and are capable of being pulled in either direction so that light may be admitted to any desired spot on the stage, to keep out some spots, and undesired streaks of light. Each diffuser is hung at a slight angle and overlaps its neighbor. The same plan, it is said, will be used at the Metro studios, with the system at the Lehrman studios as a model.

The stage itself measures 100 x 250 feet, and is equipped with many labor saving mechanical devices.

Hawaii to Be Setting for Bull's Eye

Charles Dorety is to be featured in the new series of comedies produced by the Bull's Eye Film Corporation under the direction of Charles Parrott. Stories for him are being written by Jay Mulhouser who was formerly with the theatrical firm of Cohan and Harris. The Bull's Eye Company, according to word from Nat H. Spitzer, Studio Manager, has recently received a tempting offer to move to San Francisco which is under consideration. Mr. Spitzer added that several coming releases will be filmed in the Hawaiian Islands.

Kashin Moving Into Larger Quarters

Arrangements have just been completed whereby the Screen Letter Box and the other film interests of Morris Kashin, Jack and Harry Cohn will occupy as business offices, the space formerly used by Max Marx at 1600 Broadway.

Extensive alterations are now being made. Several private offices will be installed along the 48th street and Broadway sides, and a large workroom, where the large volume of mail sent to the Screen Letter Box can be properly sorted, is being specially fitted up. In addition, private cutting and projection rooms are being built.

This work it is expected will be completed about the first of August, when the Screen Letter Box will move from its temporary quarters in the Strand Theatre Building.

House Plans Sixty-Day Run of "Sunnyside"

J. R. Nolan, manager of the Bijou Dream, one of Cleveland's downtown second-run houses, is making preparations for a sixty days' run of the First National attraction, "Sunnyside," starring Charles Chaplin.

"We were able to run both 'A Dog's Life' and 'Shoulder Arms' that long in connection with other features," says Nolan. "Consequently we expect to repeat with 'Sunnyside.'

"Our audiences vary greatly from day to day. Because ours is a downtown house, we draw patronage from the entire population of the city."

Nathan Claims Success

Al Nathan, who operates a film exchange in Olive street, Los Angeles, declares that his first feature, "And the Children Pay," played to capacity houses at Quinn's Rialto recently. The picture, it is announced, has been booked to Nick Diamos for his entire Arizona circuit and numerous local houses (Los Angeles) have already contracted for it. Mr. Nathan holds the franchise for the entire West Coast to the Tyrad productions for the next five years. The next three pictures are named as "Human Passions," "Your Wife and Mine" and "The Red Viper."

Pictures Hold on to Corbett

"Gentleman Jim," Serial Completed, Signed by Universal for Long Term

JAMES J. CORBETT will continue to act for the screen. This became a settled fact last week when Mr. Corbett signed a long term contract with Universal to appear in a number of special five and six reel productions. Mr. Corbett will return to Universal City to begin work on his special features in about two months.

In signing James J. Corbett Universal secures the services of one of the most prominent men in the country and the services of a man whose career is most unusual. When a young man Mr. Corbett won the world's heavyweight prize-fighting championship. Later he became an actor on the stage, making several tours of the country with different stage plays. And much more recently he has played the leading part in a serial motion picture that is expected to break records in serial showing.

Mr. Corbett's appearance in a serial is expected to cause a furor in sport circles. The serial, "The Midnight Man," is claimed to be one of the cleanest, snappy, and most interesting serials ever produced. Corbett has the leading role in this mystery serial.

"The Midnight Man," which was recently completed at Universal City, was written by J. W. Horne, director, and Kenneth B. Clarke. The scenes are laid in New York City and environs and the story tells of the efforts of a young man to trace the secret of his parentage.

In support of Mr. Corbett are many well-known screen actors. Kathleen O'Connor is the leading woman and the others are: Joseph W. Girard, Frank Jonasson, Georgie Woodthorpe, William Sauter, Noble Johnson, and Orral Humphreys.

Helen Holmes' Serial Titled

"The Fatal Fortune" Is Name of New Production; Story Fast from Start

AFTER more than three weeks of effort to secure for the new Helen Holmes serial a title that would comprehensively cover the story and at the same time contain a punch, the S. L. K. Serial Corporation announces that the production will be called "The Fatal Fortune." The story which was written by Walter Richard Hall, who has written many stories, including "Hate" which he also directed, deals with a fortune that has been buried on Devils Island in the South Sea.

Two men had been partners. Both had prospered. One had double-crossed the other. The injured partner was the father of Helen Holmes.

Having earlier in life deserted his wife and daughter, the latter part being played by Helen Holmes, he decided to bury his wealth on Devils Island and then go in search of his former partner in an effort to injure him. He makes a map of the location of the island and the hidden fortune.

He finds the partner and in the mix up is killed himself. Helen Holmes, then a newspaper reporter, sees the tragedy. Also through a locket on the dead man learns he is her father. She secures the map only on that instant to have the Faceless Terror appear, grab it from her hands and disappear. When she recovers, she finds only half of the map in her possession, and that part containing only the longitude—the other half has only the latitude. The Faceless Terror finds himself in the same predicament. Then begins a battle royal of wits and brawn by each side to secure possession of the other half of the map in order to locate the hidden fortune.

Cast for "Dawn" is Complete

Blackton Announces Players; Brother of Late John Bunny Has Good Part

WITH the signing of George Bunny, George Pauncefort and Robert Milasch, J. Stuart Blackton has completed the roster of players who will interpret on the silver sheet "Dawn," the latest best seller from the pen of Eleanor H. Porter, author of the "Pollyanna" stories.

George Bunny, brother of the late comedian, John Bunny, is also well known for his distinctive comedy work on the stage and screen, having appeared in Vitagraph, Goldwyn and Paramount pictures. Mr. Bunny will play Mr. McGuire, the village grocer in "Dawn," George Pauncefort, who has appeared in many Broadway stage productions, will play Dr. Stewart, and Robert Milasch is cast for Hank, the printer's devil in the village printing shop.

The engagement of Robert Milasch makes a total of seven players who will be seen in both "Moonshine and Shadow," initial production of The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., and in "Dawn," which will be the second release. The other six are Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, Blackton stars, Eddie Dunn and Lefty Alexander, the producer's comedy team, Fanny Rice and Margaret Berry, with Harry Davenport, Flora Finch and Gladys Valerie completing the all-star cast now working in "Dawn." The cast of "Dawn" promises to reveal as capable and at the same time true-to-character aggregation of players as any ever assembled by the producer.

Wallace Reid's new Paramount picture, "The Love Burglar," will be released July 13, and in it Mr. Reid is said to have one of the best roles of his career.

Daring Birdman to Make Universal Picture

Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, the aviator, whose daring stunts in the air have thrilled thousands, is to star in a motion picture. This arrangement was completed last week at Universal City by Carl Laemmle, Universal's president.

Lieut. Locklear is the only aviator in the world who has gone from one airplane to another while the two planes were in mid-air. It was Lieut. Locklear who startled thousands only recently at Atlantic City by doing this remarkable feat. He has also reversed the act by climbing from a lower plane, by the aid of a rope ladder, to the one above.

The production will be one of the costliest and most daring ever produced at Universal City. Three planes belonging to Lieut. Locklear and his two assistants were brought to Universal City recently.

Lehrman Comedies Soon to Be Produced

Production of the first of the Lehrman Comedies at the new studio at Culver City will be begun, it is said, within two or three weeks, as construction work on the big stage has practically been completed. Charles Hochberg has been engaged as film editor of Lehrman Comedies. Hochberg has been associated with Henry Lehrman in the capacity of film editor for the last four years.

Roscoe Arbuckle has leased space at the Lehrman studios for production of his Paramount-Artcraft comedies. Special offices and dressing rooms have been provided.

Illness Compels Change in a World Cast

By reason of a severe attack of rheumatism, Montaga Love has been compelled to retire from the cast of "The Battler," a World picture, after a number of scenes had been made. In view of the fact that this picture had been announced for release, the World Film Corporation found it necessary to secure the services of an artist to replace Mr. Love for this production and Earl Metcalfe was selected.

Photographers Compliment Robertson-Cole

A very remarkable compliment to the wonderful photography of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Sea" and "Captured by Cannibals" was conveyed recently by the California Camera Club in San Francisco when the Robertson-Cole films distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual were selected for presentation at the 343rd monthly illustrated lecture of the club. The organization is made up of the best known photographers on the Pacific Coast, and nothing is presented under their auspices but the best in photography.

Author Starts on First Work for Goldwyn

Octavus Roy Cohen, who recently signed a five-year contract to write photoplays exclusively for Goldwyn, left for his home in Birmingham, Ala., last week to begin work on his first Goldwyn story. During his short stay in New York, Mr. Cohen had the opportunity to attend the "first night" of his first play, "The Crimson Alibi," which was written in collaboration with George Broadhurst.

United Artists' Sales Heads All Named

The seventeen Sales Managers to head the Distributing Depots of United Artists Corporation have all been appointed. This week Hiram Abrams named the last three lieutenants still required to round out the "Big Four's" sales organization and the entire staff is now in operation through the company's seventeen offices.

J. E. Luckett goes to the Dallas office, J. F. Brett goes to Minneapolis and M. C. Coyne to Atlanta.

To Realart Branch

Diaz Callahan, who has been connected with the sales organization of several of the larger film companies, has been appointed manager of the Dallas exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation.

World's Progress for August

Four Five-Part Features Offered in Addition to a Special and a Scenic

WORLD PICTURES announces that its August releases include four five-reel features. The stars represented in this month's issue are June Elvidge in "Coax Me"; Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley in "The Praise Agent"; Lottie Kruse in "The Girl, Alaska" and John Lowell with Corene Uzelle and Edgar Keller in "The Man Without a Name."

"Coax Me" was adapted by Philip Lonergan and Will C. Murphy from a play. It was directed by Gilbert Hamilton, and Miss Elvidge, the star, is supported by a cast which includes Earl Metcalfe, lately returned from France, where he served as a first lieutenant in the American army; Arthur Donaldson and Lillian Hall.

August 11 is the date set for the release of "The Praise Agent" in which Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley are the stars. This marks the second of a series of pictures they are making for the World Film Corporation under their contract. The story is by Earle Mitchell, well known to Broadway not alone as an actor but the author of several pronounced dramatic hits. It was directed by Frank Crane. Mr. Crane was fortunate in securing the services of Jack Drumier, Lucille La Verne, J. W. Johnston, Mrs. Priestly Morrison and Lola Frink to support the stars.

Lottie Kruse in "The Girl, Alaska" is the release for August 18. This feature was made in Alaska. Five of the principals made the trip to the land of gold and glaziers to film the story and were assisted by native Alaskans for the smaller parts.

August 25 is the release date for "The Man Without a Name" in which John Lowell is the star and features Corene Uzelle and Edgar Keller.

Among the specials that will be released by the World during the month of August is a one-reel Judge Brown story, "The Demand of Dugan." It is another leaf torn from Judge Brown's book of experiences while conducting a juvenile court in Salt Lake City.

To those interested in Prizma natural color pictures, an addition will be made to its rapidly increasing list of subjects when "Gators" will be released. This is a picture of alligator hunting and alligator farms in Florida filmed in nature's colors.

Eastern Production Resumed

Universal Modernizing Fort Lee Studios and Will Produce New Comedies

UNIVERSAL is once more to produce in the East. This announcement was made at the Universal home office and comes as a surprise to the screen world. Universal already has the largest film studio in the world at Universal City, California, and are the sole owners of the Fort Lee studios at Coyetsvilles, N. J.

Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager who made the announcement states that the entire studio is to be overhauled and re-equipped with all the modern appliances of a film studio. It has been some time since Universal produced at the Fort Lee studio which is one of the largest in the East. Every new appliance and comfort, including a new heating plant are to be installed in the Fort Lee studio immediately.

The plan of producing at the Fort Lee studio has been under consideration for some time by Universal officials. The plans as outlined now are to produce a number of short features there, especially comedies. The new comedies are to be made under the supervision of Tarkington Baker, and although their nature is not made known at the present time, it is said they are to be new and novel and will be a departure in the comedy field of motion pictures.

In opening the Fort Lee studio again Universal will have studio space to let for any other producing company that may wish the use of an Eastern studio.

Work on the new comedies is expected to start this week.

Pioneer Stars Grace Davison

Six Productions a Year Will Be Made by Star with Different Leading Men

PREPARATIONS are now being made by the Pioneer executives for the exploitation of the six big pictures in which Grace Davison is to be the featured player.

The first Pioneer-Davison picture is now rapidly nearing completion, but as yet a definite title has not been decided upon.

In the first production Conway Tearle shares honors with Grace Davison as co-star.

According to the Pioneer-Davison production plans, which are now completely formulated, each picture and be based upon an exclusive high-priced novel, or successful story.

The contract calls for a different male star to appear opposite Grace Davison in each production. At present it is not known who will succeed Conway Tearle, who enjoys that honor in the premier Pioneer-Davison production.

Several well-known names are under consideration, and as soon as a decision is reached as to the nature of the second picture, one of the men stars will be signed up.

With the end in view of securing absolutely the best and highest type of story material, a committee composed of members of Miss Davison's personal staff, and representatives of the Pioneer headquarter organization are scouring the market.

If negotiations now pending are concluded, the Davison interests will be in full possession of a first class studio in the Jersey suburbs, where all the subsequent pictures will be made.

Milady's Fashions Seen in Universal Film

One of the most interesting and novel releases in the educational line of recent weeks is announced by Harry Devey, manager of Universal's educational department. This is a complete style show on the screen, in which the cleverest and most beautiful models to be found in the Fifth Avenue shops took part.

The film is the second of a series being released under the general title, "That Well Dressed Look." It is to be distributed all over the United States, Cleveland and other large inland cities having arranged to show it in their largest theatres in conjunction with an exhibition of fashions in which live models will take part.

The new picture is devoted to the exploitation of Fall and Winter styles, and is said from a photographic standpoint, to be one of the most entertaining single reels of the season.

National Studios Busy

Six companies are engaged at the National studios on the coast, and two new stages are in course of erection for further activities.

"Bill" Parsons is starting on his latest Capitol Comedy, while the fifth of the Hall Room Boys series is being directed by Harry Edwards at the same time. Mr. and Mrs. Carter De-Haven are laying off for a week. Their next picture will be under direction of William Seiter.

Henry Walthall, Billie Rhodes, Eddie Flanagan and Neely Edwards are other stars working at the National studios.

Brandt in New York

Joseph Brandt, recently resigned from Universal, and now associated with National Film, will arrive in New York about July 25 and open offices for the transaction of affairs of the various interests he will represent.

Bringing Negative of "Blue Bonnet" East

Telegrams received in New York from William A. Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, bring the news that he is preparing to leave for New York to deliver to the Hodkinson organization the first Billie Rhodes Hodkinson production. "The Blue Bonnet," which has been in production since early in the Spring.

"The Blue Bonnet" is the widely advertised story of the Salvation Army and "over here," a drama with all of its scenes laid in America after the war, directed by Louis William Chaudet.

This story has been made with many forms of co-operation by the Salvation Army, which put at the disposal of the producer and his staff all desired facilities both here and on the Coast. In the making of the initial scenes Miss Rhodes, her director and the complete cast of principals came to New York in May and remained here for weeks, completing all of the metropolitan phases of the story.

Strong Cast Will Support Doris Kenyon

Players of merit have been engaged by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., to support Doris Kenyon in her powerful Louis Joseph Vance story, "The Bandbox," directed by R. William Neill, scheduled for release in the early Fall by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Prominent in support of Miss Kenyon are Alexander Gaidan, Walter McEwan, Helen Montrose, Maggie Weston, Logan Paul and William Brotherhood along with several others to be announced shortly.

The engagement of two assistant directors for "The Bandbox," is also announced. They are Edward James and Thomas Walsh, the latter having been associated with Director Neill all during the latter's work on Ince productions.

"Teeth of the Tiger" Is Near Completion

The production "Teeth of the Tiger" featuring David Powell and Marguerite Courtot is nearing completion, under direction of Chet Withey at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in New York.

Misfortune seemed to follow Mr. Withey during the production of this story delaying its completion two weeks. Three days' work on one scene was completely ruined by scratches on the film. Then Anna Lehr, originally selected to play with Mr. Powell, was taken seriously ill with ptomaine poisoning and Marguerite Courtot was cast in her place. Miss Lehr had appeared in a number of scenes, all of which had to be retaken, necessitating the rebuilding of some sets.

"Teeth of the Tiger" is a detective story by Maurice Le Blanc, creator of the character of Arsene Lupin.

Cecil B. DeMille expects to complete "Male and Female," his new picture based upon the Sir J. M. Barrie play, "The Admirable Crichton," within a few days.

Harry T. Morey has completed his part in the making of "The Gamblers," Vitagraph's screen version of the drama of high finance by the late Charles Klein.

Roomier Offices for Realart

Press of Business Will Be Better Handled in Commodious New Quarters

REALART Pictures Corporation will shortly move to more commodious and better situated quarters from its present offices, 110-112-114 West Forty-second Street, New York. The entire fourth floor in the Winfield Building, 569 Fifth Avenue at the northeast corner of Fortieth Street, has been rented on a long term lease. The change of address will take place just as soon as extensive alterations have been made.

As a matter of fact, Realart officials intended to have permanent offices at 469 Fifth Avenue, right from the start. The fourth floor there was leased as soon as Realart went into business but the term did not begin until May 1, 1920. Temporary offices were established at 110-112-114 West Forty-second Street. During the past week, Realart received notice from the agents of the building that the fourth floor would be vacated immediately. This floor had been used by one of the Government bureaus whose activities were brought to a close. In view of this unlooked for good fortune, it was at once decided to change the date from which the lease is effective and to get work started on alterations to conform with Realart's ideas as to what the executive offices of a foremost photoplay corporation should be.

Arthur S. Kane, the president and organizer of the corporation, will have his office on the corner formed by Fifth Avenue and Fortieth Street. There will be a large reception room and offices for the following departments of the company: Publicity, John Pond Fritts, Director and his assistants, Hugh Harvey; Sales and staff, in charge of J. S. Moody, General Sales Manager; Financial, Accounting and Auditing, under the supervision of Dario L. Faralla, comptroller; Purchasing, Supervisor of Contracts, Shipping, Mailing. The telephone switchboard will be in charge of Miss Murphy, the "stolen star." Since his duties will generally take and keep him far a field, not much will be seen of Ben F. Simpson at the executive offices. However, a place will always be found for the General Field Manager on his infrequent visits to New York.

A large, well appointed projection room will occupy the center of the floor. Just as soon as this most important feature is completed, all will be in readiness.

Fox Still Expanding Abroad

Heavy Demand of American Pictures Will Be Met; Ten More Branches Soon

THE vigorous foreign demand for American-made motion pictures is illustrated by the world-wide policy of distribution which has been adopted by Fox Film Corporation. This policy is the result of requests for Fox pictures from all parts of the globe which are pouring into the Foreign Department of the Fox Corporation.

William Fox, head of Fox Film Corporation, and Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, recently went to Europe to survey the foreign situation. They found that the return of peace had left the entire civilized world looking toward the United States not only for food and other supplies, but for entertainment. With the war over, the nations which took part in the conflict, as well as those that did not, are craving the necessities of life and relaxation from the long nervous tension. They find the latter in motion pictures.

Investigation made by Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan caused them to arrange for important extension of their foreign service. Sixteen branch offices were opened abroad and three in Canada. Thus the Fox corporation was put in touch with practically every corner of the globe, and thus the Fox plan for contact with exhibitors all over the world realized. Eight men at present are handling the Fox foreign interests, under the supervision of Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan. They are:

Abraham Carlos, general representative of Fox Film Corporation and supervisor of the foreign exchanges, headquarters, Paris; Ernest Reed, managing director for the United Kingdom; Fred W. Lange, foreign manager for Fox Film Corporation; Joseph R. Darling, foreign representative; Joseph P. Ryan, district manager for South America, headquarters Buenos Aires; Alberto Rosenwald, manager for Brazil, headquarters Rio de Janeiro; Aguileo C. Calve, manager for Central America, headquarters, Mexico, and Sidney E. Abel, foreign representative.

The Fox foreign chain is to be further increased. Ten new offices will be established, in addition to the sixteen just added.

Speculators Active in a Picture Theatre

On July 13 the ticket speculators in Havana, Cuba, are reported to have tried to corral all of the tickets to the Campoamor theatre which is operated by the Universal Film company. This is the message received by Universal recently from the manager of the theatre Charles R. King.

Probably such an attempt was never made by ticket speculators before at least not in the recent history of even Broadway. But the speculator has a keen eye and evidently the Havana speculators thought well of the business the Campoamor was doing.

According to Mr. King the speculators some time prior to July 13 had tried to buy all the tickets for the theatre and had almost succeeded in a few instances. "The condition became intolerable," Mr. King says, "due to the fact that the public eventually accused the management of cooperating with the speculators."

Mr. King consulted an attorney and determining who the speculators were refused to sell them any tickets.

Drama of Underworld in Preparation

With a cast headed by Ora Carew, who has been seen recently opposite Wallace Reid, and Darrel Foss, who has been supporting Nazimova, "Loot," Arthur Somers Roche's melodramatic mystery novel of crook life is now being made into a six-reel underworld feature by Universal.

William Dowlan, who has directed Richard Bennett, Mary Miles Minter, Alma Rubena, Peggy Hyland and Emmy Wehlen, is engaged in producing the story.

Bull's-Eye Studios Busy in Hollywood

The Bulls-Eye Film Corporation is now listed among the "big league" producers, it is declared. A year ago Bulls-Eye began making comedies in a modest way, with one company and a handful of comedians and technical men as the nucleus of the larger organization that was to be. Today the Bulls-Eye studios in Hollywood, Calif., are one of the busiest places in filmland. Four companies are working seven days a week and another is in process of organization.

passed? Nothing as far as I know. Has the Park Theatre been consulted in this attempt to destroy unity of action and the perfecting of a National Exhibitors' Organization (which Heavens knows we need if many of us are to remain in the theatre business twelve months hence)? No, we have not been consulted and this same committee who sees fit to maliciously criticize, are arbitrarily adopting such methods which time alone will tell how it may affect the personal interests of some at least of its members.

"It is not the purpose of this letter to hold any brief for Mr. L. F. Blumenthal. He was elected to the chairmanship of the taxation committee by the convention that elected me as president. I have known him, however, for several years and I have found him one of the fairest and cleanest business men I have ever met.

"The agreement between the old Exhibitors' League and the Trade Review was very ill-advised. The League did not assist the Trade Review financially as agreed upon. The agreement was the cause of the animosity shown toward it by the other Trade papers and the most direct means of the old League's failure. It nearly broke the Trade Review, as I understand it, because the stock that the League controlled, then worthless, prevented the paper from refinancing. I conscientiously believed it a wise move to return it and so voted at the Boston convention in which Mr. Cohen, Mr. Berman and other New York men also voted. If this was wrong why didn't they bring it before the Boston convention and not wait until now to "yank up the dead"? Ammunition must be short.

"I have made no appointments of any kind as yet; is it not well to wait until I do, before criticism is passed?

"The old methods of state voting helped ruin the old League, and it was New York State, Illinois and the large states that were largely responsible by playing politics. We are not infallible but we are certainly honest in our efforts to make the Motion Pictures Theatres of America, Inc., a success under the new methods and it is dollars and cents in the hands of every exhibitor in this country to help us do it. Get unity first, the method of operating is immaterial, and if the officials are honest the method can easily be changed if advisable to fit conditions as they exist at any time.

Now for a 'close up.'

"The letter is long, for which I apologize. We implore peace, but, if necessary, we will not only fight to the last, but will take the fight to the New York State League and I so give open notice. Our officials are confident that our organization will be what every exhibitor in the United States wants and knows we must have. I urge as strongly as the English language will command to give us your immediate co-operation and to ignore these malicious attacks. We ask no quarter from the New York State Committee and we will give none. We shall watch closely the claim made to us that their attack is an underground means for certain friendly producing interests, buying theatres, to break up the or-

Exhibitors Path Made Easier

Eastern Division Manager of United Theatres Draws a Few Comparisons

WITH new booking methods in the air and everybody at this time courting the good will of the theatre manager, United Picture Theatres declare this is the open season for field managers and sales forces with representatives of the various film firms fair game for exhibitors. Representatives are being subjected to a lively barrage of question fire.

Jack Levy, Eastern Division manager for United Picture Theatres, Inc., is setting forth the benefits and advantages accruing to exhibitors who use the United route, has this to say:

"United is a co-operative distributing organization composed entirely of exhibitors. Thus there are no conflicting interests to dictate the exhibitor's policy. United exhibitors set their own policy for themselves. It is the policy of United to procure the best available picture productions, the best that money can provide, and to distribute them to theatres at actual cost. This is possible through the basic plan of United. United is the only film rental organizatiaon I know of since the inception of the industry that could give good reasons why any theatre should pay a certain price for any particular production. Heretofore, prices to the exhibitors have been set in an arbitrary manner, and in many cases the exhibitor has been compelled to pay exorbitant amounts to maintain the prestige of his theatre under the fear that his opposition theatre was in the market for that particular production, and rather than lose the prestige, he in many instances permitted himself to pay the distributor's price.

"The United method of ascertaining the price to be paid theatre is logical and reasonable. No member of United pays more than his theatre can afford and he does not pay as much for a $40,000 production as he does for a $100,000 picture. He pays in accordance with cost at all times.

"Instead of having to select his pictures after they are made, as the much vaunted plan of Open Booking proposes, he is already able through the United organization to set aside undesirable material before it even gets beyond the scenario form."

Campaign Book Minus Bunk

Burston Aims to Give Exhibitors a Real Aid on "Mystery of 13" Serial

BURSTON Films is to issue a campaign book for exhibitors on the new Francis Ford serial, "The Mystery of 13." With this announcement Mr. Burston states his acquiescence of the sentiments of an article published in Motion Picture News in its last issue to the effect that too much "bunk" is handed out to exhibitors by producers, in the guise of publicity.

"The exhibitor is too often solicited on the basis of superlative adjectives which cannot be half so convincing as plain statements of facts about a picture," he said. "Some distributors go so far as to say that a serial campaign book should contain a complete story of several episodes. This view, however, I think is extreme. I believe that a good outline of the story, with "stills" of the very best kind illustrating the action, stunts and characters of the play, are much better for and more acceptable to the busy exhibitor than thousands upon thousands of words in the fiction form of the serial.

"This is the plan I have followed in my forthcoming campaign book on the new Francis Ford Serial, "The Mystery of 13." I have tried to put my experience as a show man into this book, so as to make it really helpful to the exhibitor who books the picture and is willing to follow these carefully thought out suggestions for making every episode a real box-office success. There is no originality claimed for my method, in fact I am only trying to do what the News has been doing in its plan and exhibitors advertising departments week after week.

"Incidentally I challenge any trade paper in the industry to show me any trivial or fake publicity that has ever eminated from the offices of Burston Films Inc.

A Timely Fox Picture

The arrival of General Pershing in the United States, now a matter of only weeks, is expected to give great impetus to "The Land of the Free," the Fox picture which depicts the life of Pershing from boyhood to the present day.

New England Franchise for Pioneers Sold

Pioneer has just concluded arrangements by which Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Co., of Boston, acquires the Pioneer franchise for all of New England.

The contract is for a term of several years, and secures a complete exploitation of the current and forthcoming Pioneer productions.

The general offices at 57 Church street, Boston, of the Eastern Feature Film Co. are being enlarged to handle the great increase in business which will result from this deal.

Mr. Rifkin is adding several salesmen to his force, but will take to the field himself for a short period in order to start the campaign off under his personal supervision.

The title of the first Lyons-Moran comedy made under the new program of the year is "Whose Baby?" Mildred Moore is featured.

A western picture said to be filled with unusual thrills, is "The Ace of the Saddle" Universal's newest western photodrama featuring Harry Carey.

Serial for Norworth, a Jackson Product

Fred Jackson, one of the most versatile writers before the American public today and author of a score of Broadway successes, has come back to the fold of writers for the cinema. He is the author of "The Crooked Dagger," the serial to be produced by Theodore Wharton for the Pathe program, and in which Jack Norworth, the famous star of vaudeville and musical comedy stage, plays the leading role.

They Never Give Up

I believe that the best remedy for such evils is that where an exchange will not do right, cancel their contract and never again book with them until they prove beyond all doubt that they are willing to do right, and when some country village exhibitor gets "sassy" let the exchange do likewise. I can see that the exhibitors do not line up against an exchange that is crooking them, but I must compliment the exchanges upon swapping dates on the exhibitors. It is right that they should, and it would be right for the exhibitors to do likewise on the exchanges.

The motion picture business is soon to be one of the leading institutions in the world; it is passing thousands of industries yearly and growing in magnitude almost unbelievable, and to continue this growth, we must be honest and fair with exhibitor, exchange and producer. If the industry is to maintain its standing in world industries, the producer, the consumer and all must deal fairly and squarely with each other. No business on earth ever came and stayed under any principle but fairness. Neither will one ever come and succeed long under any other system.

I believe that where the trouble lies between the exchange and exhibitor is, the exchanges forget to give the exhibitor due consideration in their contracts and business methods. Let the exchanges have their system, contracts and rules, but let them at the same time give some consideration to the exhibitor, and not try to make a one-sided contract, just because they can do it. Take out the exhibitor, exchange, producers, or players, and the whole business is ruined. We must all succeed it any succeed, for without one, the others are useless.

A man can enjoy and succeed in an occupation that is pleasant, but he will never succeed in something that he has to fight for, to get a square deal in.

I would be glad to hear from the exchanges on this particular subject.

ganization and get a toe hold in exhibitors' ranks. Maybe it is, and maybe it isn't, but time alone will tell and the 'devil will out.'

The Motion Picture Industry of all industries is living in 'futures,' not in 'pasts.'

"This same Blumenthal and Mr. William Fox, Mr. Cohen's very good friend, were the leading factors in giving Messrs. Cohen, Reilly and Berman their complimentary dinner. Fine appreciation, this personal attack.

"This same Blumenthal is paying Mr. McClellan as campaign manager for the elimination of unjust taxation, besides travelling expenses, postage, stenographers and desk room, upon the confidence that the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America will be able to reimburse him. Give him credit for taking this chance in your behalf and before you put your money in to assist. The very first thing, he asked Mr. Cohen to take charge of N. Y. State in this taxation campaign. The answer from him, you have read it.

"Now I defy Mr. Cohen and his associates to disprove that the committee of exhibitors, Messrs. Schaefer, Blumenthal and myself, had more to do with reducing the proposed 20 per cent. admission tax to 10 per cent. than the combined forces of all others.

"I defy them to deny that while we were members of the National Association, I fought the producing interests at every turn in their various unfair attitudes towards exhibitors, so much so, that I was considered by the producers little better than an anarchist, and when we couldn't get a 50-50 break in the affairs of the industry was active in withdrawing and organizing independent of the producing interests.

"I defy them to show one instance where I have ever worked against the exhibitors' interests.

"Instead of these underhanded slurs, I ask them openly to state one instance where Messrs. Loew, Wells, Schaefer, Nolan, Rembusch, Horstmann or any

Trade Journalist Joins Kashin and Cohn

R. W. Baremore, who has been a member of the editorial staff of Exhibitor's Trade Review ever since the publication came into existence, has resigned his position to become associated with M. Kashin and Jack Cohn, producers of "The Screen Letter Box."

In his new position he will handle all material to be used in "The Screen Letter Box," attend to the details of production and be entirely responsible for this latest novelty in short reels.

Heads Realart Exchange in Cleveland

For the management of its Cleveland exchange, Realart Pictures Corporation has appointed J. B. Reilly. The appointment followed the visit to Cleveland of J. S. Woody, Realart's General Sales Manager, who is touring the West establishing branches for his company.

Mr. Reilly is an "old timer" in film circles, having been identified with the profession in various capacities almost since its infancy.

Foreign Field Wants Films

Picture Business Rapidly Recovering from War's Effects, Writes Fox Man

ABRAHAM CARLOS, general representative for the Fox Film Corporation, now abroad, sends a report to the home office in New York that is of general interest to the motion picture trade. Mr. Carlos sends word from Paris that a survey of the foreign field convinces him Europe is to be a great field for American-made motion pictures.

"Everywhere I have been in Europe," writes Mr. Carlos, "I find keen interest in the plans for American motion picture producers. The people of Europe look to America to supply them with motion pictures.

"Business in Europe will not be normal for many years, but the motion picture business promises to recover more rapidly than any other business. The cheapness of this form of entertainment gives it a universal appeal, placing it within the grasp of all classes.

"American-made pictures are recognized as a superior product. In Europe there are motion picture companies, of course, but they have nothing of the facilities that the great American companies have, and American pictures have the call always over the domestic pictures."

Few men are more familiar with foreign conditions in the motion picture business than is Mr. Carlos. He has been in charge of the Fox foreign business for a long time, and has traveled to many lands in the interests of the Fox company. What he has to say of the prospects abroad for American pictures, therefore, is regarded as authoritative. He expects a foreign business for American pictures that will far exceed the pre-war trade.

Even in areas where the work of reconstruction has hardly been begun, the motion picture is wanted.

Comedienne In Strong Film

Madge Kennedy's Picture, "Through Wrong Door," Has Dramatic Moments

THE public which chuckled at Madge Kennedy in "Daughter of Mine" and in "Leave It to Susan," her last two Goldwyn pictures, will now have an opportunity to admire the star in a more dramatic story than either of those two tales. "Through the Wrong Door," her new vehicle, has, of course, the same delightful Kennedy smile which brought smiles to the box-offices and in the box-offices; but the major premise of the picture is dramatic rather than comical.

Miss Kennedy plays the part of a care-free young girl who leaves Society (the sort spelled with a big S) and a puzzled host of friends to seek something which she feels the freer west offers her;—nothing definite, but mysterious and alluring. Once arrived in the promised land, she meets a young mining man (played effectively by John Bowers) whom she finds interesting and who is intrigued by her. Circumstances tend to obscure her real identity from him, and she returns east.

Intent on settling his mining affairs, the young man also comes East, where he realizes that he is being victimized by a wealthy capitalist, who has the power and proposes to squeeze him out of his holdings for a beggarly sum. One stormy night he is in his room with despair. A brace of pistols on the table tempt him to some deed—whether self-destruction or the murder of his enemy he cannot determine. Meanwhile his unknown feminine Eastern friend has given her chauffeur an address and he, instead of driving her to her destination, drives her to the room of the miner—the number of which is the equivalent "east" of the given "west" address.

From the moment of her passage through the wrong door events move swiftly.

Lois Weber Signed by Lasky

Woman Director Is to Make a Series of Dramas; Notable Staff Addition

LOIS WEBER, foremost woman director and famed as a producer of big pictures, will produce a series of big pictures for release by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the coming year.

Announcement to this effect was made at the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York some days ago. The pictures are to be known as "Lois Weber Productions" and will be distributed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as Paramount Artcraft pictures.

Lois Weber, in private life Mrs. Phillip Smalley, her husband assisting her in the directing of all her productions, is known and widely advertised as "The Belasco of the Screen," and the title is well deserved.

Following a notable career on the stage in repertoire and stock and on the screen in productions of Gaumont N. Y. M. P., Rex, Bosworth and Universal, Miss Weber became a director and from the start the highest success has crowned her efforts. When her great special productions, "Hypocrites" and "Where Are My Children," loomed upon the motion picture horizon they were hailed as two of the finest pictures ever made, and are still regarded as such.

During the past few months Miss Weber has been associated with Louis B. Mayer and has produced for him "A Midnight Romance" and "Mary Regan."

The acquisition of Miss Weber's productions is understood to be a source of the keenest satisfaction to the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, her name being a notable addition to those of Thomas H. Ince, George Loane Tucker, Maurice Tourneur and other independent producers of dramas for Paramount-Artcraft release.

Critics Recommending "City of Comrades"

Excellent press notices have been the lot of Tom Moore in his Goldwyn picture, "The City of Comrades," from Basil King's story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

The New York Morning Telegraph says Moore "steps out of his usual character and creates a figure more living and actual than ever before." The Los Angeles Examiner advises everyone to see the picture, while the New York Tribune says the story is one which is better visualized on the sreen even than in print.

Release Dates of Two Metros Are Changed

A change in the August release dates of the last two of its All Star Series productions is announced by Metro Pictures Corporation. This change involves two pictures, "A Favor to a Friend," starring Emmy Wehlen and "The Four Flusher," with Hale Hamilton as the star. Miss Wehlen's new vehicle is to be released on August 11, instead of August 18, as Metro recently announced; while Hamilton's picture will be released on August 18. The date for "The Four Flusher" originally was set for August 11.

Barriscale Versatile in Current Picture

Bessie Barriscale is said to have never had a better opportunity to show her versatility than in "The Woman Michael Married," her latest Robertson-Cole production released through Exhibitors Mutual.

In the story, Miss Barriscale changes with chamelon like swiftness from an unsophisticated little swimmer, to a charming society woman, who bears beautiful gowns with grace and ease as the wife of Michael Ordsay, the rich young clubman, and then to a celebrated international opera singer.

Williams in a Role Cut to Fit

That Earle Williams has run true to form in "The Hornet's Nest" is agreed by those who have seen his new Vitagraph feature. While the role of Asche Colvin is a little out of the usual run of the star's characters, it none the less fits. Although he has a Jekyll and Hyde character to portray, the authors have so arranged the action that Williams does not have a dual role.

It is the belief of the officials of H. & H. Productions that the war picture is a dead issue, and a new type of picture, dealing with conditions in this country brought about as a result of the war, will not find favor.

"Love Wins," a five-reel feature now being made for the H & H Productions Inc., under Director-General Herbert E. Hancock, with Violet Merseau as the star, will be the first of this new type to reach the market. Work on the production is forging rapidly ahead and the photographic end of it will soon be completed.

Little has been given out as to the story other than it has to do with a bride's battle for her hero husband who, just back from the fields of war, has not adjusted himself to conditions out of the army. The story is said to be full of surprises, with the promise of a climax that is so unusual, and at the same time arrived at in the most logical way, as to furnish food for thought for many days after the picture has been seen.

The supporting cast includes Julia Hamilton, May McAvoy, Pierre J. LeMay, John Harrison Edwards, Cora Williams, Bernard Randall and Joseph Weber.

Mystery Play with a Prison Setting

"The Trembling Hour," a mystery play by Kenneth B. Clark, has been started at Universal City under the direction of George Seigmann with a cast headed by Helen Eddy and Kenneth Harlan. It is to be made into a six-reel feature.

Supporting Harlan and Miss Eddy are Willie Marks, Gertrude Astor, Anna May Walthall, Edna Shipman, Henry Barrow and Clyde Hopkins.

The entire company will be taken to San Quentin prisoner to make the penitentiary scenes in the locale around which the story was written.

Stage Star with World

World Pictures announces the engagement of Sam Hardy as leading man for June Elvidge in "His Father's Wife.' This will be Mr. Hardy's first picture engagement since appearing in Charles Dillingham's musical comedy success, "The Canary," in which he was featured with Julia Sanderson and Joseph Cawthorn.

Soon to Release Vita Feature

"The Gamblers" Will Have an Early Showing; Original Action Changed

THE finishing touches have been put on "The Gamblers," Vitagraph's picturization of the play of high finance, jealousy and political ambition, by the late Charles Klein. Great as was the success of the screen versions of two others of Mr. Klein's plays, "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree," Vitagraph believes "The Gamblers" will be even more popular. It is an entirely different type of play, with a male star, Harry T. Morey, and while it is by no means a melodrama, it is dramatic and affords Mr. Morey fully as strong a role as the two earlier Klein plays accorded Miss Joyce.

"The Gamblers" was peculiarly susceptible to picturization and the adapters, Sam Taylor and Lucien Hubbard, have taken advantage of every opportunity to visualize many exciting scenes which were only referred to in the stage version which enjoyed such a long metropolitan run. As a result, the screen version is claimed to have a more connected story—more continuity in the succession of events.

The adapters closely have followed the original play by Mr. Klein, making only such changes in the action as would improve the story for screen purposes. A somewhat radical change has also been made in the motive of the district attorney in his prosecution and almost persecution of "The Gamblers."

In addition to Mr. Morey, Charles Kent, Agnes Ayres, Helen Ferguson, Eric Mayne, George Majeroni and George Backus are in the cast. Paul Scardon directed the picture.

Universal Specials Heralded

Five Stars Will Make Between Them Thirty-four Attractions in a Year

FIVE Universal stars will be featured in at least thirty-four special attractions within the coming year, is the announcement made by Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, late last week. The five stars are well known, need no introduction and their past successes speak for themselves. The number of Special Attractions which each named will produce is listed below, and exhibitors throughout the country can be assured there pictures will be of high order and standard quality.

Mr. Laemmle in making this statement, said, "The group of pictures selected for the five stars mentioned will naturally not only be the same high quality, but at the same time they will be of an improved quality. In selecting these five stars we have picked for the public and the exhibitor what we judged to be the most consistent and complete program that could possibly be arranged."

The announcement states that there will be four Monroe Salisbury attractions, eight pictures in which Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa (Tsuru Aoki) will be featured, six attractions with Mary MacLaren in the leading role, eight dramas starring Harry Carey, the western star; and specially selected pictures for James J. Corbett, who recently completed his first serial production.

With such a program outlined and already under way, Universal is concentrating on the production of better pictures for the coming year.

Woody Reaches Coast

J. S. Woody, general sales manager for Realart Pictures Corporation, has reached the Pacific coast. His first port of call was Seattle, where he arrived on Saturday, July 19.

After visits to Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles, he will again start East.

Hiram Abrams Breaks Into "System"

built by selling just the right amount—no less and no more—and only a short-sighted manager urges his people to sell big bills regardless of the quantities which they should sell. The other man must have his profit also.

I went on to become a jobber in talking machines. I tried that for a year and sold out my business at a profit to take charge of the talking-machine side of a big New England music house. They also sold sheet music and stereopticon slides for illustrated songs. The slide sets were sold to the theatres outright at 50 cents for each song.

I discovered that some of the star performers made 42 theatres on the circuit. So, instead of selling the slides outright, I arranged to lease them at 25 cents a theatre and kept two or three sets always on the road. The theatres saved half of what they had formerly paid, while my price was nearly all velvet! I like a sale of that sort; everybody gets more money.

From selling music and lantern slides I naturally began to look at the motion-picture industry, which seemed to be totally disorganized and in dire need of salesmanship as well as showmanship. The old condition of the industry has been previously told in "System." It was hard going to introduce business methods.

I opened a little place in Boston, bought films when and where I could and distributed them to the trade. Where before I had studied the selling capacity and consequently the paying capacity of my customers, I did the same with the motion picture houses of the Boston district.

Where a man had a good stand and was not getting all that he should out of the place, I tried to help. He would not always be helped, for the proprietors were rather a poor lot then and looked only at the nearest dollar. My sole means of helping was by suggesting improvements in buildings, cleanliness, and the elimination of tough hangers-on. And since sometimes the proprietor was tougher than any of his hangers-on, the way was not easy!

It was a new field of selling, but I found that the old principles learned in selling newspapers, milk, and shirtwaists held good in the sale of films. I did not let the theatre owners overbuy—I would not sell them more releases for a week than I thought they could make a profit on. And I tried in every way to help them run their theatres at greater profits.

I know that in Boston we were the first to regard the exhibitor at all; in many instances when a man bought a high-priced picture which did not go, I made good a portion of the sales price from my own pocket. Other distributors regarded me as little better than a lunatic. But I saw their exhibitors come and go while mine remained and made money for themselves and for me.

If you figure out how much a customer is worth to you over several years, you will go slow on pressing him for the payment of a debt for which he has not the money, but which he honestly wants to pay.

Good salesmanship involves keeping as well as selling a customer. Any fool can sell a man once.

That idea was so successful in Boston, that it took me to the presidency of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and a salary that covered six figures. It was a jump, of course, to go from the "small time" into the "big time"—Paramount was the largest distributor in the world. But the same old principles still held.

One of my first acts was to visit every city in the United States with a population of over 20,000—I took in 365 of them—in order to know just what was the capacity of the market that I was going to sell to through agents. Reports are well enough; but a sales manager should have the background which will enable him intelligently to read the reports. If he knows the people he will know what and how much they will buy; then the reports will keep his original information up to date.

The public did not then know what it wanted; the exhibitors did not know what to buy. The producers did not know what to produce. It was all a grab-bag affair and luck determined the winner.

That made some slight revision of ordinary merchandising principles necessary; both the exhibitor and the producer had to feel their way gently. The exhibitor seldom had money enough to stand any continued losses and the increase in the cost of producing pictures made it dangerous for the producer to run into any series of failures.

These conditions prompted me to start the "program system" as the best compromise for the moment. Under that system the exhibitor agreed to take the program of the producer over the contract period. The producer was thus insured against losses, while the exhibitor could have his films at a much lower price than if he had been compelled to pay for producer's losses—for a good picture sold alone would otherwise have had to stand the money wasted on the bad ones. The arrangement was purely on the stop-gap order—I did not know how otherwise to see that everybody made a profit.

The "program" system fulfilled its mission; it enabled both the exhibitor and the producer to make money while the public's taste was forming. It naturally had the great objection of selling the good with the bad and it is never good salesmanship to average up the quality.

When the plan seemed to have run its course, I started a new idea which still had some of the elements of the old.

By that time certain artists such as Pickford, Fairbanks, Chaplin, and Griffith were known to fill houses; the public began to look at announcements and go to the "movies" only when they thought they would like the picture. They had formerly gone anyway—not really knowing what they wanted. At the same time it was not physically possible for any organization's stars to produce enough good pictures to fill the bills each day in the year.

The stars wanted very large salaries, and, taking their box-office power as a criterion, they were entitled to have them. The exhibitors had begun to know their people and to express the desire to fill their own bills with their own selections.

The outcome was the "star selective system." Under this, each of the stars produced eight pictures a year. An exhibitor might make up his program as he liked and from any producer or agency, but my salesmen were instructed to sell the stars only on the basis of eight pictures—the exhibitor had to buy all or none, and, of course, he had to contract to take before seeing the picture.

The thing that always bothered me in the sale of films was that I had to sell and the exhibitor had to buy in the dark; we could sell him only a prospect. If the picture proved bad—he lost; he had to take the chance that a sufficient proportion of the eight would be good enough to let him out.

If a picture were poor he could not refuse it. At the same time the producer took on an enormous salary list and he too had to see his way out. It was a gamble all about and the real sales basis had not yet been established. I was keeping my basic principles in mind, however, and working towards them.

Eight pictures a year were too many for any star to make. The strain of making a picture is tense, yet absolute freshness in the actor is a requisite in every production. I learned that this freshness had a box-office side—that the public had been educated to the point where names alone would not go. The most popular star would fail to draw in a poor picture.

A practical proof came to hand; George Beban was under contract to do 18 pictures and he started to fulfill his contract. But the strain was too great; he said he could not do so many and asked to be released.

We let him off and he began to make a picture of his own. He took one and a half years to do it and he spent $40,000 before he had anything to exhibit. But I took that picture and sold it for more than all of the previous Beban pictures combined.

And now I have gone on to the point of selling pictures exactly as though they were merchandise. Each picture will stand by itself. The prices are regulated by the quality of the picture; and that quality is not to be taken for granted—the picture will not be sold until the exhibitor has a chance to see it.

If he wants to contract ahead he can do so, but with the provision that he can cancel his contract if he does not like the picture. Instead of selling a prospect we have got down to selling an actuality which can be sold on its appeal to the middleman who will presumably buy it because he thinks his customers will like it.

I have sketched selling adventures in many lines but only the details differ—the controlling thought is the same and it rests on the ingenuity of the individual to apply the principle contained in the thought. That is the only trick I know and I think it will work with anything, for it is founded on the solid foundation of common honesty. Always work? I even sold a baseball team on the idea.

Portland was threatened with the loss of its baseball franchise; they could not make the team pay and, of course, they could not get a good team. Although I was then in business in New York I considered Portland my home. Some of the citizens appealed to me. I said that I would put in a good team and start it on its way if only the mayor would declare a half-holiday for the opening. He readily agreed.

I hired good players at good salaries; then I got a number of motion-picture headliners together and we went up for the opening on a special train—not forgetting to let the people know that we were on our way. We had the biggest day that Portland ever knew.

The players gave all that was in them because they thought we appreciated them and they sold themselves to the people; a poor baseball town turned into a good one because everybody thought they were getting their money's worth

"Desert Gold" Is Completed

Negative Will Be Cut and Titled in the East; Seven Months in Production

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON and Eltinge F. Warner, producers of Zane Grey Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson distribution have completed in California and shipped to New York this week their first Zane Grey picture "Desert Gold" which will be released shortly. These producers "rushing the season" by laying down big productions by well known authors for summer months' release.

"Desert Gold," like "The Westerners" is what Pacific Coast exhibitors have termed a "hand-made production." The hand-made system of producing pictures results in fewer pictures but makes them correspondingly stronger and more challenging. For example, "Desert Gold" has been in the making since late last December. It could have been made in sixty days at the outside, according to the producers, but that is not the Hampton conception of doing a thing well. Therefore nearly seven months have been spent in the production of the first Zane Grey picture that ever enlisted the personal attention and supervision of the author. The scenario and script were in preparations for weeks. The best continuity men and editors were engaged and after their labors were ended Mr. Hampton and Zane Grey gave additional weeks of their time to smoothing down the story to make it an accurate screen portrayal of one of the author's most widely known stories.

Upon the arrival of the negative in New York and its delivery to the Hodkinson organization the laboratory work will be done slowly and with the greatest care and technical supervision to attain printing perfection and proper tinting."

Norworth Years on the Stage

Wharton Star Has Been Big Favorite in Vaudeville and Musical Comedy Plays

JACK NORWORTH, who has been signed by Theodore Wharton as star in "The Crooked Dagger" has a stage career that covers more than twenty years in time and more than half of the world territorially.

He started stage work as a blackface comedian in the days when vaudeville was known as "varieties," and for nine years toured the country in various acts. With Nora Bayes he won national fame on the vaudeville stage, and the songs the Bayes-Norworth team sang are today standards in the popular song field. "Honey Boy," "Harvest Moon," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," "Come Along, Miss Mandy" and "When Mother Was A Girl," all products of the Norworth brain and classics of their kind.

The success Mr. Norworth gained on the vaudeville stage soon appealed to producers of musical comedies, and he suddenly appeared in a prominent role in the musical success of a few years ago, "About Town" with Lew Fields. Then followed several years of musical comedy, including "The Jolly Bachelors," "The Sun Dodgers," "Two Ziegfeld Follies" and "Little Miss Fixit," the latter being largely his own work. All this was sandwiched in with extended vaudeville engagements.

Early in the war Mr. Norworth went to London where he appeared for nearly three years without a break, in a review by Sir James M. Barrie and the music halls. He is at present playing on the Keith Vaudeville Circuit.

"I am highly gratified to have obtained Mr. Norworth's signature on a contract," said Mr. Wharton. "I believe he will be fully as popular on the screen as he is on the stage, and I look on him as one of the best bets in pictures today. His name alone will add greatly to the excellence of the Pathe Program."

L. S. Levin Leaves Fox

After a business association with William Fox dating back to the days of the Box Office Attractions Company, Lewis S. Levin will leave the Fox Film Corporation in the near future to devote his time to the promotion of private interests.

Interior of truck operated by Bureau of Commercial Economics in a Public Service Campaign through New England

Theatre-Auto Built as a Government Aid

A motion picture theatre on wheels is the way some have described this latest product of the White Company, Cleveland, a truck built expressly for the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C., by means of which the bureau plans to extend the scope of its altruistic work in the exhibition of free motion pictures throughout the country.

This truck is the first of a fleet of seven. It contains a complete Delco lighting and power generating outfit, with flood lights capable of illuminating ten acres of land. The power generated by its own plant also operates the standard motion picture projection machine which is part of the equipment, being built into the body.

The Bureau of Commercial Economics, according to its director, Dr. Francis Holley, is about to start a "public service campaign" through the New England States in which this truck will take part. Under the auspices of chambers of commerce and industrial organizations, programs will be shown in each city, the theme of which in each case will combat whatever labor or industrial problem is being faced in that community.

Big Boom in Pictures in Western Canada

The expansion of the Fox exchanges in Canada by the opening of branch offices in the Western part of the Dominion is made necessary by the steady increase in the business there. There has been a remarkable development of the motion picture business in that section, which is regarded as a very promising field.

Heretofore Fox Film Corporation had offices in Eastern Canada only, and Western Canada was considered a side issue; but the Western Canadian field has come to be considered an important market.

Boat Race Scenes in a Fox Offering

In his latest Fox venture, "The Winning Stroke," George Walsh is re-living some of his college days, having the role of a college oarsman. The picture is urged on exhibitors as containing many sidelights of college life, particularly views of a Yale-Harvard boat race.

CAPTAIN RICHARD TUCKER, who entered the U. S. Service three years ago as a 2nd Lieutenant, has returned from France, and planning to take up his motion picture work again. Before entering the service Mr. Tucker appeared in "Think it Over" and "Behind the Mask" for the U. S. Amusement Corp.

Richard Barthelmess is endeavoring to settle the many discussions that he understands are being waged as to the correct pronunciation of his name. He prefers Bar-tel-mess, accent on the first syllable, soft pedal on the "h." We're awfully glad to know about it.

Rubye de Remer has finished her picture for World, "The Dust of Desire," and is enjoying a short vacation before beginning her next production.

Frank Leonard found the cloudy weather last Wednesday exactly to his liking for the first scenes of "The Miracle of Love," produced by International Film, and featuring Wyndham Standing and Lucy Cotton. Consequently work was begun on the western bank of the Hudson in the dense fog necessary to the action of the story.

Marion Davies' latest picture, "The Cinema Murder," calls for a stage within a stage. For the last three days the carpenters have been busy at the Biograph Studio ,erecting boxes, orchestra seats, a velvet drop curtain, even the switchboard for lights in the wings, and various other theatrical appurtenances.

Gareth Hughes has been loaned by the Tyrad Pictures, Inc., to Clara Kimball Young, to be her leading man in "Eyes of Youth." Mr. Hughes left for the coast about a week ago, and is now hard at work at Culver City. Upon his return, he will commence his second picture for Tyrad, which will probably be "The Child of Sin."

Three of the most recent poses of attractive Billie Burke, Paramount-Artcraft star

It is reported that Hale Hamilton will be seen again on the legitimate stage in the early fall, when he will appear as leading man in Cosmo Hamilton's "Scandals," which has been running in London for the past year, and which has also been tried out in Chicago, where it met with the greatest success.

The titles of Sylvia Breamer's recent pictures read like a meteorological list of weather conditions. Following "Moonshine and Shadows" there will be "Dawn," after which "Sunshine" will brighten the hearts of the movie fans.

Patsey De Forest has the leading role in the first two-reel comedy to be produced by the Adolf Philipp Film Corp. If Miss De Forest is any sort of believer in the influence of by-gone celebrities, she should be glad to work in the Adolf Philipp studio, where so many of the greatest of the screen stars began their enviable careers.

Roy Sheldon will direct the three reel serials for the recently organized Creation Films at the Kalem Studio, Cliffside, N. J. The studio is said to have been purchased by the Creation Films, and plans for elaborate productions are being made.

The Bloxbe Film Corp. are making a series of two-reel pictures of "real Americans," the players' claim to this distinction being based on their patriotic activity during the war. Perhaps the most interesting of all the heroes and heroines who will be featured in this way, are Irene and Gladys McIntyre, who are among the very few women to be rewarded for heroism with the Distinguished Service Cross. And, according to Bloxbe, they won not only the Crosses by their untiring work close to the front line trenches, but also a most delightfully happy romance, the ending of which will be a double wedding, early in the fall, when they will both marry doctors whom they met in the service.

Betty Blythe has been having a busy week purchasing gowns and accessories for her part in Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," but she found time to visit the Vitagraph Studio, where, at the request of Cyrus Townsend Brady, she posed with Harry Morey for an illustration to appear on the cover of Mr. Brady's new book. This novel is developed from the Vitagraph play, "The Man Who Won," by Brady, in which Miss Blythe had the leading feminine role.

Alice Joyce has rejoined her company and Director Wesley Ruggles at Nyack to finish taking the exteriors of "The Winchester Woman," which she was obliged to discontinue for a time, when she was taken ill after being out in a severe rainstorm all one night during the filming of an important scene.

Jane and Katherine Lee recently spent three days at Bradford, Pa., where the huge oil wells are in actual operation, and they secured some unusual scenes for their forthcoming production, "Freaks in Oil." While there, the children were very much impressed by the terrific tornado which destroyed an immense amount of property not far from where they were staying.

The working title of Gladys Leslie's picture, "Belinda Puts Her Hair Up" has been changed to "The Girl Woman." Upon its completion, Miss Leslie took a short vacation, which she spent on Long Island.

Johnny Carr, unknown in the motion picture world a few weeks ago, has jumped into already created fame in an unusually easy and enviable manner. When the Briggs' Comedies started on their production of "Skinny" they looked about for someone to fill the title role. Mr. Yokel, the general manager, declared that he had in mind the very person, a tall, lanky boy, who lived not far from his home, whom he had always thought of as "Skinny" personified. When Johnny was presented to Mr. Briggs, he was engaged a tonce, and, completely deprived of his own identity, will be known hereafter as the cartoon hero.

Rochester, Indiana, has suddenly awakened to the fact that it has a movie star, a fact not appreciated until Rochester newspapers printed dispatches sent out by a press notice. This was due to the fact that Elmo Lincoln's real name is Otto Elmo Linkenhelt, and he started life as a locomotive fireman. His fellow townsmen didn't know that he had deserted his engine for the stage however, until Universal announced the real name of the hero of "Elmo, the Mighty."

MANAGEMENT

A Director Who Talks Not of Himself: : : : :

WE like Harry Millarde, the Fox director, who has been guiding Peggy Hyland, June Caprice and Madlaine Traverse on their separate roads to fame. His frank blue eyes look directly at you when he talks, and you know that he means what he says. He would much rather talk about anything else in the world than himself, which may not be good business, but is refreshingly unegoistic, just the same. Artists aren't supposed to be good business managers, and Mr. Millarde comes from a whole family of artists. He began his professional career at the age of fourteen, when he made his first appearance on the legitimate stage, but later, when pictures came into vogue, he discovered the interesting fact that directors were paid much higher salaries than any stars, so he seized the first opportunity to direct for Kalem, and has been following that line ever since. Always, all his life long, he has been reading everything he could get his hands on, and he has very concrete ideas as to what is and what isn't artistic. We asked what he thought the most inartistic fault in the moving picture to-day.

"The fact that we have to end our pictures in one prescribed fashion," he replied, "in order to have our audiences leave the theatre feeling happy. I should like to let the story follow on to its logical conclusion, but, unfortunately too large a part of our public cares nothing about logic, and dislikes intensely leaving its heroes and heroines in anything but a live-happily-ever-after-state of being. To my mind Art is the reproduction of the high lights of life as they are. A story that I once heard of Dickens made a lasting impression on my mind. The author of "The Old Curiosity Shop" had been discussing the book while lunching with a friend, and suddenly he burst into tears, explaining sadly that Little Nell was dead. He felt that her death was absolutely inevitable, and though it grieved him as much as it did his readers in after years, he wouldn't spoil the story with an artificial ending.

"But our popular modern authors don't do that sort of thing. There is a play running on Broadway now, one of the season's biggest hits, that certainly shouldn't end as it does. I enjoyed it, but it seemed to me that there was only one way out for the supposedly little Chinese girl. But, had she taken that one way, the play most emphatically would not have been a success, and I don't blame the author or the producers in the least, for giving their audience what it wants."

"A director's business," he went on, "is to follow his company's policy; and to make the sort of pictures that company wants, which means the sort the public wants. My experience in the company I am with has always been so pleasant, that nothing I can think of would induce me to change any methods that I have been following. If the pictures have faults, they are due to the people who see them, rather than those who make them."

While it hasn't been definitely settled yet, Mr. Millarde expects to direct William Russel's first production in the East. Meantime, he is filling in his spare time, reading dozens of books with the hope of discovering a new situation or a thrilling adventure. He reads until three or four A. M. each night. A director's life isn't easy, he declares; but it's enjoyable. In spite of the fact he isn't at all a critical looking sort of person, and, we should judge, always hunts for the best in life, rather than the things that need correcting, we persisted in asking his opinion about various matters—characterization of players other than the star, for instance. We wanted to know why they weren't more carefully worked out.

"There isn't time or space," Mr. Millarde explained easily, "due to the public demand, again, you see, we have to limit our pictures to exactly so many thousand feet of film, and while the director may spend several reels working up a certain character and showing his motives for whatever he does, when the negative reaches the cutting room, all that part is left out, for the simple reason that there isn't room for it in the length of time allowed on the screen."

We left Mr. Millarde with the feeling that we would be much less impatient when we saw apparently obvious faults in the future. He impressed us as being quite sure that things would come out allright in the end, and that it was a dreadful waste of perfectly good energy to be always worrying about the mediocrity of the films.—Marguerite Jones.

Strong Sounds Death Knell of Legitimate : : : :

"I think that the day of the spoken drama is over, and the professional's whole future is in motion pictures." So spoke Eugene Strong from the depths of a huge armchair in his very attractive apartment not far from Times Square, with an inlaid baby grand piano in one corner of the room, luxurious divan, curious cabinets, decorative ars, pottery and tapestries from Greenwich Village filling up the rest of it. We were frankly surprised at this statement. Mr. Strong can lay claim to originality in one direction at least. All the actors we have ever met, who started their careers behind the footlights, and Mr. Strong can qualify with fifteen years experience, have avowed their firm determination of returning to the spoken drama, if not at first opportunity, certainly in the not too far future.

Not so Mr. Strong. He continued: "Nothing would ever induce me to give up picture work to go back on the stage. One of the best known musical comedy producers in New York has been urging me to come to see him every time we've met in the last six months, telling me that I am wasting my time, and so forth and so on, but I most emphatically disagree with him. A few years from now I don't believe there'll be any legitimate shows outside New York City, for the simple reason that they will all have been replaced by picture houses. Why, pictures are only in their infancy. We have merely the first glimmerings of the things that will be done in that line in the future. And through them, the greatest artists, the most lavish sets, the finest natural scenery and the very latest word in costumes and designs can be taken to the most remote and out of the way towns."

"But," we interrupted, "don't you think people will miss hearing the actors' voices too much ever to give them up entirely?"

"They're usually very good things to miss," was the prompt retort, "it's all very well to go to the theatre to hear Julia Marlowe or David Warfield talk, but how many players with voices like theirs does one find in the profession to-day? For my part, I'm usually glad to avoid hearing the actors speak."

We had to admit that we had frequently felt that way ourselves, and then we discovered another hobby of Mr. Strong's, namely, David Wark Griffith.

"I would rather work for him than do anything else I can think of," he exclaimed, his voice testifying to his enthusiastic appreciation of the great director's genius, "there never has been another director who could touch him, and I don't believe that even he has reached his limit yet. After seeing 'Broken Blossoms' I can't imagine anyone's wanting to go to a theatrical production again, and I think Griffith will give us greater pictures still. Also I love the continual novelty of the moving picture work. When you've given the same performance over two hundred times, as I did once, you are so tired of it that you simply hate it, whereas in pictures, you have a chance to try everything, and never the same part twice. When I made 'The Border Legion' it seemed much more like a delightful vacation than any kind of work. I'd rather ride horseback than eat, and we were in the saddle all day sometimes. Really, I don't think the possibilities in pictures can be overestimated, and I'm hoping for a chance to do a great deal in them."

Mr. Strong is tall and dark and all the things that are most to be desired in a movie hero, and he has done some remarkably good work to date. His most recent part is in "The Power of Woman" under the direction of Burton King, which will be released in the near future.

Entry In Independent Field

John P. McCarthy, Formerly with D. W. Griffith, to Produce for Himself

ANOTHER former member of the D. W. Griffith organization has broken away from the routine grind to enter the independent field of feature competition.

He is John P. McCarthy, heading the McCarthy Picture Production organization, now under way with its first special feature, with headquarters at Universal City, California.

Mr. McCarthy is director and supervisor of productions. Henry McCarthy is associate director, and John F. Powers is trustee.

The organization is to put on six specials a year. The first will be a Western of entirely different character than the usual production of that nature. Other stories to follow will run the gamut of diversification.

"Power, clean, character"; these represent the watchword of the McCarthy Picture Productions.

"We are going to evade one of the greatest mistakes of picture production," said Mr. Manager McCarthy, in discussing the new venture. "We recognize that there is story value as apart from picture value. I believe that the story is first. We will add an all-star cast to fit the story. Then will come direction, photography, sets, etc. Each will receive the same careful attention.

"We are going to make pictures which will please the patron seated in the audience. The story which will please without certain tricks in production, so well known to the public, is our aim.

"No one individual can produce a successful production of this character, wherein story and its entertainment value slip up near the 100 per cent mark.

"The McCarthy Picture Production Company is using every member of its carefully chosen organization to bring into fullness these screen conceptions. I propose to have the aid of the author, after the story is written, in order that I may secure his entire knowledge upon the subject he has created into a photoplay. We have Russell Simpson, who attracted instant attention as star of Rex Beach's, "The Brand"; Dorcas Matthews, formerly with Ince; Bob McKim that superlative "bad man," and little Pat Moore, the 4-year-old prodigy, who has scored so heavily in previous productions with notable stars.

"Vic Milner, formerly Wm. S. Hart's cameraman, is cranking for us. Joe Cox, formerly with Fine Arts, is art director; John A. McDonagh is associate director."

Releasing plans will be announced in the near future.

The scenario of Ruth Roland's serial "The Adventures of Ruth" is the work of Gilson Willets

New Subjects Chosen for Metro Trio

Maxwell Karger, Screen Classics, Inc., director general, has selected the starring vehicles for Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and May Allison that will follow respectively "Please Get Married," "Lombardi, Ltd.," and "Fair and Warmer" in which these three stars are now working at the company's big studios on the Pacific coast.

"The Willow Tree" and "Shore Acres" are to be the second and third of Miss Dana's plays produced by Screen Classics, Inc. Bert Lytell is to follow "Lombardi, Ltd." with "Someone in the House," Larry Evans' successful mystery drama which enjoyed a Broadway run. For Miss Allison's second picture Director General Karger has selected "The Walk-Offs," from the pens of Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Farnum Celebrates Birthday on July 4

WILLIAM FARNUM celebrated his birthday on the fourth of July at Santa Catalina Island. The "Islanders" as they call themselves could not see their popular hero and idol go unsung on his natal day, so they had a very novel way of celebrating the eminent William Fox screen star's epochal milestone.

During the day Mr. Farnum and his director, Director General J. Gordon Edwards and the rest of his company were away on location making a scene for his newest super production "Wings of the Morning." During his absence the village trustees of Avalon worked feverishly on the surprise. The famous "Sugar Loaf" rock facing the picturesque harbor, was to be the scene of the spectacle.

At night Mr. Farnum was asked to come down to the village from the hotel at which he was stopping to witness the fireworks display. Never losing his boyish enthusiasm for fireworks, he accepted the invitation with alacrity. More than five thousand people were assembled at various vantage points, and the Cataline Marine Band played many patriotic airs.

The fireworks started and many were the exclamations of pleasure at the beautiful sight. Then there was a lull, and suddenly on the ragged sides of "Sugar Loaf" there blazed out in fireworks of red, white and blue, "Congraulations, William Farnum." A cheer went up from the crowd and the screen star's face turned ruddier than usual. The band played "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and the crowd joined in; then the celebration was over.

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE has begun production of his first Lou Cody feature at Cody's newly finished studio at Glendale, California. The multiple reel feature will detail a series of episodes in the life of a hevamp,, characterized by Cody.

Bessie Barriscale, who has begun a feature of Oriental and European life, the name of which has not been announced, at her own studio in Hollywood under the direction of Howard Hickman, declares that her only form of relaxation from the trials of combining the duties of star and producer, is found in surf-board riding. Miss Barriscale makes week-end trips to Catalina Island where she has become skilled in the art of handling surfboards, and she is willing to give lessons in navigating the peculiar craft to anyone daring enough to try.

Bert Lytell apparently has corralled the visible supply of pulchritude formerly employed in Ziegfeld Follies, for appearance in "Lombardi, Ltd.," the latest Metro play in which he is being starred. Lytell this week called attention to the fact that nearly every mannikin appearing in the show room scene in the picture, was formerly a show girl, and also commented on the fact that whenever any male actor is being sought at the studio, he usually can be found on the "Lombardi" set.

"I wish the Realart Company would send Mary Miles Minter out here to California for her first few pictures," remarked Director William D. Taylor last week at the Morosco studio, where he was finishing the last scenes of "Huckleberry Finn," which completes, for the present, his work on the Paramount-Artcraft program. "But instead of that pleasant prospect, I have to leave this delightful clime for summer in New York. Think of it! The only reward is the anticipation of meeting and directing Mary."

One of the most prodigious workers in the Los Angeles colony is young J. J. Franz, who has just finished directing the third picture starring William Desmond in "Dangerous Waters" at the Jesse D. Hampton studios. Consequently he is resting at Catalina Island this week. After breaking the record in tuna fishing at this famous resort, he will roll up his sleeves and go to work on his next production for Desmond, titled "In A Hollow of The Hills," from one of Bret Hart's most popular stories.

A clever little camouflage stunt (or do you you prefer the word "faking"?) which saved the management a few "bucks" was put on at the Morosco studio by Director William D. Taylor in one of his "Huckleberry Finn" scenes. It was a mean boycott on several hundred extras, as instead of live, flesh and blood girls to represent some of the houris of King Solomon's harem, there was nothing more than cardboard damsels nailed here and there in the set, looking so natural that the property man tried to pinch their checks.

Marguerite Clark has just finished "Luck in Pawn," from the play by Marvin Taylor, which was adapted for the screen by Alice Eyton.

Vivian Martin, Famous Players-Lasky star, is visiting in New York for a few weeks.

May Allison, who in the Metro production of "Fair and Warmer," was called upon to concoct a number of fancy drinks, has offered her own recipes for liquid substitutes since the nation went dry. Among these are:

"Kangaroo Cocktail (hops with a kick)—Near beer with a drop of tobacco sauce.

"Jack Dempsey Punch—Jamaica ginger and hot.

"Willard Fizz (le)—Bevo and sparkling H20 (half and half).

"Rabbit Punch—Lemon extract straight; cracked ice.

"Flivver Cocktail—Gasoline with a raspberry.

"Prohibition Cocktail—Aqua pura, 99 per cent. pure, with a wicked dash of lemon.

"Cocakika—Coke with a few drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia."

The Perfect Horsewoman

Miss Marie Pagano, as she sometimes appears, but when she changes her evening gown for the smartest of riding togs, then is she really familiar to those who know her best. For she is unquestionably one of the most expert horsewomen who has ever appeared in motion pictures. She has doubled for Theda Bara and Alice Brady in instances where only the most skilful of professional riders could carry out the necessary action, and she has given hundreds of demonstrations of her remarkable equestrian ability. She has never seen a horse that she was afraid to mount, and her movements are so easy and her seat so perfect that she is a joy to watch both on and off the screen.

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

SOME time ago the Crown Optical Co., of Rochester decided to quit the manufacture of lenses for projection work. But four former employees of the firm saw the opportunity in the field and promptly organized another company to take over such work. The Projection Optics Company was the result.

William Fouquet, president, has been connected with the mechanical end of lens making for over twenty years.

Mr. Kirchgesser has had the same length of experience in work of fine optics. He is considered as one of the very best men in Rochester on this particular phase of the lens industry.

Mr. William Repp, secretary of the firm, has spent the last fifteen years in fine optics and in supervising this class of work. The fourth member is Mr. Held who has had about five years experience in the manufacture of lenses.

And while speaking of long years of employment we must mention the tablet in the office of Bausch & Lomb. The tablet shows over one hundred and twenty names of men who have worked there for twenty-five years and over. The "king-pinner" has been employed there for forty-eight years.

Some of us would like to know as much about optics as that man must have forgotten.

"Doc" Kellner of B. and L., so we discovered, has picked out a vacation spot on Lake Ontario where there is neither telephone, 'graph, train or mail.

Will the Doctor kindly send us the name of the place?

George Blair of Eastman Kodak is as jovial as ever. He couldn't very well help it with "more business at hand than ever before in the history of the company."

The way he speaks of film in "million foot lots" is hard on one's understander.

While we were in his office he had a call from Lieut. Nathan Oakes of the U. S. Aviation forces who "dropped in" from Washington via the Air-line. Before he entered the Lafayette Escadrille some three years ago, Lieut. Oakes was connected with various departments of the Thomas Ince Studios in California.

Last Week We Met—E. M. Porter

E. M. PORTER—certainly we know him. Met him only yesterday, right in his element—at the sharp end of a Pittsburgh stogey. No, he won't even smoke the imported brand enjoyed by E. S.

Don't get these two men mixed up. Yes, they are brothers, but one spends all day at the factory and the other two hours, usually in the morning.

The one we met yesterday was E. M., the round-faced one—no, he has nothing on his upper lip, at least he keeps it shaved if he has.

That's him—the Simplex General Manager, a fine fellow, always a good word for every one and treats every one right, just the way he would want to have some one hand it to him.

His office? Have you been there, too? All dolled up and everything? Money? You bet it costs money and its real paint too. The plate rail? He calls it a dust catcher—you know half way up the side of the wall sticks out—made for rare China. No, never used. Too bad.

At one time E. M. was in the film exchange business and made a great reputation there. He was associated with some of the biggest men in the industry. Some day he may go back; I know he would like to now, and I further know that he would show the boys a thing or two if he should.

The only reason he got out he says himself was that he was not satisfied with the way his pictures were projected so he thought he would start with the fundamentals of the business and work up again.

Our advice is to stay at the bottom, for he has been going great guns right there. They'll have to be a new bank building put up to take care of the funds if E. M. does not slow down.

Intimate Items About People You Know

Dr. Mees of the Research Laboratory of the E. K. Co. took us to Kodak Park and together with J. I. Crabtree showed us what a complete laboratory they have out there.

Many of the most vital experiments leading to anti-submarine protection were carried out in this laboratory by L. B. Jones of the E. K. Staff.

Over across the other side of Rochester is the works of the Manhattan-Gundlach Optical Co. where a good many projection lenses come from. Mr. Glover of this firm has excellent ideas on the present optical system of the projector. He believes that under present knowledege of optics the objective lens now in use is as good a lens as can be made for the purpose.

Down in Havana the people are as fond of motion pictures and as discriminating in their taste as we are here in the States. On the Paseo del Prado, which is Havana's Broadway, are naturally found the best theatres in town. We learn from a correspondent in Cuba that out of the seven principal theatres on the Paseo del Prado, five are equipped with Motiographs, making use of a total of eight machines.

Seven other "Cines" in other parts of Habana are running their films through the same machine.

Lou Townsend, president of the Rochester Local Union has the reputation of being one of the best informed projectionists in the country. He is "chief" at the beautiful Piccadilly Theatre in that city.

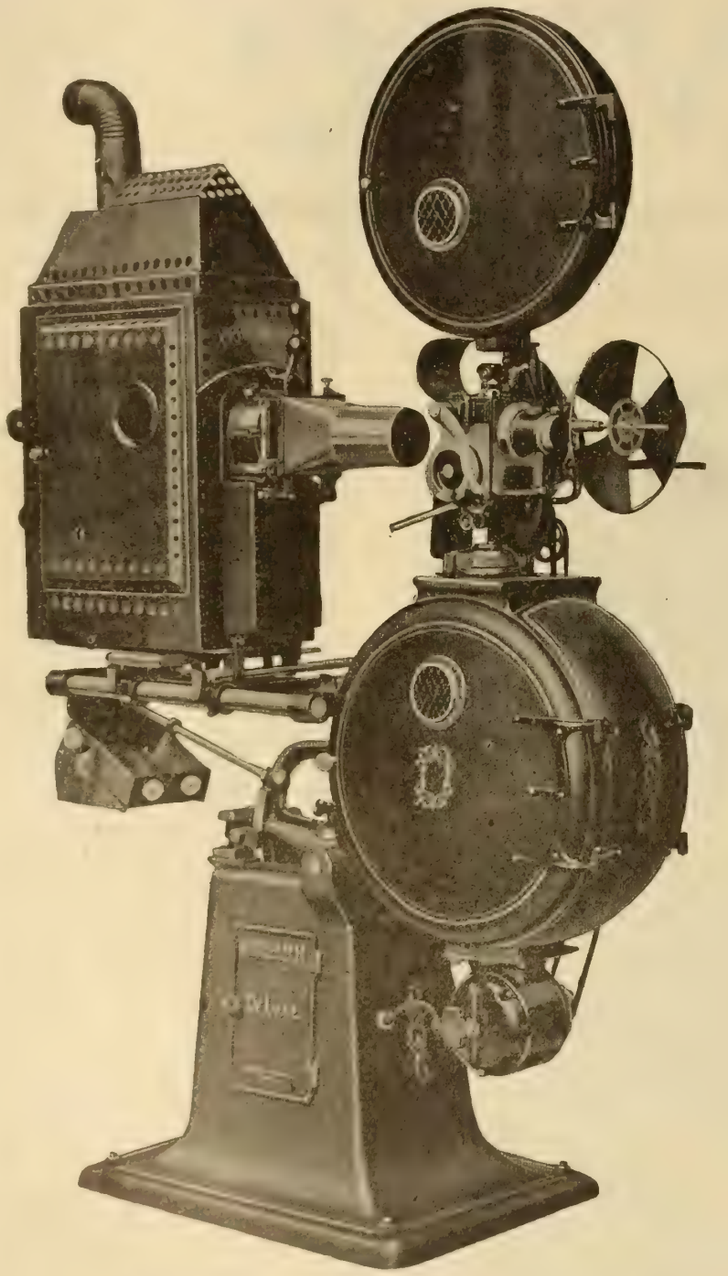
While the hotel strike in Buffalo was bothering the poor traveler who finds it necessary once in a while to lay aside work and eat, it had no effect on the business of the United Projector and Film Company. Both Davidson and Kegley were too busy to eat—and conversely why eat, when business is so good.

As an indication of the scope of the P. and F. is the announcement that it has acquired the entire territory East of the Mrs. Sipp for the Vicot Animatograph. And still growing? Say, does a healthy, husky three-year-old grow!!!

L. E. Davidson, Gen. Mgr. of the above firm, has a wealth of interesting ideas on the future of the educational and industrial film.

Are You Getting Results?

How many times did you change Mechanisms when you installed your new machines, so you would get RESULTS?



Think it over. Probably you did not buy the right projector.

"MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE"

Strand Theatre, San Francisco, writes:

"One of the best improvements we recently made was the installation of two Motiograph De LUXE, latest models. Our projection has been greatly improved. Even our audience have commented on it and since their installation these machines have required very little attention."

Crystal Theatre, D. S. Lampkin, Manager, Hickman, Kentucky, writes:

"Would say that I have been using what I thought was the best machine for the past seven years, but have to change that and say that I am now using the BEST MACHINE. I have only operated the De LUXE about five months, but can say that it is certainly a nice smooth running machine and puts a picture on like I have never seen before."

Another reason why Motiographs were selected:

"Was delighted to see one of the Motiographs at work at the Princess Theatre the other night. The smooth, noiseless operation and steady projection called my attention to it. Am writing to ask if you supply the same satisfactory service with a machine that can be used with the Mazda equipment." A Dubuque, Iowa, Purchaser.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Projectionist's Paradise

You'll Find It In Kansas City, Mo.

HAVE you visited the projection room of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, Mo.? If not, you should. It is a treat to look into this room and see the details of equipment as well as the comforts and conveniences supplied to the projectionist. Nothing has been forgotten. There is a battery of three projectors, a special ventilating system, a place to smoke fitted up with comfortable wicker chairs, toilet facilities, in fact everything conceivable which makes for comfort and which in turn will make the result on the screen as near one hundred per cent as is humanly possible.

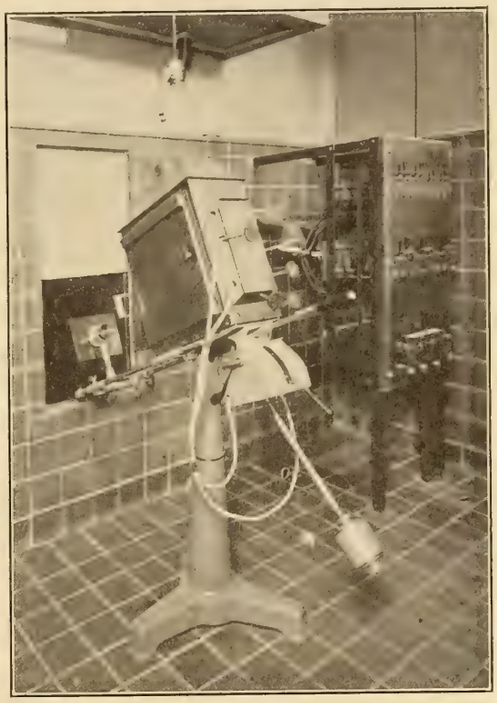
Contrary to custom, Mr. Newman went further than most. He turned the equipment of the projection room over to one man, Mr. Edwin S. Porter, who knows what a projection room should be and who went ahead and designed special wiring, panel boards, rheostats, desolving devices, speed indicators and other devices which are necessary in up-to-date theatre equipment.

Mr. Newman's architect, Mr. H. A. Drake, and Mr. Porter, as well as Mr. Newman himself, deserve the congratulations of the entire industry. Together they have planted another milestone in the fight for better projection equipment, for they have realized that it is the picture on the screen which is sold to the public and that this cannot be made perfect unless the projectionist is properly equipped and given surroundings which will inspire him to exert every effort to give the people what they pay for—a perfect picture on the screen.

Unfortunately the location of the projection room had been decided upon before Mr. Porter was called in so that he was given certain conditions with which he had to work rather than being able to consult with the architect as to the location of the room. This should have been placed so as to have had a more nearly horizontal line of throw, which would have reduced the optical problems which had to be solved in order to give the proper results.

The projection room occupies a space 31 feet long, 9½ feet wide, with a ceiling 11 feet high. In addition there is a special rewind room, 6 feet square.

Three type "S" Simplex projectors are seen,



Slide projector and switchboard beyond

each of them finished in battleship gray, with nickel trimmings, the arc lamps of which are connected with specially constructed arc controls. All service wiring is concealed beneath the tiled floor and brought out under and through the pedestal stands to the machine switches, thus doing away with the unsightly wires which usually prevail in ordinary installations. This feature can be seen in the accompanying photographs.

At each machine is located a separate panel upon which is mounted the rheostat control, ammeter, voltmeter and speedometer. The rheostats for each machine are located in a specially designed rheostat gallery in the ceiling of the projection room, thus eliminating heat and giving an unobstructed floor space to the entire room. These rheostats are specially constructed and are of the multiple 120-ampere type, containing one 50-ampere stop, and seven 10-ampere stops. Beneath each observation port are located the signal boards, which connect with the orchestra leader and stage manager, respectively, and furnish a ready means of intercommunication at all times.

A feature of the projection room is the specially constructed dissovling devices which are attached to the lamphouse hood of each projector and are operated by a main lever, the mechanism of which is so arranged as to permit the working out of any three separate combinations of "fade-ins" for as many machines.

The drop lights at each machine are hung from special tension "wind-up" pulleys and may be pulled down or raised to any required position at will, much in the same manner as the ordinary window shade. Lamp shades are so arranged on these pilot lamps as to prevent the reflection of any light through the projector or lookout ports. Six large windows occupy the rear wall of the projection room, each of them fitted with patented operating devices and equipped with opaque window shades. Besides the ventilation provided for through means of doors and windows, a 16-inch vent is located directly over the center machine. Two 36-inch paddle-type ceiling fans are also provided for keeping the air in the room from stagnating.

Two special machines which were worked out at the Simplex factory are the counter-weighted combination spotlight and curtain dissolving flood and stereopticon. In order to maintain uniformity in the room, both of these interesting pieces of necessary equipment employ the regular Simplex pedestal stand and type "S" lamps and lamphouses. Both are finished in battleship gray, with nickel trimmings to match the projectors.

The special spotlight is fitted with a specially constructed iris diaphragm which is 8 inches in diameter. By operating this diaphragm, which works on lever principles, it is possible to procure any sized spot instantaneously and be assured at all times of a perfectly formed circular spot of light. Built out from this diaphragm is a metal box containing the curtain dissolve which operates two 8 x 10 pieces of graduated clouded mica, one upper and the other the lower half, both being operated toward one another by means of a revolving handle within easy reach. With this curtain dissolve it is possible to flood either the stage setting or the orchestra with any sized flood without resorting to various size masks. The dissolving apparatus being designed to permit of the gradual flooding of the stage setting while the house lights are being correspondingly dimmed, thus producing a beautiful and impressive lighting effect.

A color frame is built in the spotlight opening on the front wall of the room, in which the various color frames are operated in such a way as to permit numberless tints of color schemes to be worked.

A feature of both this spotlight and special stereopticon is the system of counter-balancing which has been employed and which allows the machine to be pitched at any angle without recourse to the usual loosening and tightening of set screws to gain this end.

Instead of the usual swinging table a special lamphouse base was designed which is attached to the upper part of the pedestal, being pinned across in order to allow for the pitching of the lamphouse. To one side of the lamphouse base is located the balancing arm which extends downward and on the end of which are placed the counter-weights.

On the reverse side of the pedestal is located the operating clamps which grips the quadrant base beneath the lamphouse bracket. This clamp is a highly polished handle about 6 inches long providing for a generous grip and is so constructed that when loosened and the lamphouse is pitched to the desired angle, it will, as soon as released, drop of its own weight and lock the entire spotlight into the required position, leaving the user free to use both hands for the operation of color effects and spot manipulation. Ball bearings are employed for swinging both the spotlight and stereopticon on their pedestals and also in between the collars of the locking clamp.

The stereopticon, which is built along the same lines as is the spotlight as regards pedestal, lamphouse and operating arrangements, contains a very original feature. This is in the form of a half size lens which is mounted upon a carrier operating upon two 3-foot long nickeled tracks. This lens is provided with a third lens combination which enables the user to obtain any size of picture by simply running the lens carriage backward or forward upon the tracks without in any way interfering with the definition or focus of the stereopticon picture. This stereopticon is used for projecting slides and various odd-shaped spots and color schemes upon the stage setting during the course of the performance.

In the rewinding room which is located at one end of the projection room is located a specially constructed and designed motor automatic control rewind which rewinds the film in an enclosed casing, and which is provided with a signal and stopping device which automatically stops the rewind in case of film breakage or other causes and notifies the projectionists of this fact at the same time.

Simplex type "S" fully equipped

The switchboard is unique in that it is built 3 feet out from the front wall, enabling the electrician to walk behind it in order to put in the fuses, the blocks for which are located in the rear, giving the entire front of board over for the switches. On this board are located a switch for each machine in the room, together with small switches for operating the arc control motors and the main service switch which is rated for 500 amperes. A special magnetically operated remote control panel is also located in the projection room which enables the projectionist in case of emergency to snap on every house light in the theatre at one touch.

Outside of the projection room are located two balconies which were provided for the use of the projectionists during their rest periods and are also used as smoking rooms. In these balconies are placed luxurious easy chairs and smoking sets, the whole plan being to cater to the comfort of the men. These balconies are also used by visitors and sightseers who happen to be viewing the theatre.

In Mr. Newman's office is located a branch line speedometer, which is mounted over the desk and is connected with the projection room speedometer, which enables Mr. Newman to tell at a glance at what speed the pictures are being shown. A fully equipped and heavily built galvanized iron vault or cabinet is located at one end of the projection room for the storing of film. At the other end is located a luxuriously finished and up-to-date lavatory and washroom for the projectionists.

The color scheme of the upper walls of the projection room is French gray, while the lower half of the walls and floor is built of Indian red tiling.

The projection room crew works under the direction of Mr. Russell R. Ransdell, a projectionist of much experience, who is also supervising projection engineer for the Newman circuit of theatres.

Downstairs in the main theatre building is located another fully equipped theatre seating approximately two hundred. In here is seen another completely equipped projection room containing two type "S" Simplex projectors, and here, as in every other part of the Newman theatre, the color schemes and other details have been followed out with the utmost faithfulness. This little theatre was constructed for use by societies and social gatherings for private theatre parties, many demands in the past having been made upon Mr. Newman for the buying out of some particular performance by various organizations. In planning this little theatre for this purpose the interference of performances in the larger house was eliminated.

The entire Newman theatre is now considered the show place of the country, and both Mr. Newman and those who made possible the many features contained in the projection room, which are but poorly described in this article, are to be congratulated. No attempt has been made here to describe the beauties of the architecture or decorations of the house, but to the movie pilgrim or the projectionist who is in quest of something new and progressive, and to those who are interested in the scientific projection of the world's masterpieces, we would say that no better time could be spent than in inspecting the room which today stands as a tribute to the progressiveness of a real manager and a far-seeing and intelligent projection and technical expert.

The Genco Set

THE General Gas Electric Company of Hanover, Pa., is now marketing several types of gas engine driven generators for motion picture work, varying from the 1 k. w. 32 volt set to the 5 k. w. machine for 60 and 110 volts, the latter design being only in process of development at the present time.

The 1 k. w. 32 volt outfit can be used with small sized motion picture machines where the illuminant is a Mazda lamp.

For arc projectors there is a 3 k. w. set either for 60 or 110 volts. This machine which is illustrated here has been but recently developed.

The installation of the Genco Set is very simple and does not require highly specialized experts to carry out. The outfit comes packed in two parts —Batteries in one and Generator in other. The battery cells are fully charged and ready to be connected to each other, it only being necessary to set the cells on a shelf and connecting them to instrument board.

It is preferable, though it is not necessary to build a concrete foundation. A good solid floor will be ample support for the outfit. This portion of the outfit is in one unit shipped with base bolted to sills of crate. Unfasten these bolts and set outfit where it is to be and bolt down with same bolts used in crating, connect all wires as per instructions with outfit, fill fuel tank, press starting button and you will have the outfit running.

In operation the Genco Light Plant is simplicity itself. The engine is a self-starter and everything connected with its operation is so arranged as to eliminate the need of attention.

Pressing a button on the instrument board takes the current from the battery and causes the generator to act as a motor, which spins the engine until it begins to run—when engine attains proper speed it then drives generator and charges the battery.

When battery is fully charged the engine stops automatically without further attention till it is again desired to start it.

It will be seen that the Genco Light is very easy to start and needs no attention while running. There is nothing complicated, nor confusing to watch, no heavy cranking, nor any operation requiring undue strength or skill.

The engine used in the Genco Light Plant is the result of years of experiments and study in attaining an engine adapted to give just the results the Genco Light supplies.

The engine is of a vertical, one cylinder, 4 cycle, valve-in-head type, 3¼ inch bore by 3 inch stroke; everything inclosed so no moving parts are exposed, yet all vital parts are easily accessible —the entire engine can be dismantled in just a few moments by simply removing cylinder cap and crank case side plate which exposes to view every internal part. The engine can be stopped, taken apart just as shown in picture, put together and running again in 45 minutes. The crank shaft is supported in extra long bearings. The main crank bearings are 1½ by 3 inches, while the connecting rod bearing is also extra long.

The crank shaft is counter balanced with its weights forged intergral with the shaft. The disc to which the fly wheel is bolted is also an integral part of the crank shaft. All these factors insure long life to engine, reduce vibration to a minimum and insure a maximum of power from every drop of fuel used.

The cam shaft is large and massive in proportion and is an integral piece, cams ground to shape and hardened—no slipping of keys or timing troubles possible in the Genco Light cam shaft.

The half time gears (to in number) have one inch face and are cut in helical form to insure quietness in operation and long wearing qualities.

The connecting rod is of extra length, more than three times the stroke. This construction insures smooth running efficiency and minimizes vibration.

The cylinder is constructed after our own special design with water jacket for cooling and with special patented oil channel, which enables us to employ the economical splash system of lubrication and reach every moving part inside the engine with the highest possible efficiency. The oil consumption of the engine is very low. If proper oil is used and correct oil level maintained a gallon of lubricating oil will last over six months.

The cylinder is bolted to the crank case—the valves are also inclosed in a cap which bolts on the cylinder. This construction and manner in which we secure lubrication is an insurance against valve trouble due to warping or sticking of valve stems. Both intake and exhaust valves are very large—1¼ inches in diameter. In fact, all moving parts are enclosed and run in a constant bath of oil which insures long wear and a maximum of power.

The reliable Thermo-Siphon water circulation system of cooling is used—the water jacket being of spacious dimensions, radiator of the cellular type, is bolted direct to cylinder insuring highest efficiency. A two-blade fan enclosed by guard, driven by belt direct from crank shaft, augments the efficiency of the system. This provides all the advantages of water cooling.

Jump spark ignition is used in connection with coil and closed circuit sparkling device. This is recognized as being most reliable without being wasteful in current. The timer is driven from the end of the cam shaft, which insures absolute precision in ignition performance.

The carburetor used on the Genco Light engine is of the Venturi type, their own exclusive design. It is equipped with adjusting handle, which mixes fuel properly for starting and gives proper adjustment for any fuel—kerosene, gasoline or alcohol. It is operated like a throttle, the handle being movable in an arc around a quadrant disc which is equipped with retaining notches—movement from one notch to another effects the proper internal adjustment for rich or lean mixtures for starting or to burn any fuel without any other further adjustments. This throttle is also used to stop engine when desired. Moving it to "stop" side shuts off fuel and engine is stopped without other attention. Setting lever on "start" puts it in operation again.

The generator of the Genco Light is of the slow speed type, 32 volt, normal speed of 1150 r.p.m. high conductive carbon brushes being used.

The connection between engine and generator is direct through universal joint from crank shaft of engine. Both engine and generator are mounted on same base, which insures perfect alignment and minimizes friction.

The Generator acts as a governor for the speed of engine when engine is used for mechanical power from the pulley and the power is always even and dependable.

The instrument board is bolted to top of generator. All wiring is at the rear and enclosed. This board is made of slate which is a material approved by fire underwriters. Panel Board is equipped with ampere hour meter, which shows at all times amount of current in battery and condition of charging while outfits is running. There is also a bi-pole switch of approved design connecting the storage battery to the Genco Light Plant. The switch which connects battery to generator also controls current for ignition system.

The ampere hour meter is so arranged in conjunction with an automatic cut out that when battery is fully charged the registering hand touches a pin and disconnects engine ignition and stops engine.

This eliminates all need for attention after engine is started, as the outfit stops itself when battery is charged to proper capacity. Both house circuit and ignition circuit are equipped with fuses.

Letter from Meade, of Missouri

M. F. MEADE of Newburg, Mo., writes: "We are building a new theater with a seating capacity of 400. Can successful projection be secured upon a whitewashed screen placed upon the wall, that is, can the wall be whitewashed for a space the size of the screen and surrounded with a black border? I hold that it cannot be done, while the builder says it can."

Reply: Sorry that we must differ with you and take sides with the builder.

Of course its success would depend upon the condition of the wall before it was painted and upon the angle of projection. With "straight-away" projection a whitewashed or calsomined surface on a smooth wall would give you an excellent screen. If rightfully applied under these conditions a screen of this description should prove equal to many of the patented screens now on the market.

In case your machine is set higher than the screen (as most of them are) you would get much better results in every way by using either a treated muslin screen or one of the many patented surfaces on the market. We believe, too, that the treated surface of a muslin screen will last longer than a calsomined surface applied to a back wall, that is, it will need re-surfacing and freshening less often.

There is another factor that affects the kind of screen besides the angle of projection. This is the shape of the house. If yours is long and narrow, one surface should be used, while a theater that is shallow and wide must use another surface in order that the seats at the sides of the house receive a reflection that is without distortion.

In your letter you haven't given enough details to enable us to help you further but if these are supplied we will go deeper into the subject.

Butcher and Sons Get Rights of Williamson

MESSRS. W. BUTCHER & SONS, LTD., of London, England, who have held a very prominent position in the kinematograph apparatus world, have entered into an arrangement by which they have secured the sole distributing rights throughout the world of the manufactures of the Williamson Kinematograph Co., Ltd. Messrs. W. Butcher & Sons, Ltd., interests are not only in the selling organization, for they now have some financial interests in the Williamson Kinematograph Co., Lt., W. F. Butcher, the managing director of W. Butcher & Sons, Ltd., having joined the Board of Directors of the Williamson Co.

Colin Williamson, who has a unique knowledge of Kinematograph Apparatus, will now be able to devote his entire energies to the manufacturing end of the business, and the production of many interesting novelties both in the "taking" and "projecting" side of the business can soon be looked for.

Messrs. W. Butcher & Sons, Ltd., have purchased the lease of the Williamson Co.'s premises at 28 Denmark Street, using it as their West End Branch under the management of N. E. Barber (for some years Mr. Williamson's assistant manager). The Denmark Street premises will be fully equipped with show room, projector demonstration room, stores and repair shop.

How a Dreamer Realized His Vision

The pot is then taken from the cooling furnace and broken up. The resulting chunks of glass are examined, and those showing striae or other defects are thrown out. The apparently good pieces are sent into the pressing plant, where they are molded into blocks of regular shape in the small pressing furnaces. They are then ground and polished and inspected again for striae under parallel light, produced by specially designed optical instruments. The glass which passes this final inspection as usable is cut to the size and weight desired and repressed in the pressing furnaces into the approximate form in which it is to be used.

The culminating processes in the manufacture of glass for ophthalmic lenses are still more spectacular. The pot, after being taken from the melting furnace, is not allowed to cool but is suspended from an overhead track and hurriedly conveyed to a position above a large, iron casting table. On to this table the molten mass is poured in front of the huge iron roller, which is set in motion and the glass rolled into a perfectly even, flat sheet.

This glowing sheet is at once projected into the annealing oven, or "traveling lehr," as it is called, where it is slowly advanced into zones of constantly lowered temperature. The oven is approximately 100 feet long, and the sheet of glass requires about six hours to pass through it, the temperature ranging from approximately 1,200 deg. F. to room temperature in the process. Annealing is the final process for all optical glass and is a very important to its physical usefulness. In that process of gradual cooling under carefully regulated temperatures the molecular strain of the glass is relieved and the liability to breakage in future handling greatly lessened.

To quote Major Wright in conclusion: "The path leading to high precision is straight and narrow, and constant vigilance is required not to deviate from it. Optical glass is a thing of high precision."

This is another path which American industry has traveled, thanks to the ambitions of John J. Bausch and the unfaltering determination of his son to see them realized. And now as the father approaches his 90th birthday, he beholds—what he hardly dared dream of when he started his doubtful venture 66 years ago—America optically freed from the last trace of European dominance.

Boylan Even-Tension Reel

is a combination reel and tension take-up device which absolutely eliminates all take-up troubles.

It requires no attention, and is positively automatic and fool-proof.

It will save you trouble and money.

Gentlemen:

We wish to take this opportunity to thank you for placing the (Boylan Even Tension Reel) on the market which I am sure is the best remedy for loss of lower loop, checked sprocket holes, undercut sprockets.

Since using the reels I have not had a single stop, and I firmly believe that in the near future they will be a part of the equipment of every Theatre in the Country. The reels are doing all you promised for it.

Yours respectfully,

Praises United and Famous Players

P. A. WILLS, of Champaign, Ill., writes:

Dear Sir: Please enroll my name in the N. A. M. L. I have been returning my films without mis-frames and punch-holes for several months, although at one time I did have radical views in regard to a change-over signal. At one time I thought it necessary to have sixteen small marks in one corner of my picture in order to change over. I then decided I could do with only four marks, but after seeing pictures projected in theatres where no punch-marks were used I decided I could break away from my set idea. I now write down the description of the scene I am to change on, and in case there is no action in the picture, and also no company trade-mark to change on, I cement a piece of clear film (some with emulsion removed) the width of the film and about three-sixteenths inch in length. This makes it a trifle less than a splice and does not mar the film in any way. When I hear the click I can then start my other machine. I have two Simplex machines with two Mercury rectifiers, and am able to pull off some fairly good change-overs.

Another thing I would like to know is why the operators (?) in Chicago and other first-run houses let their machines get in such a condition that the machines make a heavy scratch, or even scratches, on new film. We run the Pathe News at ten days old and there is always from one to three very heavy marks on this. We ran "Destiny" nine days old, and it had about four or five heavy scratches on it. Two of the reels having cut-outs about every foot and sometimes oftener. Possibly this had been an "office-copy" and had been run three or four months to exhibitors at the exchange, but nevertheless we had to suffer as people complained about the characters "jumping" around so much.

And as to punch-holes, they seem to be put in by the operators (?) in the first-run houses, for in the picture "Destiny" there were four at the end of each reel. This picture having been out only nine days certainly must have been punched up in some first-run house. I removed these and made a notation on a slip, which I put in the film box. There is only one company, the United Pictures, that seems to be trying for the betterment of their service. In each film can they ship out is a slip with the title of the picture, who inspected it, and a notice for the manager to return it with the projectionist's complaint on the reverse side. I am enclosing one so that you may see that one company is really trying to improve the condition of its films. After three or four complaints our prints came in A-1 condition.

Of course credit must be given to the Famous Players for their cue-sheets for the projectionist, as they should aid in keeping down the numerous punch-holes in their films, but only one company so far as issued such a sheet. I think I have written enough for one time and will not need to write again after torturing others with my troubles.

Reply: Of course there are several ways—all due to carelessness—by which film becomes badly scratched, so that unless your particular reels could be traced back beyond the exchanges it would be a difficult matter to attempt to locate the culprit.

As for Chicago, it will be necessary for them to answer themselves, although it would not be quite right to put the blame on the "operators (?)" there in a general way. It take only one improperly adjusted and unexamined machine to put a film from the "first-run" class to the kind you evidently get.

Where there are but a few exchanges now looking to better service there used to be none. They are improving every month and next year by this time exchanges of the principal producing companies should be in the A1 class.

Write us again. Once is never enough.

Notes of the Unions

Los Angeles Comes Back

WE might term it that our last corn has been tramped upon, and our fighting blood is up. It's a cinch we do not deliberately go hunting for trouble, but only when some wild globe-trotting, free lance operator gives Los Angeles such a nice write-up in this technical section. And never having heard, seen, or dreamed of this person before in our lives and having never read any books written by this person, on picture making, projection, or anything you want to know, we do not take any stock in his articles and we don't want you to, inasmuch as this party is unknown to the members of local 150 and if this party carries an I. A. card, why didn't he make himself known in the right way? Instead he waits until he leaves, then toots his horn, tries to tell us how to run an organization. If he's so clever, why didn't he stick around and give us some pointers. Nevertheless we need no help from such.

This person states that he worked at the Lasky studio here merely to get dope on picture making. I believe he said he worked ten days in their employ. There's hardly any danger of this person giving away any details in picture making, so don't worry Jesse L.

Time was when the projectionist had a hard row to hoe. Times have changed somewhat and by perseverence and "stick-to-it-iveness," we have practically won out. A few years back our local numbered some twenty; today we have nearly one hundred and we can justly say that these men are as capable, as energetic, as willing to better working conditions and projection as any lot of men that ever had their names affixed on the roster of any local.

Mr. Goldie states that he saw good, bad and rotten projection here. Not accepting this person's authority on the matter we will state that from persons of authority we have projection of high standard, as proven heretofore when some of the world's foremost producers, whose word cannot be questioned on projection and whose eyes are always open for something new in this line, have personally selected some of our men to take charge of his or their masterpiece. Rather funny, isn't it?

Now while we are on the subject of projection why is it we never see anything in this section regarding Simplexes out of focus and with quivers. We might not have the best projection in the world and we may be so called scrubs, but we are not blind, let us hope. This is not a new one on a few of our sister locals. If it's not new, why has not someone said something about it? Afraid?

Our candid opinion is that the machines of today are a bunch of junk. Why don't these manufacturers get busy and build a machine? Can you show anyone any advanced idea in the Powers, Motiograph, Simplex or Baird? No! They insist upon cramping as much machinery in the least amount of space as possible. Take the lamphouse, for instance, and with the exception of the Baird they are too frail in construction and will not stand the high amperage necessary to the good projection of the great majority of pictures today. We feel we are speaking the truth in these matters and hope to see the day when machines will be built, not merely thrown together. But after all what's the use of yelling; about all the compensation will be a sore throat.

Sincerely yours,

Criticism of Film Cases

F. M. GREENE of Wonderland theatre, Clinton, Ind., says: "After reading the issue of the News (June 28th) as I always do upon its arrival, I noticed that the Projection Department has more in it this time concerning the N. A. M. L. than usual. Now boys, I will be with you on anything that will make the Exchanges come through with better service for the operator, but I don't see exactly where this work will have any effect on them. My idea of it is that it will make a lot more of lazy and dilatory inspectors at the exchanges than there are now. If a film is returned with a N. A. M. L. label inside the case, the inspector being in a hurry to get the work done will slight that film thinking that it has been gone over enough.

"I have a pair of Simplexes with type 'S' lamps, and a Westinghouse rectifier. The machines are 1918 models. This town has 13,000 population and this theatre is the largest in town. The house is running the largest and latest pictures in town and the condition the film comes in sometimes would disgust the best Anti-Misframe projectionist in the League.

"In Mr. Ben A. Dyers' letter, he says that Fox and Metro send their film on very bad spools. Well, Texas is not the only state that has to put up with that kind of work. I don't suppose he ever used anything from the Indianapolis office. I run Metro also but it comes from the Chicago office in very good shape. I also note that Mr. Edward Large does not have a very good opinion of the Fox Exchange, and I would like to hear from any projectionists who can say much for their inspection and condition of reels under shipment.

"The letter on boys inspecting film in the exchanges sure has my approval when it comes to putting it to a stop. But what I say is to get about half of those giggling girls out of there at the same time and put men and women in their places. And it may be a good idea to have a law passed at the same time to stop any boy from operating a picture machine. I know of a theatre in a small town, that runs pictures before they are shown in some cities and they have two boys, one ten and the other thirteen years of age, doing the projecting and have been doing it for a year. These are the kind of projectionists in my opinion that do the damage to the film.

"The other day I received a two reel comedy from a certain company (I guess you can guess who it was) and besides the four misframes I took out, the film was patched backward and the sprocket rode for a little way. I wrote a note stating the condition the film was in when I received it and put it in the returning case. The next day or two a letter came back to the boss stating that what I wrote in the note was untrue and that the film had been inspected by the Chief Inspector of the Exchange. Now can you imagine that?

"You may think by this letter that I am one of the worst kind of projectionists, one of those that enjoy making howls about things. But everything that is in this letter is just part of my actual experience with film from certain companies. I try very hard to do my part in the way of keeping film troubles down but I have been trying for over two years and it doesn't seem as though any one is with me. But my idea of putting the Anti-Misframe label in the case would be to send a duplicate to the Exchange Manager by mail, and to use Mr. Large's idea of the envelope only instead of putting it in the case, mail them with the label to the Manager.

"Another thing that helps to keep film in the worst kind of shape is the bad cases some companies use. I have received an eight reel picture many a time in a common five reel telescope case. And they were pushed in it so tight that one could hardly get them out. Today I have here a two reel case that I had to pry the sides in order to squeeze the edge of the film and break out sprocket holes. The cases that are lined with fiber are soon scratched up by the reels and the

PROJECT-A-LITE

The Project-A-Lite Transformer is absolutely dependable for Motion Picture Projection purposes. It is accurate in its performance and reliable in its service. Insures positive regulation of amperage. The Project-A-Lite is now being used with Powers, Simplex and Motiograph projectors and is giving real satisfaction. One Transformer is sufficient for two motion picture machines. Takes proper care of voltage ranges of from 90 to 130 volts and delivers other 20 or 30 amperes, at 30 volts on the secondary side.

The Project-A-Lite Adapter is the newest and best adapter on the market today. We say it with confidence. It is the only one that can be adapted to your old lamp-house and give you satisfactory results. All adjustments of the lamp are made just like the carbons were adjusted to position, use the same handles for the same purpose. Costs less and works better than others. Success Stories—No. 1

ONE of the most successful showmen in the country is S. Z. Poli, with eleven big houses. He knows how to attract people to his theatre. He knows that just as the majority of merchants must depend on their show windows, the exhibitor must make his Front and Lobby Display do most of his advertising.

What S. Z. Poli, of the Famous POLI CIRCUIT, says about Menger, Ring & Weinstein Frames

"The frames you installed in my POLI Theatre in Bridgeport please me very much. They present A RADICAL DEPARTURE FROM THE STEREOTYPED STYLE, and they combine the artistic with the practical side of things. PROGRESS IS THE KEYNOTE OF ANY SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS, and YOUR LOBBY FRAMES CERTAINLY REFLECT THE MODERN NOTE. In a word, the frames are a distinct credit to your firm."

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

Shea's Hippodrome, an Institution of Musical Art

H. B. FRANKLIN, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., has recently issued the following statement:

"A very important thing that helps one to forget the heat at the Hippodrome is the delightfully refreshing music program given by Director Alfred Moulton and his company of virtuosi. During the summer months at concert periods, one seldom finds heavy, classical numbers on the program. Instead there are the light musical comedy selections, the popular songs, and the rollicking instrumental solos. During warm weather few patrons care to sit through a rendition of a Moonlight Sonata or a Goldmark symphony. This kind of music doesn't help that uncomfortable feeling under the collar one bit. "Au contraire" when the orchestra strikes up a stirring Sousa march, or a Victor Herbert selection, it helps a lot in combating the work of old King Sol. The coming of summer never means the coming of a slump in business at Shea's Hippodrome, because Mr. Franklin has found the secret of good business."

Mr. Franklin's musical policy is not only a perfect one, but also "human." We said "human" because there is no greater torture for an audience as being forced to listen to long symphonic instrumental manipulations, of a sweltering bunch of musicians, blowing and pounding their energies into hot air. It is ridiculous to believe that a summer audience will endure such tortures for an indefinite period.

Have all the exhibitors adopted Mr. Franklin's policy? No! We know many exhibitors who are discharging their musicians during summer months, expecting a slump in business, as Mr. Franklin expresses it. In our estimation they are not expecting the slump, but inviting it. Any exhibitor who believes that the summer months are the cause of diminishing box-office receipts is riding on a wooden bridge with putrified pillars.

"Reduction in volume of advertising," "discharging of orchestras," and in fact, any money saving device during the summer months is a clear demonstration on the part of the exhibitor, that he expects a so-called slump in business, and his peculiar action of continually reducing his force means telling his neighbors in an unmistakable manner "Stay home, I am not expecting you."

Men have conquered the earth, the ocean, the air. Why submit in this instance. Mr. Exhibitor, you are the same "human" being as your patrons. You know what does you good on a hot summer's day. Why not try and give your audience something that would also please you. Take a back seat in your house on a hot day, and make it your business to find out what is annoying you. Transfer your findings into plain English and transmit them to your patrons in big letters, as being abolished and remedied. Then go to your box-office and get paid for your invention.

Mr. Franklin, we admire your excellent knowledge of showmanship. It is a credit to present day motion picture exhibition.—THE EDITORS.

Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Dear Old Pal of Mine," waltz by Lieut. Gitz Rice. The song made famous by John McCormack. (G. Ricordi & Co.)

3—"Nobody Ever," by Hugo Frey. A new song fox-trot by the composer of "Havanola," "Mary," etc. (T. B. Harms.)

4—"I'll Say She Does," by De Sylva, Kahn and Jolson. Al Jolson's song hit in "Sinbad" at the Winter Garden, New York. (J. H. Remick.)

5—"I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles," by Krenbovin and Kellette. A beautiful and melodious waltz. (J. H. Remick.)

6—"Tears of Arabs," by Lee David. A one-step, intermezzo of fire and melody. (B. D. Nice & Co.)

7—"Roses of Picardy," by Haydn Wood. This is the great ballad featured by John McCormack in all of his concerts. The cornet solo arrangement is excellent for band concerts. (Chappell & Co.)

8—The "B-I" step, a humorism, by Montague Ewing. A number of exceptional musical merits, arranged for orchestra and band. (Edward Schuberth.)

9—"Western Rodio," by Minot. A typical western characteristic portraying a western riding contest, as its name suggests. (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"Scintillations," by Lucius Hosmer. A sparkling number, as its title suggests. (Oliver Ditson.)

11—"Flirty Flirts," a fascinating intermezzo rubato, by the well known musician and composer, Sol P. Levy. A number most suitable for light society dramas, or garden or reception scenes. (Belwin, Inc.)

Ingenious Trap Effects Bring Cartoons to Life

PROBABLY the queerest musical score ever devised has been prepared in conjunction with the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon production released by William Fox. It is really a "sound sheet," since it applies to noises rather than to music. It has been developed for Mr. Fox by Max H. Manne, trap-drummer at the Rivoli.

Set thus to fitting "music," the cartoons actually come to life. For after long experiment Mr. Manne has created scores of strange "traps" capable of giving every sound imaginable. The idea on which he has worked is that the ear as well as the eye should register the action of these funny creations of the screen. That he has succeeded is evidenced by the fact that the Fox Mutt and Jeff pictures are now the great hit at the Rivoli.

"It was long ago proved," says Mr. Manne, "that a play with living actors is made a hundred per cent more effective if accompanied by adequate music having a bearing on the scenes. Why, then, I wondered, should not the same apply to the Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies? That it does apply has been amply demonstrated since I have perfected the necessary traps—" And Mr. Manne pointed to the weird assortment that surrounded him in the orchestra pit.

Mr. Manne virtually makes Mutt and Jeff live and talk! There is not a sound, human or other, that he cannot produce from the amazing medley of traps he has invented. He has a laugh-making contraption to acompany every motion.

dust and scraps of paper from the side of the case is all over the reels when they arrive and if it is not cleaned off your machine is full of it. Film should be shipped in separate containers but not half the exchanges do this.

"The Pathe Exchange of Indianapolis has a very bad habit of stuffing the case full with advance paper with each shipment. There is a law against this and I for one think it should be enforced.

"I want to hear from more of the Projectionists on some of these subjects and help speed the time when all film service of the operator will be 100% better.

Reply: Any Exchange Manager who would permit an inspector to let a film go through without a thorough inspection even because it carries an N. A. M. L. Label is no manager. Although conditions seem to show that there are men holding down such positions in exchanges, yet their number will decrease as their methods are discovered by others "higher up." In Exchanges where the inspecting is well done (yes, there are a few of them) the managers are acquainted with the N. A. M. L. and the reasons for its existence. They know that the League members are doing the work merely for their own and brother projectionist's good.

Film is sent out from Exchanges in poor condition when it is thought that the man who runs it will overlook the torn sprocket holes, misframes, and the other imperfections. As soon as the League becomes large enough so that a film released in poor condition brings a flood of objections, the Exchange doing work of this kind will be brought up to the required standard.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Pictures Reviewed in Advance on This Page Each Week

"The Fall of Babylon"

(D. W. Griffith Production)

THE spectacular Griffith has returned. The man who made himself supreme in screen art with such stupendous undertakings as "The Birth of a Nation," and "Intolerance," and who has made the motion picture rank with the highest arts through his "Broken Blossoms" has turned to his second spectacular achievement for his newest production. "The Fall of Babylon" will be remembered as the Babylonian episode in "Intolerance" and of the four distinct pictures the fall of the ancient city stands unique as the biggest thing of its kind ever conceived. And now it comes to us amplified into a single picture.

When one considers the time that has elapsed between the showing of "Intolerance" and "The Fall of Babylon" the thought strikes home that nothing has been achieved to cope with the spectacle in the massiveness of the scenes and the imagination used to conceive them. Thus Mr. Griffith proves himself the foremost artists of the screen. In its original shape the Babylonian episode was trimmed considerably to conform with the other episodes. The love chapters were mostly subordinated for a spectacular flair. Now these are fully incorporated and the picture is given a velvety touch which was originally lacking. As it is it appeals not only to the eye but to the emotions. The sweetest story ever told elaborated here gives the feature an embellishment which makes it well nigh perfect.

And so the spectator is conducted, now through spectacular channels, now through romantic pathways, with the result that he is feasting his eye and his heart at the same time. But after all it is the impressiveness of the stupendous scenes—scenes which defy description in their grandeur, and the imaginative manner in which they have been detailed, which interests the observer, above the romantic incidents. Even the uninitiated in Babylonian lore feel the sweep and power of these scenes and Mr. Griffith is kind to relieve the tension with his love story.

Particularly impressive is the panorama of the siege of Babylon when Cyrus and his hosts storm the walls with every conceivable war implement, only to be repulsed. These pictures of ancient warfare cannot be duplicated by that mad art of today. And Belshazzar's Feast and the ultimate fall of the city lead one to the pictorial heights in their spectacular appeal.

And through it all a story of love constantly finds expression. Mr. Griffith has profited by "Broken Blossoms" in giving the picture its photographic quality. It is enriched through the blue backgrounds and the gold titling. The artistic scheme of making the titles appear as if written on stone adds value to the picture. A word for the acting.

Constance Talmadge as the mountain girl contributes the outstanding performance of the play. The velvety softness of her hundred moods, the subtlety of her characterization compose a study not to be forgotten. After three years since "Intolerance" it is the finest thing she has ever done. The part made her a star, but she has never excelled that performance.

Tully Marshall as the treacherous High Priest is thoroughly in character and gives a finished portrayal. Elmo Lincoln, Elmer Clifton, Alfred Paget and Seena Owen are conspicuous in their roles. The Griffith of "The Fall of Babylon" brings to mind the Griffith of "Broken Blossoms." The former appeals to the eye—the latter to the soul.—Laurence Reid.

Two Educationals

(De Luxe and Robert Bruce Scenic)

THE latest Educationals are headed by a De Luxe entitled "Woodworkers of St. Cloud," which shows a number of scenes of the little French village of St. Cloud and its chief occupation, woodworking. The camera takes the spectator through the various shops where the villagers practice their art by hand. There is no such thing as up-to-date machinery. These men are remarkably skillful and they fashion designs which cannot be duplicated by machinery in their perfection.

Gloria Swanson, Paramount-Artcraft player, after considerable "island" life

It is an interesting number. In the same reel is "Italian Cavalry," which is a fascinating picture of the trained horses of the cavalry officers. The noble steeds do not shy at any stunt, no matter how hazardous. They seemingly go up and down perpendicular cliffs.

A most interesting number is the Bruce scenic, "Separate Trails," which shows a number of scenes taken in the Yosemite. At the title suggests, the camera has followed the separate trails of the wanderer and his dog—the same dog that has followed Mr. Bruce through his vistas of the West. Loneliness creeps on the guide when he discovers that the dog has chosen a trail of his own—a trail which leads to a woodchuck hole. The scenes are rich in the suggestion of the vastness of nature. The atmosphere of contentment and beauty which surrounds them is finely conveyed. The titles and the tinting help to form this impression.—Laurence Reid.

"Perils of Paprika"

(Happy Hooligan Cartoon—Educational)

APROPOS of the British dirigible, R-34, Happy Hooligan relates to the three little fellows his exploits with his own Blimp. There is a merry race on between his ship and Chester Chilisauce's, and the first one to land safely on the other side will win a handsome prize in the leading lady of the land. Mischievous agents glue Hooligan's basket to the ground so that when he ascends his feet are seen dancing on the air. The undaunted Happy fights a duel with Chester and the latter's bullets puncture the balloon. So Happy appears to be out of the race.

He drops into the ocean and walks the waves until he meets a flying fish, which guides him through space and deposits him at his destination just in time to stop the ceremony of Chester's marriage. The latter is exposed as a German spy and Hooligan wins the race and a bride. An anti-climax comes when Hooligan tells the trio that it was all done for the movies. An extravagant cartoon and ridiculously amusing. Hooligan is getting so he can tell the biggest whoppers. —Laurence Reid.

"The Brown Derby"

(Judge Rumhauser Cartoon in One Reel)

THE Silk Hat Harry Live Stock Company has journeyed to the race track for their latest entry in the cartoon field. The Brown Derby is the attraction. Among the favorite steeds in the betting ring are Zazzbo—(2 to 1), Sweet Patootie —(3 to 1), and Machinery placed at (20 to 1). The latter horse is Silk Hat Harry's. It is a mechanical thing which is controlled by wireless. Four buttons guide its speed. Forward, Backward, Miscellaneous and Stop. And the Judge is so taken with its speed that he places his money on the contraption and furthermore rides it. kicks Harry right out of the picture. A funny cartoon and a good filler.—Laurence Reid.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 27, 1919.

"THE LYONS MAIL"
(TRIANGLE)

English Picture Presents H. B. Irving

THE latest English picture to be released by Triangle is an adaptation of Henry Irving's celebrated play, "The Lyons Mail" and the outstanding feature is the skillful performance of the famous actor's son, H. B. Irving. The subject is of the "old school" type when roles were founded upon heroics and there is such a wealth of plot and characterization about it that it is difficult to make the thing picture proof.

It is difficult to say how American producers would have handled the subject matter, but it seems reasonable to believe that they would have made it more compact so that the action would have appeared less choppy. The mob scenes are not well arranged and although the theme is clearly outlined the development of it soars in several directions. Mr. Irving's dual role is spendidly differentiated, his acting of the notorious criminal during the tragic episode when his double is about to be guillotined calling for the highest praise.

The play is founded upon mistaken identity and the treatment of it is decidedly morbid. It almost seems as if some of the realism could be dispensed with, particularly those incidents which feature the guillotine working overtime. Mr. Irving has an excellent company of pantomimists for his support.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Irving, the eminent English actor and son of the late Sir Henry Irving, will be seen at the ———theatre on ———of ——— week in his father's great stage success, "The Lyons Mail." It is a play of Paris of the guillotine days and is especially well suited to the art of the star. The theme deals with a near-tragedy that is caused by the remarkable resemblance between a respected citizen and the most notorious criminal in France.

Joseph Lesurques journeys by stage from Lyons to Paris in order to reimburse his father's dwindling finances. Dubosc, the desperado, and his gang of criminals travel by horses for the purpose of holding up the coach. The arch-fiend knows that he bears such a close resemblance to Lesurques that the latter will, in all likelihood, be charged with the crime. So the black deed is executed, the mail courier is killed and Lesurques' father is shot. He believes Dubosc to be his son. The police arrest Dubosc's band, but the testimony of Marie, the maid, who repaired Lesurques' spur during the half-way stop at the inn, that he is the guilty man, is sufficient to send him to the guillotine.

On the morning of the trial Dubosc, filled with liquor, gloats over the innocent man's misfortune. His wife, conscience-stricken, at last determines to expose the real criminal. This she does, and justice is meted out at the last moment. And Lesurques, as he watches his double being led to execution exclaims, "There, but for the grace of God, goes Joseph Lesurques!" "The Lyons Mail" is a play of big scenes and situations. It presents turmoil and intrigue, blended with thrills, in a drama of which the mystifying happenings maintain suspense to the very end. Mr. Irving is supported by a distinguished English company.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre have a treat in store for them when they see H. B. Irving in a screen adaptation of "The Lyons Mail," a play made famous by the actor's illustrious father, the late Sir Henry Irving. The drama is based upon a remarkable trial in which a highly respected citizen actually fell a victim to his extraordinary resemblance to an assassin. The square in which the guillotine stands is alive with turmoil and action. From a nearby window the guilty one gazes on the scene and gloating over the "double" about to expiate the desperado's crime. Then a woman breaks the shackles of evil that bind her to her mate and builds anew the shattered fragments of her happiness when she sees that justice is done. It is one of the strongest photoplays that has come to the ———. The star is surrounded by a competent English company.

H. B. Irving is presented by Triangle in "The Lyons Mail"

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this picture as a screen adaptation of the great stage success made famous by the late Sir Henry Irving. His talented son, H. B. Irving, is the star of the play here and it would be well to concentrate upon his ability and his position in English drama. Feature it as one of the late Sir Henry's greatest successes. Make a bid for the patronage of the old theatregoers—the patrons who remember the eminent tragedian. Mention it as a play of the Paris of the guillotine days—a play of love and intrigue—a play that unfolds a near-tragedy. Don't emphasize its salient points too much—it might shock the easily sensitive.

Play up the star. He has appeared in this country with success. In exploiting his name use electrotypes and do not be afraid to announce prominently that he is the son of Sir Henry Irving. Utilize your mailing list and be sure to bring out the most prominent people that H. B. Irving is being featured at your house. Do not "circus" the feature as it would tend to discourage the very people you want to reach. Bring out how a son's love for his father, a wife's love for her cruel husband, and a desperado's love for gold combine to make an intensely dramatic subject.

CATCH LINES

"There, but for the grace of God, goes Joseph Lesurques," said the hero of the absorbing drama, "The Lyons Mail," as he was being led away from the guillotine. See this stirring play of passion and intrigue.

See H. B. Irving, the talented son of the late Sir Henry Irving, in a screen presentation of his illustrious father's great stage success, "The Lyons Mail."

He was a respected citizen but because he resembled the most notorious criminal in France he very nearly gave up his life. What happened? See H. B. Irving, the talented English star, in "The Lyons Mail."

"THIS HERO STUFF"
(RUSSELL-PATHE)

Lively, Pleasant, Entertaining Picture

A LIGHT breezy comedy with several melodramatic incidents in a Western atmosphere. A little villainy is shown by plotters in the story and the hero and heroine score in the finale. A fairly good cast with one excellent character study is shown and the settings and photography are up to the average. Good direction and continuity help put over many of the slight inconsistencies.

There are many fights interspersed at suitable intervals when the punch is required. Also there is some very good riding. Just a lively, pleasant, entertaining picture.

He comes home from the war a hero, but is tired of the plaudits. He permits himself later to be branded a coward in order to escape the "Hero-stuff." Then he finds that the daughter of the visiting Eastern financier scorns him for his rumored cowardice. So he must become a hero again in order to win the girl he loves.

A good average draw for the big city first run houses and the high class neighborhood theatres where it should entertain both audiences as a picture. It will draw better and please more highly at the family and popular houses. At the laboring class theatres it should draw stronger yet and bring them to their feet in many of the most stirring scenes.—Length, 5 reels.—Released August 10.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Russell comes to the ———theatre on ———of——— week in a topical comedy drama with a Western atmosphere, "This Hero Stuff."

It pictures the arrival of a young man, Captain November Jones, U. S. A., at his home town in the far west. He is tired of the everlasting series of ovations and laudatory comments.

When he refuses to allow some plotters to use his name in a mining stock deal, they try and hurt him by having him branded a coward. He is already tired of so much of the "hero stuff" and rather welcomes being called a coward, thereby hoping to get out of the lime light.

But when a girl from the East scorns him as a coward he sets out again to win back his lost laurels as a real up-to-the-minute hero. And this leads to many fights and a series of thrilling incidents. He foils the plotters and saves the girl's father who had been kidnapped.

Some wild riding is shown in one part of the photoplay and although it is branded a comedy drama it holds the spectator tense throughout, according to reports.

When he finally proves that he is the hero both in and out of season, through war and in peace, he wins the girl of his choice. But he is again face to face with the worship and plaudits of his fellow citnzens and again has to stand for "This Hero Stuff."

Winifred Westover, J. Barney Sherry, Chas. K. French and Mary Thurman are in the cast in support of Mr. Russell in this attraction.

CATCH LINES

"This Hero Stuff" is mortifying to many of the returned fighters. You will be amused by William Russell in "This Hero Stuff" at the ———theatre.

A modest hero would rather escape the continued plaudits. See "This Hero Stuff" at the ———theatre.

He preferred to be branded a coward rather than brave the lime-light of what heroism brings. See William Russell in "This Hero Stuff" at the ———theatre.

When a pretty girl scorned him for his reported cowardice he was able to appreciate what "This Hero Stuff" really meant. See William Russell at the ———theatre.

PROGRAM READER

They called him a coward and he was glad of it.

He was weary of the so-called hero stuff.

From Pathe's satirical "after the war" picture, "This Hero Stuff"

Captain November Jones, U. S. A., came to his home town with three medals for valor in the late war. A series of ovations all along the line made him tired of the continuous plaudits. He wanted to escape the lime-light and settle down to a quiet, peaceful life again.

So when some plotters sought to besmirch his reputation by branding his an actual coward he certainly was tickled almost to death.

He figured that he would then be left in peace.

But when a winsome young lady from the East visited the small Western town she scorned his love on the theory that he was a coward. So Captain November Jones had to create a new reputation for bravery in order to win her.

And he did it. And the experience was almost as strenuous as the grilling he had passed through in France the previous year.

This is told at this theatre next week in "This Hero Stuff." And Captain November Jones is portrayed by that breezy star, William Russell.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another of those pictures upon which the title is catchy and the theme is topical enough to concentrate your exploitation. During the past nine months every hamlet in the country has prepared a loyal welcome for their returning soldier boys. The hero of this photoplay was fed up with it.

Get a series of interviews for the newspapers from several of your most prominent boys who have returned home with honors. Have them comment upon the many ovations from the time they arrived in New York until they returned home. Ask them if they haven't had enough of the so-called hero stuff, and if they would not now much prefer to be left alone to recove their stride in the peaceful pursuits.

"LOUISIANA"
(PARAMOUNT)

Vivian Martin's Newest Is Strong in Sentiment

VIVIAN MARTIN manages to derive a lot of entertainment from her role in this feature, an adaptation of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's book of the same name. It is no stronger nor weaker than the roles she has had the past year, but keeps to the same steady average. In fact, exhibitors know what to expect when they book the star's features—they are simply appealing to the sentiment of their patrons.

"Louisiana" offers a fragrant breath of sentiment, which is pleasing without providing anything melodramatic. Mrs. Burnett draws her characters with such simple attributes as love and faith. And the sun is always shining and guiding them through the clouds of conflict. Yet these clouds are never inpenetrable. A tale of mountain folks in the Blue Ridge, with love and sentiment capitalized to the utmost. The tender plot is elaborated with quaint shadings of characterization and a goodly portion of comedy touches. And and meeting his wife in the Italian city.

Miss Martin contributes a likeable performance. Others who lend distinction to their roles are Noah Beery as a picturesque mountaineer, Robert Ellis and Lillian Leighton. Director Vignola's creative skill gives evidence of itself in the feature.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 20.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Vivian Martin, the popular and dainty Paramount star, represents an old-fashioned girl of the South in her new picture, "Louisiana," which comes to the ——— theatre on ———of——— week. Miss Martins plays the role of Louisiana Rogers, who lives with her father in the mountains of North Carolina. Sweet contentment rules over their home—a home that hasn't been exactly the same since her mother's death. Lem Rogers is an uncouth man who never had any advantages but despite this fact he succeeded in winning Louisiana's mother—a woman of culture—for a bride. Lem thinks the time is ripe to give the girl the opportunities of the city.

Accordingly she is sent to acquire an education and to learn something of milady's fashions. And she is so old-fashioned that she makes an instantaneous hit, particularly so with Laurence Ferol, a playwright who is vacationing in the North Carolina city. When he visits her the girl is somewhat ashamed of her father's primitive speech and appearance and apologizes for him. Ferol jests about the place and the girl becomes angry and informs him that she will not return to Oakvale with him. But he decides to return later and make amends for his unintentional mistake. His letters are intercepted by a mountain admirer who threatens to kill Laurence on sight. Louisiana realizes that she loves the playwright and determines to protect him. So she diverts the mountain youth's aim and saves the man of her heart.

The picture is a very truthful depiction of simple love and faith. It is an adaptation of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story of the same name, and undoubtedly is familiar to many of the picturegoers.

PROGRAM READER

Vivian Martin appears as a quaint and charming little country girl in her new Paramount picture, "Louisiana," which comes to the ——— theatre in the near future. The star's many admirers will be glad to learn that she has brought life to one of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's lovable characters. Indeed Louisiana is one of the most wholesome and charming figures that the famous novelist has ever drawn. The picture here, is an adaptation of the author's book of the same name.

You will follow the star with keen interest when you see her come down from her mountain home to make a lady of herself. Her father is a rough mountaineer but he has a heart of gold. And he is determined that the girl will have every advantage. How she finds expression in simple love and faith, how she remains loyal to her father, how she keeps alive her home spirit, are the salient points of the story. It is fragrant with sentiment and rich in atmosphere. Watch for came of her marriage? See Bessie Barriscale in "The Woman Michael Married."

"Louisiana" is the newest Paramount production in which Vivian Martin is presented

SUGGESTIONS

The combination of the names of Vivian Martin, the star, and Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, the author, is a good one to exploit for this picture. The Vivian Martin features run true to form and you know pretty well by this time how to play them up to interest your patrons. They are mostly concerned with simple love and faith and this one is no exception. So bring out these qualities in all your advertising. Feature the story as a simple thing of love and faith and devotion.

Bring out the fine harmony that exists between the heroine and her father. It is a play that does not carry any outstanding high lights. So play it up for its theme. You might mention that it is appropriately staged and that some of the scenes are remarkably beautiful, particularly those above above the clouds. Mention that it is an adaptation of Mrs. Burnett's story of the same name. Remind your patrons that they have probably read the original. Publicize it extensively in advance.

CATCH LINES

She was perfectly contented up in the mountains of North Carolina where she made her home. Her father was crude of speech and rough in appearance but he had a heart as big as all outdoors. So he sacrificed the companionship of the girl so that she might be brought up as a lady. What happened? See "Louisiana."

Vivian Martin plays an old-fashioned girl of the Blue Ridge mountains in her newest picture, "Louisiana," which is an adaptation of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story of the same name. It is a play of simple love and faith. Its sentiment will send you away completely satisfied.

"WOMAN MICHAEL MARRIED"
(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Bessie Barriscale's Latest Is Good Entertainment

BESSIE BARRISCALE has gotten out of the triangular rut which has characterized her photoplays of late and we see her appearing in a unique story about a young woman who will inherit a goodly fortune if she will expend ten thousand dollars to straighten out the legal tangle necessary for the inheritance.

She is a fancy high diver who intrigues a society man to marry her, knowing that she can claim the stipulated sum as his wife. Bue he refuses to stay intrigued. Dramatic license is used at this point, for she leaves her husband to make her career as a songbird in Rome. A subtitle tells us that his father acted as her benefactor. Then the arbitrary arm of coincidence is introduced, with the husband meeting his wife in the Italian city.

The picture is most carefully produced, with the artistic proportions standing out conspicuously. There is a suggestion at the start of the age-long battle between the aristocracy and the proletariat. And beneath it, running deep, is the note of mischief found in the lives of the idle rich. It is a well constructed drama and it carries an appeal through its conflict as well as through its highly colorful backgrounds. Jack Holt, as the young man in the case, carries himself with poise and charm. The picture should please every kind of picturegoer regardless of his tastes.—Length, 5 reels.—Released through Exhibitors' Mutual in July.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mira Sacky.....Bessie Barriscale
Michael Ordsay.....Jack Holt
Doris Steele.....Marcia Manon

Directed by Henry Kolker.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale, one of the screen's foremost dramatic actresses, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled, "The Woman Michael Married." The star brings all that distinction of manner and grace of style which characterizes her work, to the part of Mira Sacky. The young woman is to inherit a large sum of money, but to obtain it she must expend ten thousand dollars. And she knows that the stipulation is impossible to meet unless she is married. Thus she feels that any claim on her husband would stand the test of law.

Accordingly Mira sets her mind on Michael Ordsay and intrigues him into a marriage. But he is not prodigal with his pocket-book, nor does he seem to care for his impulsive wife. A misunderstanding occurs and Mira leaves him to pursue an operatic career in Rome. Michael goes to the Italian city, too, though he does not know that his wife is there. And he finds her the reigning favorite. She has earned her rich inheritance through the benevolence of Michael's father, a man who had taken a deep interest in her from the first time he met her. And so Michael appreciates what a lovely bride he has in Mira. Thus they are reconciled.

The picture possesses certain qualities of imagination and romance and it unfolds a unique theme. The settings have been most judiciously selected and reproduced with artistic effect and technical skill. The entire production, in fact, is of a high standard, and comparable to the star's high average. The drama was written by Du Vernet Rabell and was produced under the direction of Henry Kolker. Miss Barriscale is assisted by a capable company that includes Jack Holt, Tom Guise, Marcia Manon and others.

SUGGESTIONS

The plan to follow here is to concentrate upon the story which is a most unusual one as far as the screen is concerned. It gets away from the beaten track. The heroine is desirous of inheriting a fortune and to do so she must put up ten thousand dollars. She knows that she can't borrow the money and so she intrigues a man to marry her. Play up the theme, telling that it is a tale of adventure and love. Tell that it concerns a resourceful girl who stopped at nothing to gain a fortune.

The title carries a sort of mysterious note and you might bring out its appeal along this line. Who was the woman that Michael married? Why did he marry her?' What kind of a woman was Michael's wife? These questions sent out in the shape of throwaways or teasers will excite interest.

Bessie Barriscale in "The Woman Michael Married" Robertson-Cole release

PROGRAM READER

Mira Sacky was deeply concerned over money matters. She received notice that she would inherit a princely sum if she put up ten thousand dollars for lawyer's fees. But Mira was a poor girl and the fortune loomed up as something mighty elusive. But it so happened that she was introduced to a certain society set. And a time came when she rescued a little brother of the rich from drowning. The brave deed so pleased Michael Ordsay that he promised her anything as a reward. So she selected him, knowing that if he was her husband she could have a just claim to the ten thousand dollars.

Now Michael was a pleasant fellow, albeit one who was careless of his character. And Mira left him to make out as best she could. She had a friend in his father and he advanced the necessary sum. Now she climbed the ladder to fame and came into her fortune is told in a richly dramatic and romantic finale. It is a unique story which is shown here and its ingenious development will highly interest you. It will be here on———under the title of "The Woman Michael Married." Bessie Barriscale is the star.

CATCH LINES

When she rescued a little boy from drowning the act so pleased a certain young man that he offered her the limit of his resources. But she didn't want his money until she had married him. You see she had a reason. You will find it out when you see "The Woman Michael Married."

She had to have ten thousand dollars in order to inherit a rich fortune. But she knew that she would only be safe if she was married. Who to marry—that was the question. Well, she married Michael. What came of her marriage? See Bessie Barriscale in this production.

"THE GAMBLERS"
(VITAGRAPH)

A Compelling Drama of Business Life

A DRAMA of frenzied finance in which the hero technically breaks the law rather than allow his father to become ruined by the tactics of a group of unscrupulous financiers. Based upon Charles Klein's great stage success, it loses a great deal, especially in the finale, owing to the director's interpretation or the continuity writer's failure to properly grasp this tremendous story of business life and romance.

The cast is very good and the photography is satisfactory. The settings fit the story and the star has a typical Harry Morey role. It holds the interest until the last half-reel when it loses it's grasp as a screen production. With three determined men present, a feeble old man is permitted to slowly burn an incriminating paper in spite of their tacit efforts to prevent him. And the ending is not as positive as most audiences desire to see.

Still this is a compelling drama and for five and one-half reels the audience will be intensely interested. And the last half-reel may also satisfy the majority of the people.

This picture will undoubtedly draw strongly at all theatres and interest most any kind of an audience. The first run and high class neighborhood houses should register the heaviest and then the popular and family audience theatres. The labor audiences will not care much for this picture.—Length, 6 reels.—Released September 1.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An adaptation of Charles Klein's famous stage success, "The Gamblers," will come to the ———theatre on ———with popular Harry Morey as the star. It is a play of frenzied finance and unfolds a theme which was a favorite with the late dramatist.

Vitagraph, in securing the picture rights to the drama and giving it to Mr. Morey, has again provided the star with an ideal role.

As Wilbur Emerson, a power in the Street, he neglects the social side of life for business. An opportunity presents itself for him to break the law and three of his associates are involved with him. And it is the old story of how he expects to make good after borrowing on certain notes. The government starts to investigate, the prosecution being handled by James Darwin who has married Emerson's fiancee, Catherine Ames. As in all affiliations there is a weak member and George Cowper is bribed to deliver the notes to the prosecutor's wife. But Wilbur pleads that hundreds of depositors will be penniless unless he has the packet and Catherine gives it to him. But Darwin holds the whip hand and swears that he will blacken his wife's name unless the packet is returned. So Wilbur decides to make a clean breast of the whole affair.

Accordingly he takes the packet to Darwin. When he restores the packet of notes to Darwin he knows he will be placed in prison for a short term at least to justify the law's technicalities. But he has Catherine's promise that she will divorce Darwin and marry him when he comes out of jail.

This picture is described as one of the most dramatic offerings that has ever come to the ———theatre. The situations are tense with action and suspense and the climaxes reached through scenes of strong interest. Harry Morey has the support of a most capable cast.

CATCH LINES

Charles Klein's greatest stage success, "The Gamblers," will appear at the ——— theatre next——— afternoon and evening with Vitagraph's virile star, Harry Morey, in the leading role. Don't fail to see this richly absorbing drama of frenzied finance. Sixty solid minutes of rousing action and suspense.

He neglected his fiancee for business and before he knew it he was deeply involved. Men kill themselves when confronted as Wilbur Emerson was. But he found another way out. Did he fight or meekly succumb to the inevitable? See "The Gamblers."

Harry T. Morey stars in the Vitagraph special, "The Gamblers"

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———theatre will remember the Charles Klein dramas, "The Lion and the Mouse," and "The Third Degree," which appeared with Alice Joyce as the star.

Now Vitagraph offers another Klein drama in "The Gamblers," which serves to introduce Harry Morey. Undoubtedly you have all seen the original play and if you have not, there is no reason to detail the outline.

Our intention is to keep you in suspense, only telling you that it is an absorbing play of frenzied finance. You are all acquainted with the man who neglects the woman he loves for business.

You will have an opportunity to see how he fares in this greatest of Charles Klein's dramas.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this feature tell your patrons that it is an adaptation of Charles Klein's stirring drama of the same name. Feature his name big. If you cleaned up with the other Klein pieces that starred Alice Joyce there is no reason why you cannot duplicate your success here. Bring out that it is a play of frenzied finance and love. The idea of a man who neglects the woman he loves for business is a fascinating one. It is recognizably real too. Play up the fact that he is involved in serious straits and that the government is to prosecute him. Tell how the prosecutor marries the hero's fiancee and uses her as a victim in his dastardly scheme to frame the hero.

Then there is the star. Play up Morey for all he is worth. He can always be depended upon to furnish a good performance. And he is a favorite everywhere. At least box office reports say as much. Use catch lines how gamblers are made and ruined.

"THROUGH THE WRONG DOOR"
(GOLDWYN)

A Likable Story Which Should Please

A DRAMA embellished with comedy and romance of the lighter order. The star fits her role perfectly and the cast is very good. Direction and settings are up to standard and the continuity is easy to follow. It is a likeable story and the picture will undoubtedly entertain the big majority. Photography and laboratory work is exceptionally good.

Madge Kennedy appears as the daughter of a wealthy father. The father is respected, but crafty in his business dealings. He manages to secure a firm hold upon a mine and the young prospector is about to be swindled. The girl has met the young prospector once in the west and when she is deposited by the taxi-cab at his door in New York several months later, in a severe thunder storm, she finds that she has been left at the wrong house and passes "through the wrong door." The worried father at the club, the hurried search for her, the choice she must make between her city fiance and father and the prospector, whom she has grown to love, combine to make a very pretty finale. Although rather far-fetched as to her coming to that identical door, this will be generally overlooked, as it is a pleasing picture throughout.

A good average draw for first run theatres and high class neighhood houses and will pleasantly entertain. The draw should be about average for the popular and family theatres and it should please those audiences. The draw and appeal to the labor audiences will not be so strong, as there are no real melodramatic touches or fast action.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 6.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Through The Wrong Door" is the catchy title of the Goldwyn picture starring Madge Kenedy which comes to the ——— theatre on ———of——— week.

John Bowers is again her leading man and appears in the role of a young prospector whom her father has swindled. She has met the young man once in the west but does not know his name. Later on the young prospector moves to New York City and finds that he has lost his mine. All is gloom for him. He discharges his servants and broods alone in the house. Shall he go gunning after the old swindler or go back west and discover another mine.

A severe rain storm is raging outside. When the door is blown violently open the young lady blows in. The taxicab had deposited her at the wrong house and she came in "through the wrong door." These are the complications that the young prospector has to face. He telephones her father that although the father has the mine the young prospector has the daughter.

She puts his dry socks on and this further complicates matters in the finale. The father is frantic and the outcome for him is restitution to the young prospector.

And then the romantic incident reveals that Cupid also slipped in the same "wrong door" with the young lady. She finds that she loves the Westerner in preference to her Eastern suitor. And the happy ending is provided in this entertaining story.

Goldwyn announces that "Through The Wrong Door" is one of the best photoplays starring Madge Kenedy that it has released to date. And the story is by Jessie Lynch Williams and appeared in Collier's under the title, "The Wrong Door."

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked, the title is your best bet. And pulling power may also be obtained in many places by the Goldwyn name and the star's name where she is particularly a favorite. The title may be worked through several "stunts" also if you go in for the special explotation idea strongly.

For instance a long card, 3 x 7 inches, could be printed and a string loop through a perforated end of the card would enable you to use them for door knob hanging. The reading matter could state; —"You're right. You should see Madge Kennedy go "Through The Wrong Door" at the ——— theatre."

A moment from Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn success, "Through the Wrong Door"

PROGRAM READER

He was alone in his large house after discharging all the servants whom he could no longer afford to keep.

A furious storm was in progress and the wind fairly howled.

The young prospector had come East to find that a certain capitalist had swindled him out of a valuable mine.

This represented all that the young man had and he was brooding. Should he take his revenge Western fashion and go out gunning for the tricky capitalist?

Then the front door flew violently open and a very sweet young lady fairly blew in out of the storm. She had been left at the wrong house by the taxi driver.

And she came "Through The Wrong Door."

The young prospector soon found that she was the daughter of the capitalist who had swindled him.

Can you imagine a more thrilling situation?

It appears that when the heroine came in through the wrong door that she was not alone. "Cupid" was apparently with her. For on her entrance, Romance was born.

All this and many other keenly interesting situations occur during the screen presentation of "Through The Wrong Door," the latest Goldwyn picture starring Madge Kennedy, which comes to this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good. It blew Madge Kennedy "Through The Wrong Door" at the ———theatre.

"THE MICROBE"

(METRO)

Viola Dana Brings Charm to Glad Picture

VIOLA DANA has been having such phenomenal luck with her subjects of late that it is only natural that the law of balance would assert itself and give her something that is not quite so rich in entertainment values. In other words "The Microbe" is only an average offering, whereas its immediate forerunners were above the ordinary. Miss Dana's vital and vibrant personality, however, is ample compensation for any plot shortcomings.

She catches the spirit of the waif who is adopted by a Prince Charming to the life. And as the role is strong in heart interest and sympathy she manages to emphasize these qualities with her customary appreciation. But isn't she trespassing upon Bessie Love's territory in this type of play? Glad roles are not dynamic enough for one of Miss Dana's temperament. She is best fitted for things that sparkle with spice and it is to her credit that she sprinkles a bit of it in her characterization.

Although dramatic license is used in emphasizing the salient points—points which strain credulity at times, nevertheless the picture will please those who enjoy a sweetmeat sweetly told. The director and the star have skillfully lifted it from the anaemic class. The supporting players are thoroughly adequate.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 21.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Microbe," the latest Metro picture starring the popular Viola Dana, will be the feature at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The subject was adapted from the story of the same name by Henry Altimus which appeared in Ainslee's Magazine. It is the dramatic and heart-appealing account of The Microbe, a girl of the New York slums, who is rescued from her unsavory surroundings by a young author in search of local color. Indeed De Witt Spence takes her home and makes a lady of her much to the anger of Judith Winthrope, who eyes him with matrimonial intent. This woman leads the Microbe to believe that she is the cause of Spence's failure, thereby causing the girl to leave the only happiness she has ever known.

Strange letters signed "Bianca" begin coming to De Witt—letters so full of inspiration that he writes a novel that restores him in popular favor. Naturally Judith claims authorship for the letters and in gratitude he asks her to be his wife. However, one of his friends takes him to the Microbe's home and he learns that she is "Bianca" and the inspiration of his book. So the love that has been stifling for months flares forth and the Microbe at last realizes complete happiness.

Startling events are unfolded in the picture—events which follow in rapid succession—each one more amazing that the last until a dramatic climax lays bare the treachery which has embittered the life of the girl. It is a whimsical story and one that is perfectly suited to the star's personality. She gives a very pleasing performance. A distinguished cast supports Miss Dana, including Keneth Marlan, Arthur Maude, Bonnie Hill, Ned Norworth, and Lucy Donahue. The story was adapted by June Mathis and was produced under the direction of Henry Otto.

SUGGESTIONS

Undoubtedly Viola Dana has given you a golden harvest if you have played her previous features. She has some remarkably good pictures of late. So to begin with we advise you to anounce that the star is to appear at your theatre in another picture of high calibre. Bring out that the role she has here is somewhat different from the hoydenish parts of the past although it is well equipped with humor. Advertise it as a tale of an East Side waif who takes a jaunt into the fairy land of riches through the good offices of a kind author. Bring out its note of pathos and tell how the girl is educated and transformed into a lady.

Tell how she acts as her benefactor's inspiration. You might work up a good advertising plan from the title which is adaptable for catch lines. Bring out the pathetic qualiity of the story. Tell how love comes to the heroine. Capitalize the fact that the star is seen in another of her whimsical characterizations. Lay special stress in all your exploitation on the star. Her popularity has increased by leaps and bounds. Use photographs freely. You might dress your ushers in raggedy newsboy costumes suggestive of the clothes worn by the star.

Viola Dana stars in the Metro picture, "The Microbe"

PROGRAM READER

"The Microbe," which comes to the——— theatre next ———afternoon and evening, is a story of love and adventure and a whimsical girl which presents Viola Dana in a new light of cleverness. The winsome star appears as an East Side waif who is rescued and taken to his home by De Witt Spence, a popular author. This girl, known as The Microbe, grows passionately devoted to her benefactor but finds that his friends are against her.

How she steals away when she learns that her presence is a detriment, how the shadows come into her life again when she thought they had been chased forever, how she renews her romance through an ingenious scheme and how her happiness is restored to her are events that form a plethora of dramatic and romantic scenes in the picture. Miss Dana is given creditable support from a distinguished cast that includes Keneth Harlan, Arthur Maude and others. Remember next———.

CATCH LINES

As we announced last week, Viola Dana, the piquant Metro star, will appear the——— next ———in "The Microbe," a delightfully whimsical drama of a girl of the slums. The picture will grip your fancy and touch your heart.

She was a waif of the gutter and her life was one continual battle royal. They called her the Microbe. But a Prince Charming came into her life and changed its sordid aspect. See this story of humor, pathos and romance at the ———theatre with charming Viola Dana as the star.

"BRINGING UP BETTY"

(WORLD)

The Story Is Rather Light; Average Picture

A COMEDY-DRAMA where the plotters get handsomely rewarded for their villainy and the young heroine marries her bathing-beach-and-yachting hero. This may look like a regular drama instead of a comedy-drama to some of the poorer class audiences.

Ben Johnson is a first class actor. Evelyn Greeley is the star. The story is rather light and shows the two fortune-hunting foreigners deserting the girl when they think her uncle has lost his fortune. A young man learns that the report of the fortune being lost is a fake and persuades the girl to become engaged to him. When she later falls in love with a young yachtsman who has saved her life, the uncle wants to release her from her former engagement, and, with the present-day careless abandon in handling large sums of money, he "rewards" the young crook with $700,000.00. Count 'em; seven hundred thousand dollars as a gift for being a scoundrel. And the hero and heroine sail away happily.

This may draw average and please in a family, popular or labor class audience. It will have no draw in a large city first run theatre nor will it entertain very many as a picture. It may draw in a high class neighborhood house and even slightly amuse an elite audience.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 28.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bringing Up Betty" is the latest five reel World picture starring Evelyn Greeley, coming to the———theatre on———of——— week.

In the role of an American heiress, Betty Morton, she finds herself courted by Lord Dormer and the Duke of Medonia. When her shrewd uncle desires to test them he causes the report to go forth that he has lost his fortune. They quickly vanish but Betty shows that she has the right stuff in her and resolves to go to work.

Carl Gates learns from his fiance, the secretary of Morton's banker, that Theodore Morton has not lost his fortune and then the unscrupulous young man offers Betty his hand and she accepts him to save her uncle whom she still believes is practically bankrupt. When she is saved from drowning by Tom Waring, a young yachtsman, and he afterwards proposes, Betty has to confess that although she loves him she is already engaged.

In the meantime young Gates' fiancee learns of his unfaithfulness and confesses to Theodore Morton that she has told young Gates that the Morton fortune was still intact. The old financier gives her a check for a large amount of money on condition that she marries Carl Gates. This clears the way for Betty to accept her young hero and all ends happily.

Ben Johnson portrays the role of Betty's uncle, Theodore Morton. Evelyn Greeley, the young star, has a part perfectly fitted to her in the lovable young Betty Morton. Others prominent in the cast of "Bringing Up Betty" are Lyster Chambers, Reginald Denny, Grace Carlyle, Joseph Weber, Maude Turner Gordon, Oliver Smith, Grace Hanson and Morgan Wallace.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked it would be well to refrain from any attempted circus stunts, as there seems to be no prominent angles to place effective special exploitation upon. Concentrate entirely upon the title and catch lines.

You might declare that Evelyn Greeley has a long list of successful pictures to her credit while co-starring, and that since she has earned the right to star, has produced features of even greater merit. Announce that World Pictures is the oldest regular producing company and has continually improved on a high standard.

One of the big family problems of the day is the proper bringing up of the daughter of the house. The title, "Bringing Up Betty," is your best bet. Use it on every occasion possible with the catch lines.

World Features Evelyn Greeley in "Bringing Up Betty"

PROGRAM READER

She was highly elated. She was happy and contented. She was pretty. She was wealthy. She had two foreign noblemen courting her.

And then—

Chaos—the poor house stared her in the face. And her uncle was to blame. He had his own peculiar ideas about "Bringing Up Betty."

He believed that her foreign suitors were fortune hunters. So he pretended that he had lost his fortune.

And his plan was effective. The noblemen vanished. They did it gracefully but hurriedly.

But Betty managed to recover her equilibrium. And she found her true love. And her uncle's judgment was vindicated.

All this is unfolded in the latest World picture starring Evelyn Greeley, which comes to this theatre next week. Ben Johnson appears in the role of the shrewd old uncle, Theodore Morton.

Neilan to Make Short Visit to London

Marshall Neilan has completed his production of "In Old Kentucky," and following the cutting of the picture will leave immediately for New York, and go from there to London. Mr. Neilan goes to London to confer with Sir William Jury, the British film magnate. He will remain in London about a week, and upon his return to this country Mr. Neilan will arrange for the purchase of the entire stock of a New York costuming company for use in his new Co-operative Studios. Upon his way back to the coast Neilan will stop at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and negotiate for the purchase of a large quantity of furnishings which will also be shipped to the new Hollywood plant.

While awaiting the completion of construction of the Co-operative Studios, Neilan will work at the old Lois Weber Studio in Hollywood. He will begin production on his initial independent picture for the First National late in August, and expects to have the production finished about November 1st. It will be an adaptation of Randall Parrish's book, "Bob Hampton of Placer," and as a motion picture will be known as "The Eternal Three."

Young Star Again Cast in Support of Lytell

Alice Lake's appearance in the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., production of the Hattons' famous stage comedy, "Lombardi, Ltd.," will mark the third time that she has played leading business in support of Bert Lytell. Mr. Lytell's new starring vehicle is to be distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation.

In "Lombardi, Ltd.," Miss Lake is cast as Norah Blake, the devoted little shop assistant to the Italian male modiste. This part was interpreted in Oliver Morosco's stage productions of the play by Winifred Bryson.

Veteran Player Still a Drawing Card

J. Warren Kerrigan appears to be doing a "come back" with his own producing company. He will be seen henceforth only in stories of acknowledged literary repute bearing the production stamp of Robert Brunton. The first of these is "A White Man's Chance" from a magazine novel. Ernest C. Warde is the director. A national exploitation campaign will precede the release by Hodkinson.

Here we have Emmy Wehlan in a happy mood in "A Favor to a Friend," a Metro feature

RECEIVER'S SALE

F. K. McBroom, receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, of Spokane, Washington, will receive sealed bids for the sale of its studio and lease at Minnehaha Park from July 9 to August 19, 1919, inclusive. This studio consists of administration building, laboratory, outdoor and indoor stage and garage, completely equipped. It is a three company plant; floor area of indoor stage 60 x 100 feet; outdoor stage 60 x 80 feet. Cooper-Hewitt and Wohl lighting system. Motor generator set 220-110-75 K W C A and D C. Complete laboratory. 10 dressing rooms and 2 dressing halls.

The administration and laboratory buildings are owned by the City of Spokane. The remainder of the buildings are owned by the Washington Motion Picture Corporation.

This plant is located on a large tract of ground, leased from the City of Spokane. The lease expires one year from the first of December, 1919, but can be renewed by the City Park Board for three year periods. Rental, $150.00 per month.

Conditions and Terms of Sale

To be sold to highest bidder for not less than $25,000.00 cash, without redemption, and free and clear of encumbrance. Subject to confirmation by court.

Sealed bids received by receiver, F. K. McBroom, at No. 215 Exchange Bank Building, Spokane, Washington, July 10 to August 19, inclusive. Bids to be accompanied by certified check for $2,000.00 which shall be applied on purchase price in event of sale. Detailed inventory may be seen at office of receiver or office of clerk of court. Bids opened and sale made on August 20, 1919, and presented to court for confirmation within five days thereafter.

This plant has been inspected and pronounced by experienced motion picture men to be as complete and up-to-date a plant, considering its size, as can be found in the country. The plant cannot be duplicated for $60,000.00. The sale will be made with full authority of the court having jurisdiction over the matter. Investors are invited to send representatives to inspect the same and submit bids.

Post-War Satire is an American Release

American announces the completion of work on "This Hero Stuff," a satirical comedy in five acts, starring William Russell, based on the story by Stephen Fox, and directed by Henry King. The story is a post-war narrative that pictures the homecoming of the athletic hero, fresh from the big fight, covered with medals and loaded down with honorable citations. Bored to death by the unremitting adulation that meets him at every turn, Captain November Jones takes stern measures to blast his hero reputation and acquire another for cowardice. However, when he sees the effect the latter "rep" has upon his budding romance, he sets about to achieve regeneration.

Winifred Westover is Russell's leading woman, and Mary Thurman, J. Barney Sherry, Charles K. French, Harvey Clark and J. Farrell MacDonald are prominent in the cast.

Arbuckle Better After a Week's Illness

"Fatty" Arbuckle has recovered from what had every appearance of being a severe attack of appendicitis and a session with the surgeon was threatened. He was laid up for a week in bed. This has delayed, somewhat, the work on his comedy for Paramount, "Back Stage," but it is believed that a few more days of active work will see the picture practically finished.

Chicago Opening for Sennett Comedy

Greater Stars Productions, Inc., through its associate managers, Messrs. Brockwell and Elliott, have secured the Illinois rights to Mack Sennett's comedy, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." A four weeks' run at least will be staged at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Chicago, starting on July 28.

New Orleans Branch

The Southeastern Pictures Corporation, A. C. Bromberg, Vice President and General Manager, has opened another branch office in New Orleans. Will T. Richards is the manager of this branch.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

An exciting moment in the American picture "The Tiger Lily" in which Margarita Fisher is starred

Universal Newsettes

THIRTEEN directors are engaged in production work at Universal City, while four others are engaged in cutting and titling. Tod Browning is filming the Henry C. Dowland story, "Auld Jeremiah," with Mary MacLaren in the leading role. David Butler, Spottiswoode Aiken, Fred Turner, Clarissa Selwynn and Eugenie Forde make up the supporting cast, The scenario was written by Waldemar Young.

"Loot," Arthur Somers Roche's mystery story, which appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post, is being made into a six-reel photoplay by William C. Dowlan with Ora Carew and Darrel Foss in the principal parts.

Norman Dawn is midway in the production of his dog drama, "The Eternal Triangle," a play of domestic life in which only canine actors are used. For extras and atmosphere pups, Dawn levies on the Los Angeles' pound for talent.

"The Jack of Hearts" is the title of a two-reel Western drama being produced by Reeves Eason, who has Josephine Hill and Jack Perrin in the leading roles.

Harry Carey and his company of more than sixty persons, are on location at Big Bear Lake shooting exteriors for Carey's new photoplay, "The Eternal Savage." The story was written by Carey in collaboration with Jack Ford, his director, and the scenario was prepared for the screen by Hal Hoadley.

"The Right to Happiness," the Allen Holubar - Dorothy Phillips' drama of dual identity, is receiving its finishing touches at the hands of the editorial department.

"Tempest Cody Saves the Day" is the title of the newest Tempest Cody two-reel Western drama starring Marie Walcamp under the direction of George Holt.

Production work was started on "The Winged Trail," a five-reel aerial melodrama, under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, with Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, the aviator who changes planes in mid-air, as the star. Francelia Billington, who played the principal feminine role in "The Pinnacle," is the principal player of the supporting cast.

"The Desert Trail" is a two-reel western drama being produced at U City under the direction of Edward Hull with Pete Morrison and Magda Lane in the leading roles.

The final scenes are being taken by Director Paul Powell for "Common Property," a drama of nationalization of women in Russia. Robert Anderson, Colleen Moore and Nell Craig are the principal players.

Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, are at work on a subject titled "The Brute Breaker." French Canadian logging camps form the locale for this story, which will be released as a Universal special attraction.

"Who Knows?" the mystery melodrama by Kenneth B. Clark, which George Seigmann is directing, is progressing rapidly with Kenneth Harlan and Helen Eddy in the leading roles.

At the Ince Plant

HOBART BOSWORTH, engaged by Thomas H. Ince on a long-term contract as announced recently, has begun the preparation of a script, the title of which has not been announced, in which he will star and also direct.

The first of the big special attractions with all star casts produced under the personal direction of Thomas H. Ince, was begun this week under the name of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism" from the story by C. Gardner Sullivan. Several spectacular scenes are planned which call for appearances of several thousand persons.

Dorothy Dalton has begun work in New York City on her second production in the Metropolis for the Ince studio. It is a film version of a novel called "The White Book" by J. D. Harris-Burland. It will be directed by Joseph deGrasse from the scenario by R. Cecil Smith.

About Metro Players

THE new exterior stage had its initial use when Hale Hamilton and Director Harry L. Franklin filmed the office scene for "The Fourflusher." Izola Forrester and Mann Page are the authors of the story which has been adapted by A. S. LeVino.

Lieutenant Eugene Pallette, U. S. Air Reserves, has been engaged by Maxwell Karger as May Allison's leading man in "Fair and Warmer." Avery Hapworth's farce, for which June Mathis and A. P. Younger are writing the continuity. Henry Otto will direct.

Bert Lytell, starred in "Lombardi, Ltd.," will have Alice Lake as his leading woman for the third time in Metro pictures. "Lombardi, Ltd." is to be Lytell's first vehicle under the "fewer and better" production rule. and will be under the direction of Jack Conway, June Mathis wrote the scenario.

Al E. Christie and Alice Lake motoring in Hollywood in latest (?) style motor cars. These were used in "Shades of Shakespeare," a Christie Comedy

A moment in "Checkers," the big film special presented by William Fox from Henry M. Blossom, Jr.'s great racing play

Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, cabled the Hollywood office from Paris, that his European tour, originally planned to cover England, France and Italy, will be extended to Belgium, Switzerland and Scandinavian countries. Harry J. Cohen, manager of Metro's foreign department, will complete the tour with Mr. Rowland.

Frederick Malatesta, nephew of the Italian premier Netti, has been engaged by Director General Kargar to play the role of a South American millionaire in "The Fourflusher." Mr. Malatesta has been proposed by the local Italian colony as the next Italian consul for Los Angeles.

Vitagraph News Bits

EARLE WILLIAMS is starting in the production of "The Black Gate," the mystery story by Hilliard Booth. The story tells the rejuvenation of a brilliant lawyer under the influence of a love which has been revived.

Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock are enjoying an optical banquet at Laguna Beach, where they are surrounded by a bevy of Vitagraph beauties in filming bathing scenes for their newest comedy.

Director David Smith, staging the Bessie Love feature, "Under the Garden Wall," put on a real bout which had more of excitement than the Willard-Dempsey contest, when Allan Forrest, leading man, and Jay Morley, the heavy, mixed it. Miss Love's next drama will be a quaint Irish story written by Gerald C. Duffy and be directed by David Smith.

Larry Semon is in the midst of "A Heap of Trouble," figuratively and literally, for this is the working title of his newest comedy. Lucile Carlyle is his leading woman.

IN and OUT WEST COAST STUDIOS

are in the northern p[illegible] of the state on locations.

Vitagraph features were prominent in Los Angeles theatres the week of July 20 when the Symphony, Garrick and Palace theatres each projected productions of this pioneer film producing company.

Paramount-Artcraft

THE huge Babylonian set which is being used in Cecil B. deMille's production of "Male and Female," was thronged with persons in biblical attire during the staging of one of the most spectacular scenes of the big production. Gloria Swanson, who with Thomas Meighan and Bebe Daniels is numbered in the all star cast, was called upon in her role to appear as a captive slave girl lying beneath the claws of a lion. Negro slaves, soldiers and others in spectacular attire thronged the set.

Major Robert Warwick this week began his work in the role of "Captain Dieppe" in the play from the book of that name by Anthony Hope which is being directed by James Cruze.

Lila Lee has begun production of an original comedy drama by Beulah Marie Dix under the direction of Robert Vignola. The story is said to contain many bright spots of comedy and an attractive love theme.

George Melford will begin the direction of "Everywoman," a special feature being made from the stage play of that name by Walter Brown. Will Ritchey prepared the scenario, and several elaborate stage settings have been provided. Violet Heming is leading woman in the title role.

Harry Houdini, after completing his final scenes in the serial, "The Grim Game," left for New York to begin an extended theatrical tour.

Marguerite Clark, under the direction of Walter Edwards, has completed her appearance in the stellar role in "All of a Sudden Peggy."

"Why Smith Left Home," Bryant Washburn's latest subject, has been completed and preparations have been begun for the staging of "It Pays to Advertise," the widely known farce which was so successful on the stage. Donald Crisp will direct Washburn and Lois Wilson, h[illegible] leading woman.

Milton E. Hoffm[illegible]n, general manager of Famous P[illegible]yers-Lasky Corporation, has co[illegible]pleted arrangements for the cons[illegible]uction of a fully equipped photogal[illegible]ry at the Hollywood studio for t[illegible] use of the publicity department, [illegible] and an experimental laboratory [illegible] which will be turned over t[illegible] Alvin Wyckoff, the photographic direc[illegible]or, for use on new effects in camera [illegible] work.

Here and There

MARSHALL NEILAN is negotiating with the owners of the dramatic rights to the play, "Ben Hur" with the view of making a film version of the work. It is said that $500,000 is being asked for the screen rights to this big production.

Al Green, of the Marshall Neilan staff, will direct Peggy Hyland in a picture being produced for the Fox Company during Mr. Neilan's coming absence in Europe. Green formerly was a Selig director, producing several successful plays featuring George Fawcett and Vivian Reid.

Marjory Daw has signed a long-term contract to appear in Marshall Neilan productions.

Jackie Saunders has been engaged by Ivan Abramson to star in his production, "Someone Must Pay." Miss Saunders is now in New York preparing her wardrobe for this special feature.

William Desmond is in the final scene of "Dangerous Waters," the latest Jesse D. Hampton production in which he is starred.

Bessie Barriscale has begun work in the latest production in which she is to be starred, the name of which has not been announced. The story, which will be directed by Howard Hickman, is by N. D. Havey and the script by Harvey Thew. It is said to be an elaborate picturization with an Oriental and European background and in some of the larger scenes more than one thousand persons will be employed.

AUGUST 2, 1919 — NEWS — MORE NEWS

Joe Brandt has gone east.

Seena Owens is to be starred.

Pretty warm, 'sall we can say!

Bill Taylor got out of town Monday.

Harry Garson is back in town with a smile.

Hob Bosworth is back amongst us with Tom Ince.

Wally Reid is knocking 'em dead in Seattle this week.

Al Jennings held up a train last week—no one excited.

Elmo Lincoln refuses to worry—yes, a long time contract.

Bill Parsons was seen chasing flies off his private skating rink.

Thomas Geraghty is going to London town. Ireland shall be free!

Walter Edwards is breathing again having finished "Locked in Pawn."

"The Peals of Thunder Mt." are a thing of the past for Tony Moreno.

Edna Purviance was the first passenger to Catalina by the air route.

Jesse Lasky is vacationing with his auto. Nobody knows where he is.

Anna Q. Nillson is to name a producing co. Guess what she'll call it.

Adam Hull Shirk has broken forth in song. "A Cinema Bouquet" is the name.

Niles Welch's name is soon to come up at the head of a producing company.

Al Green has taken an office at the Fox studio where he is to direct Tom Mix.

Prissy Dean is home from Vancouver and says that everyone was lovely to her there.

Elmer Clifton is of the Griffith age—he walks, and talks, and works that way.

Bessie Barriscale got a letter addressed to "the Bird of Paradise, Hollywood."

Wally McDonald, the handsome leading man, paid HOKUM a pleasant call this week.

Dorothy Dalton likes New York so well, she's going to stay for another picture.

Bob Brunton has taken on another tenant. Doug. Fairbanks is to make pictures there.

May Allison can't decide whether to sell her crop of turkeys for Thanksgiving or Christmas.

Some big news is going to break—Quaker City folks are going to throw their cash in the ring.

And now it is hinted that Mickey Neilan will probably make "Ben Hur," as his first production.

Joe Rock has an automobile that will run 90 miles an hour—the speedometer indicates as much.

Bert Lytell has named his car the "Oasis" because he bought it last Spring. Yes, Yes. (Cruel).

Bill Duncan hasn't caught all the fish at Huntington Lake, so will stay a couple of weeks more.

Cecil B. deMille states positively that he'll have the Admiral Crichton finished in the next week.

Robert Warwick is to take off the gold leaf and put on two bars—just to play the part of Captain Dippie.

'Atless Dick Willis has not written any poetry for two weeks, but we promise our readers a treat soon.

Fred Stone is to be the king at a Cheyenne rodeo this week. Al Cohn is going along to cheer for him.

And again Noo York says it's going to steal David Wark, and he'll produce there. Mr. Griffith, can this be so?

"The Skeleton" stalked forth from Goldwyn's again this week, and again we are informed "This is a Goldwyn Year."

Dorothy Gish is sick of being a brunnette and tired of being a blonde, so friends have dared her to be a red head.

Fay Tincher has flittered north with her P. A., Pat Dowling, to show the northwest exhibitors that she really is funny.

Milt Hoffman has no appreciation for landmarks. He ordered the old frame dressing rooms at Lasky's torn down this week.

"Americanism vs. Bolshevism," is shortly to come forth from the Thomas H. Ince studios, and then good-bye to the red flag.

Lyons and Moran are doing the beach for a couple of weeks which may or may not have anything to do with the making of pictures.

Lila Lee has got to get to work. Her next picture must be ready for exhibition August 20th, and they just started shooting.

H. B. Warner is catching so many fish at Catalina Islands that he won't come back to work although Jesse D. Hampton is wiring him daily.

Eddie Cline is spending his spare moments Burbank-like in an effort to produce a seedless watermelon. Yes, Eddie leave off the rind, too.

Our set is going to entertain the multitude with an auto race at Ascot Park in a few days, and there are indications that records will be shattered.

Dempsey is coming out to be starred, we hear, which leads to the conclusion he will prove a better screen bet than Willard—at least if he won't fight for a month or so.

Isadore Bernstein was seen pushing his fingers through his hair, and since we have heard exclamations regarding a rodeo. Bill Parsons threatens to back it with anything.

Consolidated Crepe Hair was given an awful blow this week when Charles Ray grew his own crop. Charley is so young that no one thought he could do it, but he's a tooler.

Bill Desmond made a truck driver take water this week, which is another way of saying Bill was there ready to back up what words he had with a fellow who frightened a horse.

Sid Chaplin got his Seagull working this week, and is now taking passengers to and from Catalina Islands at $40 the round trip, plus war tax. Some people have no sense for business.

Bryant Washburn pulled a good one on the Lasky Company. He had all his wardrobe lost on the way to location, and the firm gave him new clothes, and it was for the film "Why Smith Left Home."

In the rush to get to press last week, we forgot to mention that Bill Farnum had another birthday on July 4th, and Catalina Island folks spelled his name in fire way up amongst the clouds.

None of the Underwood slaves of our set have written any suggestion for prevention of drought which leads to the charge that someone is not on the job. But a press agent can't do everything.

R. Cecil Smith is not amongst us any more. He has gone east to be with Selznick. Incidentally it may be said he left the key to a spring lock on his cellar door on the wrong side, and he's been sore ever since.

Speaking of a monopoly on beauty! Think of Violet Heming, Wanda Hawley, Mildred Reardon, Bebe Daniels, Mary MacIvor and Margaret Loomis all playing in one picture. Jesse Lasky threatens the public with a treat. The subject is "Every Woman." Irving Cummings will be Passion; Theodore Roberts, Wealth; Raymond Hatton, Flattery; and Noah Beery, Bluff.

CURLEY'S CHATTER

(Being the mutterings of our honest elevator man boiled down.)

Now that all producers agree there should be fewer and better pictures, you and I should vote to make it unanimous. (Let the records so read, Mr. Clerk.)

Simplex

SECOND-HAND SIMPLEX PROJECTORS AND GOOD WHISKEY!!!

(They're Both Hard to Find)

In visiting the numerous theatre supply house repair shops throughout the country, have you not noticed the absence of SIMPLEX PROJECTORS?

If you are unaware of this condition, drop in at your nearest repair shop and inquire about how many Simplexes are repaired there as compared with other projectors.

The man in charge will tell you that so well is the Simplex constructed with its high grade material, plus the unexcelled workmanship, that its appearance at the repair shop is alarmingly infrequent.

WHEN WE BUILD A SIMPLEX WE FIGURE THAT ITS PLACE IS THE PROJECTION ROOM—NOT THE REPAIR SHOP

AND—

Have you ever wondered why a second-hand Simplex is seldom seen on the supply house floor?—

It's because a Simplex—even after years of service—is still regarded as a good investment, so much so in fact that they are invariably purchased as eagerly as are other new projectors—and at almost the same prices.

DOES THIS NOT INDICATE SIMPLEX SERVICE?

Read what Fred Cosman, one of the first three projectionists in America thinks of the Extralite Shutter.

Precision Machine Co., Inc.

* * * * * * It stands without question the Extralite Shutter will give a much sharper picture than any of the other shutters, as well as a brighter picture, and less flutter. * * * * * *

Yours very truly,

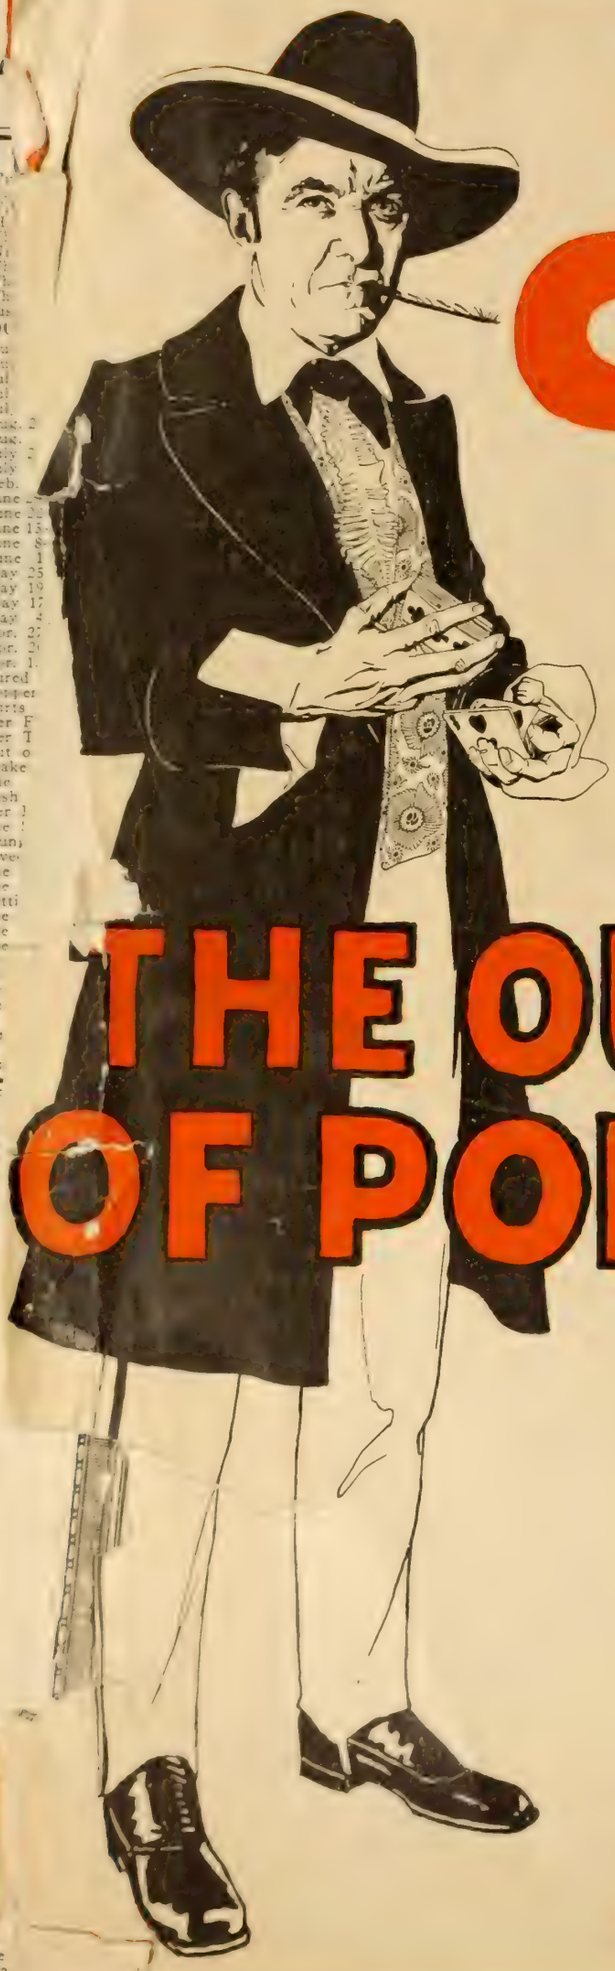
BRET HARTE'S

Famous Classic

Read and Loved by Millions



NO picture of the recent season carries a deeper story, a greater appeal to the emotions or more magnificence in romance and wealth of scenes than—"THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT," featuring Harry Carey.

THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT"

—recognized as one of Bret Harte's finest works, has been read by millions, has thrilled and entertained unlike any story of the early days of the golden West. We direct especial attention to the rare romance of the river steamboat scenes, so true to life as to challenge your admiration.

A private review of this production is invited at the offices of any Universal Exchange.

"THE WEAKER VESSEL"

YOU MUST review this Universal Special Attraction for your own sake, if for no more than to show you how Universal is leading the procession in fine picture making. Millions have already acclaimed this play as "entertainment de luxe." It is unquestionably one of the finest pictures released this season. A brand new idea story, with characterizations rarely, if ever, seen on the screen. It's one of the few productions that will stand up under a run of a week and every exhibitor is urged to play it for a run of not less than 2 to 3 days,—4 days being still better. Mouth to mouth advertising will keep your house at capacity.

THE BIGGEST MOTION PICTURE WEEK

THE first purpose of Paramount-Artcraft Week is to make money for the exhibitor. Its secondary purpose is to show the exhibitor and the huge motion picture public what Paramount-Artcraft really means in the field of the photoplay.

There is one way to accomplish these two purposes. That way is to make the Paramount-Artcraft Week for 1919, sure-fire in financial and artistic success, by giving the public the best entertainment in motion pictures to be had anywhere and to show by exploitation where to get that entertainment.

Shall the Exhibitor Rule?
We Say--Yes!

LET him know he will always be welcome in Realart councils. We want his views. Information is ammunition. "Knowledge is Power."

Realart Pictures is centering its fire upon combining in one attraction quality of:

1.—Star
2.—Book or Play
3.—Production
4.—Exploitation
5.—Distribution

Vast sums are being spent. Eminent, highly paid stars are at work. Purchase of great works of fiction and drama goes steadily on. Foremost directors and scenarioists, reinforced by liberal expenditure, work hand in hand to obtain the maximum yield. Far reaching publicity and exploitation is under way. A fine system of twenty exchanges is ready.

We want to push Realart Pictures to the limit.
You, the Exhibitors, have opinions.
We want your views.

REALART PICTURES

Constance Binney.

The Beauty of the New York Season

The public applauded her, the critics acclaimed her, the newspapers interviewed her, the illustrated press spread her fair photographs far and wide. A new theatrical celebrity was born. She continues scoring big in "39 East," the current New York success.

CONSTANCE BINNEY

has the priceless gifts of Youth, Beauty, Talent. Can't you just visualize this lovely girl in such a part, for instance, as a little slavey in a Pennsylvania Dutch settlement, later blossoming into glorious young womanhood?

Such a role will introduce her as a star to your patrons in Mrs. Fiske's wonderful stage success,

ERSTWHILE SUSAN

Founded on the widely known novel, "Barnabetta," by Helen R. Martin. Now in production.

Director - - - - - - - - - - - John S. Robertson

REALART pictures is giving most careful consideration to powerful novel and play titles—themes which have left an indelible impress upon the public consciousness.

Realart is determined that quality in stars will be matched by corresponding quality in vehicles and in production.

When releasing begins, early in the Fall, Exhibitors may be assured that Realart Pictures will fully meet the new demands of an improved public taste and that they will command the enlarged profits that their excellence deserves.

HODKINSON PREDICTS ON EVE OF MIGHTY PICTURE BATTLE

By WALTER BODIN.

W. W. HODKINSON, by right of achievement, has a right to be heard—and believed—on any question concerning the future of the motion picture industry. For twelve years Hodkinson has been in the game as producer, exhibitor, distributor and what not. He is admittedly one of the brainiest, if not the brainiest, man in the business.

San Francisco movie managers have good cause to heed Hodkinson's words. It was he who six years ago came here and saved the leading houses from almost certain ruin. It was his organizing genius that had so much to do in crushing the trust, the General Film Company, which he followed with the organization of the Paramount-Artcraft corporation. He has done more to advance the cause of good pictures than any other man in the world, perhaps.

So now, on the eve of the biggest motion picture revolution in history, anything that Hodkinson may have to say is well worth listening to. He says:

HERE'S THE WARNING.

"Next year will see new consolidations, realignments and affiliations, particularly on the part of the small producer-distributer concerns if they are to compete successfully with the larger concerns. Such reorganization will no doubt mean that these affiliated concerns will, by the issuing of stock and securities, place their own values on their "assets" on the basis of what they think they ought to get out of it, and the exhibitors will be called upon to shoulder the burden of their enormous capitalizations.

"When certain organizations find they can no longer go it alone, when they have pooled their interests in an effort to escape approaching financial storms, exhibitors may at that time find that they have in their possession a stream of quality product without which many theaters cannot live. Through controlling the life blood of the business such an organization, aided by economic conditions and modern merchandising methods will then gradually force exhibitors into a scheme of national operation of theaters instead of individual operation, and this means the virtual ownership of the theater by these producers."

ANOTHER TRUST?

In other words, Hodkinson warns "beware another trust." His warning comes with the motion-picture industry on the very edge of a very hot volcano. Almost anything might happen in the next few months. As things look at present, three big organizations top the list of producing concerns in the United States (and, therefore, the world), and they threaten the lives of a score or so lesser organizations.

What has this to do with me, the consumer? the reader may ask. It has everything to do with you, the consumer. For the fate of the consumer is bound up with that of the exhibitors, and their fate is in the grasping hands of the picture-makers.

About September 1 the new era in pictures opens. New plans are to be entered into; one big new factor is to enter the field and the fiercest competition is to prevail.

All the producers have finally gotten it into their heads that they can't continue putting out poor pictures. Better and better pictures are to be made the coming year. The public demands them and the public is to get them. There is no question as to the merit of the productions of Mary Pickford, Chaplin, Griffiths and Fairbanks. The Paramount pictures have always ranked with the best in the field. The First National, though young, has always been consistent in producing good pictures. And this concern has some pretty good stars on its staff. The list includes the two Talmadges, Constance and Norma; Chaplin still has five pictures to make for First National under his million dollar contract; Pickford has two more to be made, and Charles Ray, Jack Pickford and Marjorie Daw are among the new stars. Marshall Neilan and Lois Weber have signed directing contracts with First National.

BETTER PICTURES.

So it can readily be seen that the other producers must increase the artistic worth of their productions to survive. The public will not pay to see the bad pictures of the past when it can see good pictures at the same prices.

It's a merry game, the whole of it. But the movie fan public is assured of better pictures, at any rate, although the specter of higher admittance prices looms in the not distant future.

"WHICH SONG BRINGS HEARTSEASE TO YOU?"

A memorable play, it has the universal touch that makes the whole world kin. It is a potent drama, the central theme is so strongly impressed in most people as to make this picture deeply significant and unforgettable.

Tom Moore is starred as a poor composer. Rarely has so sympathetic a characterization been made. Whimsical, oftentimes eccentric and temperamental, the oddities of the genius are accentuated.

HEARTSEASE

By Charles E. Klein Directed by Harry Beaumont

The composer had written an opera. It was "Heartsease" It was stolen and one day, played in the Grand Opera House. The great lady heard the music. It recalled the dead past, the struggling writer, the loving moments—so many memories. that her world was turned upside down.

You have known a song, a melody which brings "Heartsease." Which is your song? Soldiers between battles heard some little melody that made them weep with happiness. The Marseillaise sent the French Revolution to victory.

The appeal is being developed for your public by the service staff and will be offered to you by your local Goldwyn Press and Service Representatives simultaneous with your showing of the picture.

Mr. Julian Johnson,
Photoplay Magazine,
350 North Clark St.,
Chicago, Illinois.

My dear Mr. Johnson:

Relative to your recent request for an expression of opinion would say I believe the most important factor in motion picture production is neither star, story, nor direction, but organization. That is to say no matter what a director's ability may be, how great the story or how wonderful the star, unless behind these elements there is a good organization working in complete harmony a really high class picture is an impossibility.

If there is any such thing as insurance against failure, and of success, the securing of a first-class organization is it.

Yours sincerely,

Marshall A Neilan

The Marshall Neilan Organization

AL GREEN—First Assistant to Mr. Neilan

Engaged by Col. Selig in 1912 to assist Colin Campbell. Became director in 1916 and produced "Princess of Patches," with Vivian Reed. EVOLUTION

Number Three

The Trade Papers of June 28th and July 19th carried my first and second advertisement "EVOLUTION."

THE ECONOMIC TRINITY: — — — Producer — Middleman — Consumer — — are inevitable BEDFELLOWS; but the end-men are usually kicking the middleman under the blankets.

This is true of FILMS as well as of FACTORY and FARM products.

While the actual CONSUMER of films is the PUBLIC, for TRADE purposes we may consider the EXHIBITOR to be the consumer: the EXCHANGE is the middleman.

Sometimes the producer tries to ELIMINATE the middleman and deals directly with the ULTIMATE consumer, as when the Superfeature is placed in a THEATRE leased for special exploitation.

The MIDDLEMAN, however, serves an important function and CANNOT be ELIMINATED.

Being an INEVITABLE factor in the business of getting films to the public, the exchange must function EFFICIENTLY and remove the prejudice by SERVICE, to Exhibitor and Producer.

A review of film DISTRIBUTION since the birth of the NICKELODEON in 1906 shows that it has steadily IMPROVED. The dinky exchange of that period, with its LACK of SYSTEM, its endless ERRORS in bookkeeping, its INCOMPETENT handling of films—in booking, in repair and shipping rooms, its DESTRUCTIVE COMPETITION, cannot be compared with the PRESENT DAY exchange.

In spite of current fault-finding, it is vastly SUPERIOR to its predecessors. It has a BROADER and more SYMPATHETIC attitude toward the exhibitor.

With exceptions, of course, with exceptions.

I am laying a foundation for PRODUCTION and DISTRIBUTION. To be enduring it must be FLEXIBLE. I do not believe in long-time contracts in this business, except of the most general nature.

PARALLEL INTERESTS will hold business men together better than formal contracts. MUTUAL CONFIDENCE is the best cement.

Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor must be CO-ORDINATE POWERS in the industry.

The Producer, grinding out product in UNENDING footage, compelling a GROANING exchange to force it upon a RESISTING exhibitor, is FADING out of the scene.

The Exhibitor is no longer compelled to eat an eight-course dinner to get the single dish which he wants.

Let the Producer take his HEAVY HAND off the Exchange; give it reasonable FREEDOM in the SELECTION of films, and freedom in DEALING with EXHIBITORS.

EQUAL RIGHTS, no DOMINATION, FREEDOM of action, mutual RESPECT—within the Trinity—are on the horizon.

There is no ROYAL ROAD to successful production. With the beginning of every new feature, FAILURE is knocking at the door. No Producer DELIBERATELY turns out failures.

The diatribes of some critics read as if the making of a POOR PICTURE were a delight and the pastime of men who love to WASTE money. There has been waste, due to the conditions that controlled the industry, but it is being lessened as the business becomes stabilized.

The film business has ETERNITY ahead of it, but the businesses composing it may be SHORT-LIVED. Success and Failure follow each other in quick succession. Film concerns that do not yield to EVOLUTIONARY PRESSURE, die.

I am neither a REFORMER nor a RADICAL: I dislike reformers, except those who reform themselves; and radicals usually like change for changes' own sake. I try to analyze trade conditions as they affect my business, to read the barometer of the FUTURE, and having a distinct OBJECTIVE, to drive toward it; always believing in co-operation, to add momentum to the DRIVING FORCE.

My own Productions will be made LEISURELY, each department in COMPETENT hands, avoiding above all things a SET quantity within a given time; I believe in INTENSIVE work upon one theme—the BIG THEME, if it can be found, in the hands of a BIG DIRECTOR—not necessarily a SPOT-LIGHT director; not caring particularly whether the product is one or twelve Super-features per annum; built without HASTE, but without WASTE.

They will be marketed through SYNDICATE SUPER-FEATURES, INC. and will be offered to—not forced upon—the AFFILIATED INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES OF THE WORLD.

SYNDICATE SUPERFEATURES, INC. is prepared to buy the world's rights, for cash, of superfeatures of any length, or to contract for distribution on a percentage basis through Affiliated Independent Exchanges.

Yes!

3 to 1

RECENTLY we published a statement to the effect that MOTION PICTURE NEWS was three (3) times stronger than any other trade medium—

Three times greater in circulation value.

Three times greater in advertising value.

* * *

The statement is challenged by another publication, which asks if we mean that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has three times the circulation figures of any other medium in the trade.

No, of course not.

Circulation figures don't determine circulation or advertising value. Every publisher knows that. Every advertising buyer knows that.

* * *

The companies which made the tests, by which the 3 to 1 strength of the NEWS was proven, also knew that circulation figures merely went part way.

So they also asked for reader interest and influence.

The tests were made through the exchanges. Very careful, thorough and intelligent investigations were made.

* * *

The first test, by one company, showed the NEWS ahead by at least three to one.

The next test, by another company, gave results so similar as to be strikingly conclusive.

And now we learn of a third test, made direct with 1500 exhibitors; and this test also shows, as plain as daylight, the same outstanding superiority.

Three (3) to one.

There is no doubt in the minds of any of the three companies as to the results of these tests.

If the trade publication in question still doubts we suggest that these companies will perhaps give light on the subject.

If any advertiser still doubts, we suggest he make his own test.

More, we advise it.

SUPREME REPRODUCTION

Of Our Country's Most Heroic Fighters

The Lost Battalion

Now showing at the Grand Theatre (Hartford) daily to packed houses that are thrilled with the spirit of patriotism that seems to leap from the screen: with the spirit of romance that veils the tragedy of war, and with the spirit of hope that springs eternal for a world enduring, all world peace. The epitome of faith, hope, charity.

Flashed to New York to the most notable of all New York's Evening Newspapers, THE EVENING JOURNAL re-flashes to its MILLION READERS: "'THE LOST BATTALION' as a production excels in photography, originality and scenic effects. In fact, it is one of the most remarkable screen features ever produced, rivalling anything ever attempted before, greater both in story and romance than 'The Birth of a Nation,' and excelling the latter production in its originality, if not artistically."

THE EVER RELIABLE HARTFORD COURANT sparkles with praise as it rises to a critical penultimate: "Somehow, in some miraculous manner, the producer and director of 'THE LOST BATTALION' have caught the glorious spirit of the American doughboy, and in every scene filmed is reincarnated for history the homely, humorous and noble characteristics of the product of the 'melting pot of the nations,' the American soldier. In its mighty playing on the chord of human interest, in its appeal to the individual's patriotic pride, and lastly, in its power to produce tears of laughter and tears that spring from sight of rows on rows of tiny white crosses in a graveyard in France, 'THE LOST BATTALION' is far superior to 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

NOW READ THIS WIRE!!!

"The Lost Battalion" has smashed all box-office records for the Grand Theatre, Hartford, on Monday night, Tuesday Matinee and Tuesday night performances. The Hartford Courant, Post, Times and Globe proclaim it greatest picture ever shown here.

Congratulations,

Remember the Public

¶ "What is to be your attitude toward producer-owned theatres?"

We have been asked the question from several quarters; and we reply promptly and candidly that we don't believe in producer-owned theatres.

We don't believe in them as a matter of good business, either on the part of the owner or the owned; we look upon them as an era only in the swift and jerky development of a very large and unruly business.

We do not believe in producer-owned distribution, nor producer-owned exhibition.

And we say this for one simple reason; that the public, which pays for all the pictures made, distributed and exhibited, wants, and always will want, to shop freely and easily for its pictures.

All businesses, from the beginning of business, have, sooner or later, had to conform to this inevitable fact.

We are fully aware of the trade exigencies which, for the time being, make it seem very desirable, even necessary, for a producer to own exchanges and then to take another step and own theatres.

The one step in fact leads to the other.

But we are also aware of the simplest and broadest law of the whole business; and that is:

That we are making pictures to please the public. We are in the business of selling to the public—only to the public. Our entire proceeds, our whole welfare, our life-blood, every ounce of it, comes from the public.

We are wholly dependent, in other words, upon the public taste.

This public taste is, or should be always a free agent. It should absolutely dictate the production and distribution and exhibition of pictures. This dictation, or demand, should obviously begin with the theatre, then go to the distributor and thence to the producer. No other force should enter into the situation, especially a reversal of this process.

Now this public taste is a very sensitive and changeable thing.

It differs, often widely, in different sections and in localities and towns within these sections. It has its seasons. It is subject to world events, such as wars, to economic conditions, religious waves, etc.

It is the exhibitor's business to know this public taste, the particular taste of his particular community, to feel its varying moods; if he doesn't know it he isn't an exhibitor for very long.

We can scarcely conceive that a man a thousand miles away knows it better. We cannot conceive of a man with only producing or distributing experience and ability being better equipped to cater to this demand, often purely local.

Neither can we see why, in order to secure maximum bookings on good pictures, it is necessary to own theatres; good pictures, we all know, are in sufficient demand. They don't need forced or controlled bookings.

And finally we don't believe that the many millions of capital invested in theatres, an investment that completely overshadows the tangible assets of the producing and distributing branches, is ever going to be owned, controlled or even wagged by the producer and exchange—not for any appreciable time. Consider, for instance, the fact that since the conclusion of the war over fifty millions of new capital have been invested in new theatres alone.

"Remember the Public" is the best business maxim of all; the trouble constantly is, in this business, that trade angles loom so large that the picture public is overlooked.

The ideal way is for the exhibitor to book what the public wants. That means an independent exchange; and that means independent producers.

And this isn't an ideal theory. It's a plain, business, commonsensible law, as old as the hills. No one in the business world has ever bucked it successfully and permanently.

To reverse the situation is to stuff the market with too many pictures and poor pictures, with, in other words, what the public doesn't want and won't buy. We all know that right here is the cause of over production and poor production.

Of course, the nigger in the wood pile this year is rental prices.

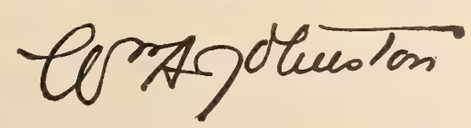
The producer is practically saying to the exhibitor; if you don't pay my price I'll own my theatre.

This isn't good business. It is war and war is ruinous.

We need fifty-fifty prices and fifty-fifty cooperation; fifty-fifty liberality and foresight. We don't want fighting.

Neither side is blameless in the matter; and exhibitor domination is just as bad business as producer-distributor domination.

Remember the Public!



Speaking Editorially

No Credit Wanted

JOHN SIEFERT, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, and his colleagues on their visit to New York for the purpose of discussing the "Trade Rules" with the "mighty magnates" have made one point clear.

"It isn't credit that exhibitors want who are fighting the unjust 'Trade Rules'," declares Mr. Siefert. "We hear that this is a cash business and it is necessary for the distributors to make it so. If that's a necessity—then it's all right. Exhibitors have large sums tied up in advance deposits, exhibitors are willing to pay C. O. D. on their film shipments. We can put up with these things—but we can't fight against dark houses.

"And it is because he is never certain when his house will be dark that the exhibitor is forced to fight the 'Trade Rules' tooth and nail. No amount of apologies for an exchange slip can recompense for the loss of business and the loss of patron confidence that a dark house produces.

"Take the case of a Dayton manager who mailed his check to the Cincinnati exchange on July 2nd for a July 4th show. The check didn't arrive until July 5th—and the exhibitor went without his show on July 4th, the national holiday. Pretty poor mail service, we'll admit—but the 'Trade Rules' declare that the exchange's responsibility ceases when the film has been delivered to the carrier. Why can't the rule work both ways?

"No, it isn't credit that the exhibitors are seeking. They are striving to protect their investments against incompetence and unjustice."

* * * * *

Here's a Line for Advertising Men

AN exhibitor in McComb, Mississippi has given us a line that the advertising men failed to coin when putting forth their open market policies.

In the course of a letter discussing conditions in his territory, J. E. Alford, manager of Jacob's theatre, McComb, declares, "The public shops for its entertainment and we must shop to get that entertainment for them. That's why I think that open booking, if properly handled, is the best plan for the exhibitor. Your ideas of the future coincide with the writer's: 'Fewer and better pictures and longer runs.'"

"The public shops." There's the keynote of the situation this year. And the reason that the local manager who knows his public, who strives to please that public, who advertises to that public, need fear none of the shifting phases of the business.

Speaking of such exhibitors, we might well go on to quote the business policy of Mr. Jacobs that allows him to say "Conditions here are very good."

"We show nothing but clean subjects," he writes, "avoiding all suggestive or vulgar subjects of any type. As a result no local church or society knocks us and we hold the good will and respect of every one. The ministers of our town are among our customers.

"We get the best pictures we can obtain and we don't try to 'gouge' our patrons on prices but charge what a production is really worth. We are frank in our advertisements. If a picture is only fair we do not boost it. If it is above the ordinary we say so—and our patrons believe us."

* * * * *

A Combination Worth Watching

IF the exhibitor thinks that he has all the hard work and the producer lolls in an easy chair he ought to be in New York these days while producers and distributors are striving tooth and nail to marshal their forces for the Fall dive.

The announced Goldwyn-Shubert combination is a sign of the efforts being put forth—and an opportunity for congratulation to Mr. Goldwyn.

The Screen and Advertising

DEVELOPMENTS out in the home of that tried warrior, Sam Bullock, seem calculated to produce considerable commotion in the industrial picture field. Cleveland exhibitors, we understand, have discovered that screen advertising controlled by the exhibitors can result in providing sinews of war for exhibitor organizations.

So the organized exhibitors in that city and Pittsburgh have taken the screen advertising problem into their own hands—with resulting benefit to the organization treasuries and the creation of a situation that will cause considerable thought on the part of industrial picture producers.

Commenting on our recent editorial concerning a letter from Exhibitor Carl F. Miller, of Fremont, Ohio, Mr. Bullock writes: "What you intimate will take place has already taken place in two cities, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. What the result will be Cleveland and Pittsburgh exhibitors neither know nor care, but one thing we do know is, that no producer or distributor can play fast and loose with our screens hereafter with commercial advertising of any kind. Whatever camouflaged advertising is deemed O. K. will help furnish the above organizations with sinews of war. No sinews, no publicity."

For "the benefit of Mr. Miller and 'steen thousands of unorganized exhibitors" Mr. Bullock then appends the form of letter sent by Cleveland and Pittsburgh organizations to all manufacturers and advertisers using screen publicity. The letter follows:

Gentlemen:

I am instructed by our Executive Board to inform you that the theatres represented in this association will not project upon their screens any industrial films, "inserts," pictorial or otherwise, or any pictorial advertising propaganda of a commercial nature whatever, unless the producers and distributors of films of this description shall first obtain the written consent of said motion picture theatre owners or their representatives in this association.

The members of this association are as patriotic and philanthropic as any class of business men but hereafter all makers and distributors of commercial pictures or "inserted" scenes (camouflaged advertising) must recognize the "publishers'" rights to sanction or refuse the publicity necessary in such matters.

The "publisher" in these cases is, of course, the theatre owner, who has the same rights in such premises as the newspaper publisher has.

Our association's membership represents 96 per cent of Cuyahoga County's motion picture theatres, all of which are a unit upon this matter. Heretofore we have been ignored entirely by the producers and distributors, but have presumed to pledge our screens ("circulation") which in many cases they never could deliver. We therefore deem it only fair to your firm to give you this information, asking nothing in return except your careful consideration of the subject.

Shall be glad to give further details at any time at this office.

Very truly yours,

SAM BULLOCK.

Executive Secretary.

Dealing in Personalities

WELL, all the "big boys" shake the Astor dust from their feet—or their food—this week and journey to Rochester. George Eastman plays host and the National Association members really look forward to a meeting with anticipation and interest.

Of course it could be no one but P. A. Powers or Eagle Rock who could suggest that the meeting was really a meeting of Eastman sales managers and customers. No one else would be so mean.

But nevertheless, by virtue of the efforts of a number of committees the National Association should have a business-like meeting. The Film Theft Committee has been on the job and has some interesting facts to report. The Transportation Committee has been working hard and should be able to present a series of interesting recommendations.

And then, of course, there will be the election of officers and such routine functions. It will be a regular meeting. In fact, through the presence of an interesting and important host, there is every indication that the members will return to New York with the feeling that the National Association is a "regular" industrial association.

No—"yours truly" is not going to journey to Rochester. "Yours truly" and the motion picture business must struggle along while the "big boys" sight-see around Rochester.

In addition to the denial that he had sold his theatres there comes from E. H. Hulsey the word that he is "in the market for additional theatres in Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas." Gosh, boys, but this theatre-buying craze is going the limit. And before the word "Finis" is spoken there are a lot of fingers that are going to be badly burned. But we don't suppose we should bother to have any opinions since we are an impartial observer getting less than twenty-five thousand a year.

DID the boys in New York really see the inside of that Allen theatre story that appeared in the trade papers last week? We refer to the story that the Allen interests, of Canada, had started work on million-dollar picture palaces in Cleveland and Detroit.

Sounded like an ordinary story at the first reading. But back of it was a declaration of war. And declarations of war are more than interesting reading these days.

It seems as though someone—we might even say a large motion picture interest—had let the word go out and reach the Allens, "We are going to build a new and modern motion picture theatre in every city of Canada where you have a theatre."

And the Allens got sore. And said: "We have as much money as you have. And we don't get it through advance deposits or stock sales. And, since you have got us real mad, we'll just show what we can do. Mr. Architect, please draw the plans for those new million dollar palaces in Cleveland and Detroit. Go the limit on expense. We'll build a regular honest-to-goodness-house every place that these fellows buy one. And if they get us real mad we'll go out and produce our own pictures or buy the best the independent market affords."

EXHIBITORS ATTENTION

West Virginia and Kentucky exhibitors should not fail to attend a meeting that will probably be held at Charleston, on August 19th and 20th, to devise means of joining forces with the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League—thus presenting a solid front of theatre men dealing out of the Cincinnati offices.

For the official meeting-place and other details address "Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, 913 Lindsay Building, Dayton, Ohio."

Another important exhibitor meeting is scheduled for August 13; 4 at Ocean View, Virginia, when the exhibitors of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, North Carolina and Virginia will meet.

Gr'r'r. It's a great battle.

But it doesn't compare with the battle that is going on over stage productions. Zukor has signed up with the Frohman interests. Shubert has combined interests in a measure with the Goldwyn outfit. And we are all expected to stand on our hind-legs and wiggle our ears. Astonishment! Surprise! Consternation!

Rats! And then some more rats! The exhibitor in Joplin, Mo., will continue to pay his money for "The Heart of Humanity," "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Unpardonable Sin," and a half hundred subjects of which the Klaw Shubert Frohman Woods Cort Dillingham Comstock Ziegfeld Erlanger aggregation have never heard.

What's the answer? Oh, rats—again! It's too simple. Ask us another one. Something harder.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president of the Education Films Corporation, has got all swelled up to the point of sporting a new eight thousand dollar Pierce-Arrow car. And one of the reasons is that he claims the honors for breaking all records for the booking of short subjects in leading New York theatres. This week will see six educational subjects in the four big motion picture houses of the Times Square district—the Rialto, Broadway, Rivoli and Strand.

JOHN SIEFERT, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, was a visitor to New York during the week. Mr. Siefert had important business with the leading producers. Yes, very important. For on his card was scribbled the words "Trade Rules."

"Trade Rules." "Them are fighting words these days." MOTION PICTURE NEWS has got in bad with a number of exchange managers because it has been the only trade paper to mention the subject of "Trade Rules" and go further than that to declare that the "Trade Rules" will be a serious handicap to further developments of the business.

Which is not right. Because exchange managers have always been the friends of Motion Picture News. They were among the first to realize that Motion Picture News was helping to bring more money into the industry through showing exhibitors more ways of making money.

Temporarily—as we say—some of these exchange managers are estranged from us. Because we do not believe that the "Trade Rules" are an engraved tablet handed down from above. And we are sorry. Because it is on such men as Lust, of Cleveland, Pearson, of Milwaukee, Taylor of Omaha and a dozen like them that we place a lot of our faith in the future of this well-known game.

But a year or two from now—or maybe a month or two from now—gentlemen, you will realize that we were right. And you will realize that we know now as well as you know that a large percentage of exhibitors of irresponsible and beyond the pale of decent business regulations. You will realize then that we realize now that the "average" exhibitor doesn't give a two penny damn about the "show" after he has received it and played it himself. He will leave the house at ten-thirty and not give a darn about whether the operator ships the film on to the next exhibitor or back to the exchange—to-night or the next morning.

We know all these things, boys.

But, knowing them, we contend that your "Trade Rules" are a mistake. Because they give the honest exhibitor the treatment of a yellow dog. That's reason enough for our opposition if there was only one honest exhibitor in the United States.

And the first men to admit it a few months from now will be the competent exchange men, the competent bookkeepers, the competent bookers.

Because by that time they will have discovered that for every irresponsible exhibitor there was another incompetent exchange employee.

And arbitrary rules laid down by one side will never work as long as the balance of incompetence is fifty-fifty.

As we rumored on this page a few weeks ago, Lewis Selznick is to build a studio in Long Island City. Oh, yes, one of the biggest. Other news of the week includes the fact that we have received from Bre'er Shepherd a clipping from the Saturday Evening Post which shows a heading "Everybody's Business." And we discover that the Satevepost has accidentally been giving publicity to "Everybody's Business" for many weeks past.

JAKE GERHARDT, who broke into the theatrical newspaper game with the Dramatic Mirror while still in his swaddling clothes, leaving it after he had reached the age of manhood to join the General Film Company a year and a half ago, severs all connections to run away and take a vacation next week.

Jake won't tell us just what he has been doing in recent months but we have it on the best of authority that he has been loyally sticking to the General ship until the last wave rolled over the mast-top. "Loyalty" is Jake's middle name. So it was not until he felt that all possible reverence had been paid to the corpse that Jake ran off for his vacation.

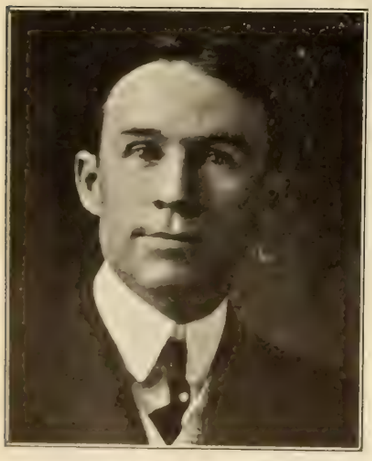
Meet the Boys!

C. W. ECKHARDT is managing the Marlow Theatre, Helena, Montana, for the Ansonia Amusement Corporation. The Marlow is a new hou e opened in April, 1918 and modern in every respect. It seats 1,300, with smoking room, ladies room, writing rooms, nursery, etc.

A large orchestra and an organ are used with all attractions, the pictures being personally pre-viewed before booking. Pantages vaudeville and road shows are also seen at the Marlow. Ushers and other attendants are uniformed and for special picture attractions often specially costumed.

The Marlow is a strong advertiser, both through newspaper space, billboards, and a mailing list. In addition an eight page house organ, The Marlow Theatre News, has a circulation of eight thousand and is a big money-getter.



W. J. LYTLE, who has been an exhibitor since 1913, now has on his string the Empire, Princess, Royal, Wigwam, and Pike, in San Antonio, Texas, with a total seating capacity of over six thousand. In addition he also runs two houses in Del Reo, Texas, seating fifteen hundred.

That he is an enterprising exhibitor may be seen from the fact that he publishes a snappy eight page, nine by twelve inches, program for his principal San Antonio houses that is on a par with some of the best programmes we have seen. All the principal special attractions plays the Lytle houses, while road shows and vaudeville acts reaching San Antonio also find a place in Lytle theatres.

Naturally enough you may expect to hear that Manager Lytle reads Motion Picture News regularly and, he adds, "I think it a big help."

HERE we have H. C. Goldstein, proprietor of the Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida, one of the first if not the very first to give his section of the Sunny State pictures on a high plane.

The Plaza has a seating capacity of 400, and caters to its audiences in a manner worthy of note of larger town exhibitors. Mr. Goldstein being a violinist of note, having studied abroad and in this country, offers a musical program second to none in the South. It is his boast he took picture exhibitions out of the store room show class in his town and put them on the plane they merit.

Besides running the Plaza, Mr. Goldstein is in the furniture business.

REYNOLDS MAXWELL is now manager of the Electric Theatre, Joslin, Mo., and has called the show business his vocation and avocation practically all his life, though only entering the motion picture phase in 1918.

His headquarters are at the Electric theatre, Kansas City, Kansas. The Electric theatres operate under the combination policy of vaudeville and pictures. Industrial conditions in his state have been poor the past two years, says Mr. Maxwell, but things are perking up now.

"I look forward each week to arrival of Motion Picture News," he writes. "I do not have any other trade paper, having time for but one.

SHAKE hands, spiritually, with Julius W. Schmidt, manager of the Grand theatre, Breese, Illinois—and with his "partner," Mrs. Schmidt. His town's name by the way is an apt description of Mr. Schmidt's personality, if one pronounces the final e.

He does well at the Grand, and admits it, but is always looking ahead, forgetting the disappointments and successes of the past toward the end of putting over bigger success in the future.

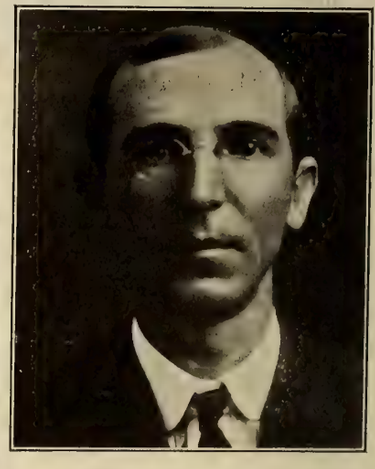
Mr. Schmidt places strong reliance on the trade journals, and writes that it is not misplaced, for, unable to see a picture before booking it, he has depended on the advance word contained in the journals, and a fattened bank book and pleased patronage has been the result. He has a good word for the Paramount, Pathe and Triangle salesmen, declaring that though they are each all for their own concern, yet all are good fellows.

"Have read the News since 1914 and have bright prospects of reading it another five years," Mr. Schmidt says.

W. D. ASCOUGH, manager of the Miles-Regent Theatre, Detroit, may well boast of being one of the real pioneers of the business. His theatrical career dates back to 1895 at which time he joined Sullivan and Considine in Seattle. Later he was in Tacoma, Butte and other cities. Until Jan. 1, of this year, at which time he took over his present position, Mr. Ascough was manager of the Palace, and Poli Theatrical Enterprises at Hartford, Conn.

The Miles-Regent is claimed to be the largest two-floor theatre in the world, and is owned by Charles H. Miles who has a string of houses. The seating capacity is largest of any Michigan theatre.

"I find Motion Picture News an ideal journal to have at my elbow at all times.



F. L. CLARKE is one of the boys who deserves a real vote of thanks for the work they are doing for the motion picture industry. For, as he tells it, "For the past five years I have been making a great effort to educate the people of this town, Hazen, Arkansas, to appreciate and patronize the greatest of all entertainers, the motion picture. It has been an uphill road but I am winning out at last and the interest in photoplays is constantly growing."

Mr. Clarke's house, The Cozy, is, naturally, small, seating only two hundred and fifty. But he goes the limit to make his patrons comfortable and has the last word in equipment. "The hardest thing the small town man has to contend with," he adds, "is the condition of the film sent to country exhibitors. But if exhibitors would refuse to run film in bad condition they would soon get a better deal."

Film Features Strike New Orleans at Twenty Cents—Big Men in Paramount

THE Detroit Exhibitors' League is trying to induce the exchanges to refuse service to those theatres who violate the Exhibitors' League rule of "three-reel shows for five-cent admission prices and five-reel shows for ten-cent admission prices."

"John Barleycorn," the screen version of Jack London's story, is going to run in a Philadelphia theatre in spite of the State Censors. Bosworth and Famous Players interests are determined that the film shall be shown and have rented a theatre. It is contended that as the Saturday Evening Post ran the story, and is published in Philadelphia, the screen shall be just as free as the press.

Herman Fichtenberg will remodel the Dreamworld at New Orleans and run film features at twenty cent admission prices. Josiah Pearce and Sons of New Orleans, also decide to run big features.

In Milwaukee they book big features in spite of the summer heat. Manager George Fischer of the Alhambra has booked "One Wonderful Night" with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, and Manager Harry Graham of the Butterfly Theatre has contracted for "Home Sweet Home."

Los Angeles theatres have just abandoned the idea that paper and photographs in the lobby is all that is necessary to bring the people in. They now use outside billboards and newspapers to advertise their shows.

D. W. Griffiths is producing an adaptation from Poe's "Tell-Tale Hearts." It will be called "The Avenging Conscience," and is to be distributed by Mutual. In the cast are Blanche Sweet, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Mae Marsh, Henry B. Walthall, Jack Pickford, Robert Harron, and others.

Joseph Hopp, heavily interested in the Union Film Company of Chicago, has been made President of the Fort Dearborn Bank of Chicago.

The motive power of the recently organized Paramount Pictures is supplied by W. W. Hodkinson, James Steele, Raymond Pawley, William L. Sherry and Hiram Abrams.

Frank Rogers of Knoxville, Tenn., has bought the rights for the film feature, "Cabiria" for fourteen southern states. Mr. Rogers travels with two special cars, one Pullman sleeper and one baggage car. An orchestra of sixteen men and two camels are carried.

P. A. Powers, President of Warner's Features, announces that the company will produce one-reel comedies as well as features.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of World Film Corporation, announces that an Independent Program of twenty-eight reels a week, single and multiple reels,—four reels every day,—would be released.

Now It's "The Story Evil"

It Used to Be the "Star Evil," But Now They're Gone Crazy Over Stories

July 19th, 1919.

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

While the battle thunder of converted plays, novels and published stories crashes in a mighty assault upon the Verdun traditions of motion picture entertainment, the following letter from a prominent exhibitor of the middle West seems of interest.

"Just now the producers are going crazy over stories appearing in big publications," states this man who controls a chain of houses in Illinois. He continues: "And they are paying unreasonable prices for the picture rights, regardless of the fact that only about one out of every hundred is suitable for the screen.

"My wife and I sat in one of the finest theatres in St. Louis one night last week and saw a production made from a Saturday Evening Post story which we both had read. It was so badly butchered up that we both became disgusted and left the theatre before the picture was over.

"I suppose the producer found, after he had purchased the rights, that it would cost too much money to make if he followed the story, and so, caused it to be rewritten, left out the best part, and called it a special feature because of its name, the author and the star. But this is only a starter of the many to come."

The foregoing is one of many letters I have recently received from exhibitors touching on this subject. The evil of preverting the story of even a play, book, or published yarn despite its shortcomings as picture material will alone defeat the purpose of open booking.

This same exhibitor concludes:

"I am indeed glad that you will offer us four original productions during the coming year, as the stories you have created have been the most pleasing I have ever shown. Make these four as good as those in the past and I will take them all."

Therefore, your editorial, "Listen for the Cry of 'Help!'" yields me a certain degree of satisfaction, yet also breathes a warning. So I shall exercise the strictest caution throughout the production of my four special pictures, with the constant thought that the public is my task-master—not a sales policy.

Yours very truly,
MONTE M. KATTEYJOHN.

Where Are the Men?

This Exhibitor Says It Doesn't Matter, Because They Won't Help the Small Man

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

Although I have been reading and using your valuable paper for about two years, never before have I been "riled up" enough to take my pen in hand, and cut loose. I've read with interest the complaints of poor film, poor service, from every place in the country, but although we are one of the small (heavy on the small, too) exhibitors, we have excellent service and excellent film. In the past three years we have only missed out on one show, running three a week in a they-call-it-a-town of 1200 folks. And as for the condition of our film (it's not new service by any means), I really couldn't ask for much better. Once in a while we get one that's not perfect, but as a general rule our pictures are in excellent condition (Paramount and Select). Maybe it's because I'm lucky, or maybe it's because they know I take care of their film and can be trusted with the best they have.

But what I started out to write about was your editorial in July 19 issue. "Where Are the Men? Are They Coming Up from the 'Sticks?'" Well, I guess I'm in as small a place as any, and I want to come up, BUT—

Several times lately I've run an ad in different papers for a place as manager of a bigger house, and received several replies, but as soon as I mentioned that I was in a small town—well, nothing doing! Why? Can you tell me?

Is there anyone else who has the training a small town man does? I mean one who is really interested, and wants to get ahead. I started in a show in a town of 20,000 population, ushering at night, when I was only 15 years old; then I helped the operator, became assistant, and finally operator. I didn't work at it a long time, as I didn't intend to stick to it, but I operated for nearly two years, off and on. Then I graduated from high school with highest honors, out of a class of 107, taught school a year in a little place of 900 people, but liked the picture game so well I started in here in 1916—at the ripe age of 20 years.

The standard price then was 10 cents, and now we get 25 cents for practically everything, and bigger crowds than anyone ever got. We run good pictures and advertise them. That's all. But here's the idea—a fellow here has to book all his own pictures, advertise them, be janitor, run his own machine, or at least be able to; usher, sell tickets, keep the records of the tax straight, and everything else. And then when he wants to graduate to a bigger show, they seem to think he don't know enough.

Of course a manager in a big show may not have to do all that, but he should know how to do it, shouldn't he?

The biggest house in a town of 80,000, about fourteen miles from here, recently lost

Annual N. A. M. P. I. Session at Hand

Preliminary Meetings of Various Divisions Are Held This Week in New York; Meeting Will Be Largest in Attendance Ever Held

WITH meetings of each branch of the industry in session this week, members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are looking forward to the third annual meeting of the Association scheduled to be held at Rochester, N. Y., August 5 and 6. The meeting of the Producers Division was called on July 30 in the Times Building (New York), offices of the Association. Later in the afternoon the Distributors Division met at the same place, and on July 31 the Supply and Equipment Division members came together. The final session was a meeting of the General Division.

All these were preliminary to the annual meeting which is coming, to which great importance is attached. George Eastman, President of the Eastman Kodak Company will be responsible, through his generosity for the entertainment of the members.

First Peace Meeting

From present indications officials of the National Association predict that the forthcoming meeting at Rochester will be by far the best attended of any of the annual meetings since the inception of the organization in June, 1916. Through the generosity of Mr. George Eastman, President of the Eastman Kodak Company, the members of the association will be royally entertained as his guests during their stay in the Flower City. Headquarters will be at the Hotel Senaca.

Since this is the first annual meeting to be held in time of peace great importance is attached to the occasion by the N. A. M. P. I. officials. With the gradual return of all industries to a peace time basis and the many new and pressing problems up for solution during the reconstruction period, the leaders of the film industry realize the desirability of concerted action and adequate policies to steer safely through the sea of unprecedented conditions which confronts them.

Yet the present prosperity of the industry is great and there seems no reason to doubt but that good management and vision will vastly increase it. At any rate, with the exceptional opportunity the approaching function affords for jubilation it is expected that the gathering at Rochester will attain the proportions of a celebration.

For the past several weeks President William A. Brady of the National Association, Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, and the Chairmen of the big national committees have been preparing annual reports of their activities to be submitted to the members. It can be stated in general that the condition of the Association, from the standpoint of Membership, of finances, and of concrete results obtained during the fourteen months since the last annual meeting, is extremely gratifying and furnishes conclusive evidence of hard work and loyal co-operation on the part of association officers and committeemen.

In addition to the routine reports of officers, executives of the various companies and members generally will be without question pleased at the astonishing success of the committees.

A WARNING TO FILM THIEVES

REPORTS indicate that the newly organized F. I. L. M. clubs are doing their part in suppressing film thievery.

Recently a Fox representative is said to have discovered some of his organization's pictures in the hands of a George Gaukel, manager of a suburban house in Madison, Wis.

Desiring to establish a precedent as a warning to others, prosecution was pushed and Gaukel sentenced to one year at hard labor. With the approval of both sides, he was paroled.

Penna. Censors Blocked Pittsburg Office

It was the members of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors themselves it is said whose opposition prevented the establishment of the proposed branch censorship office in Pittsburgh, which was so much desired for the convenience of film distributors and others in the trade in Western Pennsylvania.

This was made clear on July 21 when Governor Sproul vetoed the Senate bill No. 510 which provided for the establishment of the Pittsburgh branch and the appointment of an inspector and several subordinate employees to be in charge of it.

The result of the veto is that film exchanges in western Pennsylvania will have to continue to send films all the way to the Philadelphia projection rooms of the State Board of Censors to have them passed upon before exhibition. This involves delay which often is damaging, particularly with regard to news pictures which become less valuable for every hour that their approval by the censors is delayed.

TAKE IT—OR LEAVE IT!!

ARIVAL who wishes to succeed to the crown so recently and so tellingly won by Jack Dempsey has risen on the horizon in the person of Elmo Lincoln, Universal serial star and strong man. Here is what the Universal P. A. writes:

"On July 29 Jack Dempsey, the new world's champion heavyweight prize fighter, was challenged to a match for the title by Elmo Lincoln. The challenge was sent by Lincoln by wire and was delivered to Dempsey in Chicago by Sam Hall, sport editor of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, and George De Kruif, the Universal Film Company's publicity manager for Chicago.

"Lincoln, who is 25 years old, is often called the 'Hercules of the Screen.' He was born in Indiana and is a similar type to the present title holder. Although never having been a professional boxer, he has had many fights with some of the best amateur boxers in the country.

"James J. Jeffries, former heavyweight champion, says of Lincoln: 'I have carefully examined Lincoln and see in him the ability to put up a wonderful battle against Dempsey. I am convinced Lincoln has strength and endurance; what we must teach him is speed.'"

Famous-Lasky Signs Authors

Roi Cooper Megrue and Nina Wilcox Putnam Contracted with; Buy Stories

THE signing of contracts with two of the foremost writers of the present day for original photoplays from their pens, and the purchase of the screen rights to two of the best plays of recent years, are among the week's important announcements from the Production Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Roi Cooper Megrue and Nina Wilcox Putnam are the authors and "The Round-up" and "All of a Sudden Peggy" are the plays which have been acquired.

This is the first time that Roi Cooper Megrue, author of some of the most successful plays seen on Broadway during recent years, has entered the motion picture field. The announcement from Famous Players-Lasky states that he will write a new drama for film production, with situations, humor and climaxes specially planned for the cmera.

Simultaneously, Nina Wilcox Putnam is about to write an original photoplay for Famous Players-Lasky, according to the announcement. The best national magazines for some time have been publishing the short stories of this gifted authoress, while her novels include "In Search of Arcady," "The Impossible Boy," "The Little Missioner," "Adam's Garden" and others. The nature of her work is particularly adapted to the production plans of the corporation for the next season.

"The Round-up," by Edward Day, which ran nearly two hundred nights on Broadway in 1907 and is one of the most famous Western melodramas in the history of the American stage, will be produced in picture form on a lavish scale, it is said.

In "All of a Sudden Peggy," which was written by Ernest Denny, it is announced that Marguerite Clark will appear as the star. This will be Miss Clark's fifth subject to be produced in California during her present sojourn there. Walter Edwards will be the director. After this picture is finished Miss Clark will return to the East to resume work at the New York studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

To Represent Keenan

Mr. and Mrs. Fred G. Andrews, formerly of Lily Dale, N. Y. and recently connected with the Roycroft Inn at East Aurora, have signed contracts with Frank Keenan to go to his Los Angeles studio. Mr. Andrews will be Mr. Keenan's personal representative and business manager and Mrs. Andrews will have charge of the scenario department.

Fox Department Heads Hold a Luncheon

The first of a series of luncheons planned to bring the heads of the various departments of Fox Film Corporation in closer touch, was held Tuesday, July 28, in the yacht room of the Hotel Astor.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, presided at the luncheon.

Representatives of the corporation who had just returned from various parts of the country told of the enthusiastic reception Fox pictures are receiving everywhere and expressed the belief that the biggest year in the history of the concern is at hand.

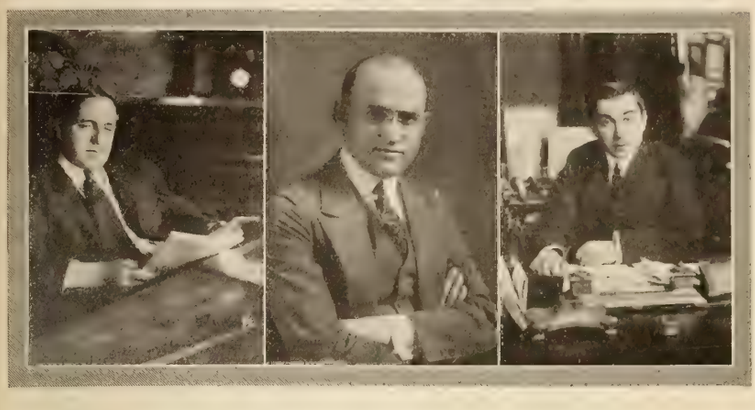
Goldwyn In Epoch-Making Combine

The Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns Will Have Voice and Lend Every Aid in Future; Capitalization Brought to 20 Million

AN alliance, wide in scope and far reaching in possibilities was closed last week whereby Goldwyn Pictures Corporation increases its capitalization from three to twenty million dollars, and the Shuberts and A. H. Woods and the Selwyns, leading theatrical men enter by way of the board of directors. The Shuberts control a good majority of the theatres of the country.

The hundreds of plays produced by these theatrical interests on the stage will now be picturized by Goldwyn. A newspaper campaign to reach every corner of the world is under way. Plans for erection of Eastern studios and a laboratory as large as those of Culver City are being drawn up. Every aid will be given by the Shuberts and Woods in the making, exploiting and distribution of Goldwyn pictures.

Goldwyn has in reality, as well as metaphorically, thrown its hat in the ring and is prepared to go ahead on a far vaster scale than heretofore.



Samuel Goldwyn, center, president, Goldwyn Pictures Corp., and two well known theatrical managers, A. H. Woods, left, and Lee Shubert, right, who are to be directors in that organization

Board of Directors

The new officers of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation are as follows:

President, Samuel Goldwyn; Chairman of the Executive Committee, F. J. Godsol; Vice-Presidents, F. J. Godsol, Moritz Hilder, Lee Shubert, Edgar Selwyn, Abraham Lehr; Treasurer, P. W. Haberman; Secretary, Gabriel L. Hess. Directors: Samuel Goldwyn, F. J. Godsol, Moritz Hilder, Lee Shubert, A. H. Woods, Edgar Selwyn, Henry Ittleson, Jacob Hilder, Harmon August, P. W. Haberman and Gabriel L. Hess.

Seldom has it been the fortune of a producer to surround himself with executives and directors who are so ideally equipped to bring every resource to bear on the making of photoplays of quality. And probably never before has such a tremendous supply of play material been at the disposal of a producer. All of the outstanding successes of the Shuberts, A. H. Woods, and the Selwyns, are now available for the Goldwyn organization, possessing unlimited capital to back any undertaking which may be deemed advisable.

Plays that have been enjoyed by hundreds of thousands of people on the stage, the picture rights to which have been withheld, although many motion picture concerns have tried to secure them, will now be brought to the screen by Goldwyn.

"Potash and Perlmutter," one of the most famous of all stage successes, will probably be among the early Goldwyn productions. Then there are such stage works as "The Woman in Room 13," "Maytime," "Roads of Destiny," "Friendly Enemies," "Tea for Three," "Old Lady 31," and "The Girl in the Taxi," which also are likely to be numbered in the list prepared for early production to mention only a few out of the hundreds of famous plays that may be utilized by the Goldwyn organization.

It is noteworthy that in less than three years, Samuel Goldwyn, starting with one policy—that of producing artistic pictures and handling them in

Sloth Postpones Tax Repeal

Believed Theatres Would Have Been Relieved of Burden But for Inactivity

THE motion picture exhibitors of the country made their demand for relief from unjust war taxes felt in Washington this week. It was felt to such an extent that when a general debate on revenue measures was held in the House the motion picture taxes were thrust forward as one of the tax measures which should receive preferential consideration as objects of immediate repeal legislation.

That the motion picture taxes were mentioned at all during the debate, is due to the campaign that has been waged by the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. It is said only the inactivity of state campaign directors in some of the states which the committee has not heard from prevented the motion picture taxes from becoming part and parcel of the bill to repeal the soda water and ice cream taxes which was passed by the House and is now in the hands of the Senate Finance Committee.

"We the undersigned residents and patrons of the Moving Picture Theatres of Baltimore and state of Maryland do hereby appeal to you to vote for the repeal of Sections 800, 906 and 1001 of the Revenue Bill of 1918 (H. R. 12863) known as the Admission Tax, Increased Seating Tax and five per cent rental tax."

Then followed places for names and addresses.

Efforts are being concentrated this week on the Senate Finance Committee of which Senator Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania is chairman. The plan of the exhibitors' committee is to impress the Senate Committee not only with the strength of the exhibitor but with the justice of his fight and the logical arguments which should give the motion picture taxes preference over the soda water tax or at least include them in the same repeal bill. The members of the Finance Committee are as follows and exhibitors in those states represented on the committee should lose no time in demanding recognition of their demands:

Peter J. McCumber, North Dakota; Reed Smoot of Utah; Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin; William P. Dillingham of Vermont; George P. McLean of Connecticut; Charles Curtis of Kansas; James E. Watson of Indiana; William M. Calder of New York; Howard Sutherland of West Virginia; F. M. Simmons of North Carolina; John Sharp Williams of Mississippi; Charles S. Thomas of Colorado; T. P. Gore of Oklahoma; A. A. Jones, New Mexico; P. G. Gerry of Rhode Island; and John F. Nugent of Idaho.

Miss Mildred Zukor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, whose engagement to Arthur Loew, son of Marcus Loew, is announced

Bessie Love's new feature, "Cupid Forecloses," current Vitagraph release, is in a lighter vein and will offer a pleasing change from the more thrilling and tense plays usually shown on the screen.

EXCHANGES IN NEW ORLEANS IN TROUBLE

MOVING DAY is at hand for the film exchange managers—all of them—of New Orleans, because fire prevention experts and others in charge of public safety have put films in the dangerous list and have insisted that they be kept in special fireproof vaults, so that disasters which have occurred in other cities may not occur in New Orleans.

A few of the exchanges have made definite arrangements to get into new quarters suitably provided with such vaults for the storage of films, but owing to the low rental limit they have set, many of the exchanges face the possibility of being homeless within a few weeks

Theatre Men Merry at Golf Tournament

A theatrical men's golf tournament was held at the Idlewild Country Club, Chicago, Wednesday, July 9th. Among the prominent Chicago theatrical and producing managers were —Peter J. Schaeffer, Nate Ascher, Aaron J. Jones, Adolph Linick, Mort Singer, Harry Singer, Ascher Levy, Sam Kohl, C. S. Humphrey, Tom Carmody, C. J. Freeman, Cal Grifiss, Robert Sherman, Frank Schaefer, Fred Schaefer, Tom Hanks, Harry Mitchell, Tom Powell, Ed Clifford, Ed Rowland, Frank Cassolo, and Coney Holmes.

The final scores are as follows: For thirty-six holes gross, Peter J. Schaefer led with a score of 178. Sam Kohl and Aaron J. Jones registered second with 183. Thirty-six holes net was won by Aaron J. Jones and Sam Kohl, with a 165 score. Ascher Levy came second with 166. Frank Cassolo secured the booby prize for the entire tournament.

Exhibitors and Exchange Men Merge

Theatre Owners and Exchange Men of Northwest Combine Respective Associations Into One Organization at Successful Convention

THEATRE owners and film exchangemen of the northwest in convention at Seattle, July 16th to 18th inclusive, merged their respective association into one organization controlled by a board of ten directors, believing that by such an organization, better service could be given the theatres and the business of the exchange could be carried on to a greater satisfaction to all parties concerned.

Previous to the convention, two organizations existed in the northwest territory and the general convention of film industry people was called by the officers of the two organizations. The plan worked out for such an organization by Harry Sigmond, who has been general council for the Northwestern Film Board of Trade for the past year, provides that the Board of Trade shall continue, as will the exhibitor's organization.

Directors of Board

The business in common of the two organizations will be handled by a board of ten directors, five named by the Film Board of Trade composed of exchange men of Seattle, Portland, and Spokane, and five exhibitors selected at the convention.

Film exchange men, at present, directors of the board of trade who will serve on the executive committee there, are: L. O. Luken, Pathe president; L. M. Cobbs, Vitagraph vice-president; M. Rosenberg, De Luxe Feature Exchange secretary and treasurer; J. A. Koerpel, Goldwyn, and W. J. Drummond, Exhibitors Mutual director.

Each of the four northwestern states will have a representative from the ranks of exhibitors and the director at large will serve as chairman of the board. The directors named by the exhibitors were as follows: Dr. H. S. Clemmer of Clemmer & Hippodrome Theatre, Spokane, chairman; Washington: John Hanrick, Rex theatre, Seattle; Oregon: K. L. Burke, theatre at Baker, Oregon; Montana: Henry Turner, Missula Amusement Company; Idaho: C. C. Spencer of Wallace. Harry Sigmond was selected as general council for the organizations.

The opening session of the convention was held at ten o'clock Thursday, when the motion picture people were welcomed to Seattle by Ole Hanson, the mayor, and there were other addresses by representatives from the leading organizations of the city. L. O. Luken, manager of Pathe Seattle Exchange was selected as chairman for the organization convention and committee to aid in transaction of all work. In the sessions, Thursday afternoon and Friday morning, questions of interest together with proposed resolutions were discussed, and the general scheme for the amalgamation of the exchange and theatre associations gone over in detail. All details pertaining to the constitution and by-laws were worked out by the committees and the convention and these were unanimously adopted at the closing session, Friday afternoon, when the officers were selected.

At the closing session there were two hotly debated questions, one was

AN ANSWER AND A QUESTION

A REPLY to a statement credited to Alfred S. Black, in which he was quoted as asking what the Exhibitors' League has done toward helping to open picture theatres in Utica on Sundays, is given by W. H. Linton of the Hippodrome theatre, Utica. Mr. Linton writes:

"Mr. Black is ill informed when he says that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State has done nothing for Sunday opening in Utica. On the contrary, the exhibitors of Utica have received all the help they have ever needed from the League, and I may say that the help has been most valuable. If Sunday opening is not as yet an accomplished fact in Utica, the cause is to be found in certain local circumstances with which we are now contending and which we eventually hope to control.

"In the meantime, I will thank Mr. Black, who says he represents the Park theatre, if he would use his influence with the management of that theatre to induce them to pay their proportionate share for the expenses incurred in the prosecution of the campaign in Utica."

MOVE TO ABOLISH DAYLIGHT SAVING

IT was announced this week by the Committee on Legislation and Tax of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., that an active canvass of Congress has been begun to enlist the support of every member of the national lawmaking body in repealing the Daylight Saving Law.

The Northwest exhibitors, in convention at Seattle, went on record as opposed to a continuation of daylight saving, and the Committee on Legislation and Tax is in receipt of requests from exhibitors in many sections to take a stand against it.

Wally Reid and Jessen Entertain Portland

J. C. Jesson, Los Angeles representative of Motion Picture News, was in Portland last Sunday accompanying Wallace Reid. Mr. Jesson introduced Mr. Reid to motion picture patrons and during one of his personal appearances at the Columbia theatre nearly got that popular star into trouble. "Mr. Reid wants to give the public what it most desires," said Mr. Jesson in his most gallant manner. "How many would like to hear Wally tell a story." The audience received this suggestion with enthusiasm until Mr. Jesson suggested that Wally might play his violin. But the second hand was as nothing to Mr. Jesson's third suggestion for Mr. Reid to do the shimmy. The house went wild. Wally did it.

The Strand Theatre of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, has been entirely refitted and remodeled. A rest room has been installed together with striking interior decorations. During the coming season it will run the leading releases. H. C. Bull is the manager.

Public Sees "Lost Battalion"

MacManus Production Is About Ready; Premier Takes Place in Hartford

FEW film productions have the pep that Edward A. MacManus claims he has injected into his first big production "The Lost Battalion" which is said to be ready almost for release.

It is not the story of the regeneration of the villain on the battlefield, it is not a war play with battle raging off stage, it is the story of the men who came right from the heart of New York, from the melting pot of the East Side and who learned in the training camp and in the old time villages of France what real romance was, and on the battlefields of France what a terrible thing scientific warfare was.

Major-General Alexander who assisted Mr. MacManus in supervising the production and seeing that the most minor details were beyond official criticism, saw the film again last week in its almost finished state and he was prodigal of the compliments he paid the production, especially the romantic story of "The Lost Battalion" which reveals the life of the doughboy in the training camp at Yaphank and the adventures he had in some of the French villages where he was billeted before going into the trenches and Argonne woods. The real drama, that of the fight in the Argonne, is faithfully reproduced. Here were the "funk" holes that marked the front lines and beyond where Whittlesey and his gallant battalion went into the deadly depths of the forest. General Alexander had the engineers follow the plans that were laid down in the Argonne region, as faithfully for the MacManus reproduction.

"The Lost Battalion" will have its first public showing in Hartford at the Grand theatre.

General Film Bankruptcy Case Statement

The following statement regarding the progress being made in settlement by the Trustee in bankruptcy of the General Film Company has been issued by Louis Weinberger, attorney for the Trustee in bankruptcy:

"The General Film Company, which formerly had its executive offices at No. 25 West 44th Street, this city, and exchanges at No. 729 7th Avenue, New York City, and in 25 other cities throughout the United States, has been adjudicated a bankrupt on the petition of Interstate Film Company, and other creditors represented by my associate, Mr. Sheinart, and myself; the General Film Contracting Company, a subsidiary corporation of the General Film Company, which was organized for the purpose of making the contracts and arrangements with the manufacturers of film distributing through the General Film Company, was also adjudged bankrupt.

"Mr. Asa B. Kellogg, of 115 Broadway, New York City, was appointed receiver in bankruptcy of the General Film Company and of the Contracting Company by Judge A. N. Hand, of the Federal Court in New York; immediately steps were taken by us to return to the manufacturers and owners thereof all film in the possession of the branches of the General Film Company, resulting in a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the creditors of the General Film Company, and particularly to the owners of the film; every effort was made to administer the estate of the bankrupt corporations efficiently and energetically, and by reason of the operations of these corporations extending throughout the whole country it can readily be seen that strenuous work was essential to produce desired results.

"The creditors of the General Film Company and of the General Film Contracting Company expressing their appreciation of the good work done by Mr. Asa B. Kellogg, receiver, unanimously elected Mr. Kellogg trustee in bankruptcy of both corporations. While at the present time it is impossible to give any estimate as to the amount or rate of dividend to creditors, both my associate and myself, as attorneys for the trustee in bankruptcy and also Mr. Kellogg, are leaving no stone unturned in the process of marshaling assets of the bankrupt estate.

"In view of the great amount of detail work required in the administration of the affairs of the General Film Company and the General Film Contracting Company, practically most of my time for the last three months has been devoted to these matters.

"Pursuant to the direction of the trustee, all mail or other matter for the General Film Company or General Film Contracting Company should be addressed c/o Louis Weinberger, attorney, Brokaw Building, No. 1457 Broadway, New York City. (Telephone Bryant 6367)."

Production was started recently at Universal City on Harry Carey's newest western feature. "The Eternal Savage" and "Pay Day" are the tentative working titles being used. Jack Ford is directing.

Millions Invested in New Film Theatres

Country Seething With Big Building Boom and New Playhouses That Will Rival Best in the World Spring Up Like Mushrooms

WITH reports from all sections of the country flowing in concerning erection of new palatial motion picture theatres, or formations of companies for that purpose, the theatre building boom is assuming gigantic proportions.

Announcement of the Allen invasion of this country through the erection of two enormous houses last week, is followed by word from Buffalo of a $1,500,000 venture started; from Ottawa, Canada, of the expenditure of $1,000,000 for the erection and reconstruction of theatres, and similar reports from other cities of big activities.

The Buffalo house, which the Shea Amusement Company is behind, will according to claims, rival any amusement structure in the world. The property has already been bought. A new seating plan will take care of the comfort of 3,500 persons according to the plans.

Shows Advancement

The architecture and decorations of this new Shea Amusement company enterprise will indicate the great strides made in theatrical construction during the past five years. No expense will be spared to make the Metropolitan the most gorgeous and most complete institution of its kind in the country. The installation of every known device and convenience, including several innovations will be included in the plans. The auditorium will be broad rather than deep, bringing even the rearmost seats at a comparatively short distance from the stage. The lighting will be the indirect system in four colors which can be used in any combination. The ventilation will be thoroughly modern, tempered air being brought in from under the seats of the orchestra and the balcony and expelled from the great dome, thus insuring a continuous circulation of fresh air.

Actual construction will commence immediately upon the completion of the plans. Prominent architects are now looking over the site and are in consultation with Shea officials. Representatives are touring the country, visiting the newest theatres in search of every possible innovation that might be provided for the pleasure and comfort of Buffalonians. In all likelihood the new theatre will be under the direct management of Harold B. Franklin, who has in a great measure, been responsible for the big success of Shea's Hippodrome.

Considerable rivalry is reported to have developed between Loew's Ottawa interests and the Canadian United Theatres, Limited, the company which controls the Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, even though the proposed Loew theatre for the Canadian Capital is not yet above street level.

J. Albert Ewart, the Ottawa architect for the Loew Theatre, announced on July 24 that the contract for the construction of the proposed house on the selected downtown site had been awarded to the Bate-McMahon Company. The latter had constructed many of the large war plants in Canada for the Dominion Government. Announcement was also made that the Loew house would cost $400,000, not including the cost of the site. The contract calls for the completion of the work by January 15. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,600 and will be one of the largest in Canada.

Right on the heels of this statement came an announcement by the Canadian United Theatres, Limited, that the Dominion Theatre would be rebuilt, for which work upwards of $250,000 would be spent. The theatre will be enlarged, alterations proposed being sufficient to add 1,000 seats, making the total seating capacity 2,400.

Another Buffalo announcement comes from W. F. McDonald who last week began construction of a $200,000 playhouse on Hartel Avenue between North Park and Norwalk avenue. This will provide entertainment for the 30,000 residents of this district, and is to be on the order of Shea's Hippodrome.

In Milwaukee a deal is on whereby the Gayety and Merrill theatres will be combined. The wall between will be removed and a hippodrome style theatre result providing a seating capacity of 3,200. The deal will involve approximately $1,000,000, and remodeling will start in September.

Second of Eminent Authors to Begin Collaboration in Filming Writings

GERTRUDE ATHERTON has left New York for Culver City, California, in behalf of her first picture for Eminent Authors, based on her novel of Montana life called "Perch of the Devil." She will go to the Goldwyn studios to go over the scenario now in preparation by the regular staff under J. G. Hawks, chief scenario editor at Culver City, and will have an author's part in the selecting of the cast and the preparation of the production.

A second Gertrude Atherton picture will also be brought to the fore during her stay there, but the novelist is obliged to return to New York in August to fulfill various engagements with current periodicals. After that she plans to return for the second production, and then launch the writing of a new novel, a subject of the present day in America that is very much on her mind. This novel will also be adapted for Eminent Authors pictures.

With the train bearing Rupert Hughes to the Pacific Coast only one day ahead of the one bearing Mrs. Atherton, it is an established fact that Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach were right when they said the authors would actually co-operate in the production of the motion pictures. Few could believe that novelists whose works are valued at so much a word would find time or inclination to go over the adaptation of their novels to the screen, and here two authors have already gone far beyond that, crossing the continent to consult in the studios with the Goldwyn staff.

Postpone F. I. L. M. Club Organization

The committee recently appointed to consider ways and means for organizing the F.I.L.M. Clubs and branch managers' associations into a national body as an integral part of the Distributors' Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held its first meeting on July 11th. President William A. Brady was present at the meeting, which was presided over by Lewis Innerarity, Secretary of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., as Chairman. Every member of the Committee, which comprises the following, was present, in addition to Chairman Innerarity: William A. Brady, Al Lichtman, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.; L. S. Levin, Fox Film Corp.; Wm. Wright, Vitagraph, Inc.; Felix Feist, Goldwyn Pictures Corp.; Charles C. Pettijohn, Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corp.; Frederick H. Elliott, secretary.

After carefully considering the situation and receiving reports from many of the F.I.L.M. Clubs throughout the country, it was decided to defer action on the nationalizing of the F.I.L.M. Clubs until after the annual meeting of the National Association, which is to be held in Rochester on August 5th and 6th.

Goldwyn in An Epoch-Making Deal

a way that would mean a profit for the exhibitor—has brought his concern to a foremost place in the ranks of picture organizations. In the face of many difficulties brought about by the war, and later by the influenza epidemic, which nearly proved the ruination of so many picture companies, he has succeeded in building up a producing and distributing corporation of limitless scope.

Progress has been steady, and each step has been carefully considered, with a definite end in view. At the present time the roster of stars comprises Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Tom Moore, Madge Kennedy and Will Rogers. Then, not long ago, Mr. Goldwyn secured for motion picture production, all of the works by Rex Beach, Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott, known as the Eminent Authors.

Distribution facilities have been so perfected that Goldwyn pictures are shown in every country of the world. In the United States there are twenty-two exchanges, exclusive of the New York Exchange, and each exchange is supplied with exploitation experts working on a system devised to aid exhibitors, such as has never before been conceived in the industry.

Now that the doors of the literary storehouses of the Shuberts, A. H. Woods and the Selwyns are thrown open to the scenario writers and directors on the Goldwyn staff, the same policy of care in selecting the material best suited to screen purposes will be followed. Dramas, melodramas, comedies and farces that have proven their value on the stage will be converted into photoplays during the months and years to come, every resource of the finely perfected studio system utilized in the turning out of photoplays that will set a new mark. It is figured that there will be enough work to keep the extensive Culver studios and those to be erected in the East going at their full capacity.

A. H. Woods has grouped around himself the greater part of the active playwrights of today, and has produced many successes. The list of plays staged by Mr. Woods includes, "The Song of Songs," "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," "The Guilty Man," "His Bridal Night," "Innocent," "He Comes Up Smiling," "Why Worry," "Where Poppies Bloom," "Roads of Destiny," "The Big Chance," "Friendly Enemies," "Up In Mabel's Room," "Potash and Perlmutter," and many others.

The Shubert supply of stage successes is as varied as it is numerous, including such famous works as "Maytime," "A Little Journey," "39 East," "Eyes of Youth," "Sleeping Partners," "Mary's Ankle," "Blind Youth," "Fanny's First Play," "The Fear Market," "The Family," "The Fugitive," "The Guilty Man," "The Hawk," "Old Lady 31," "Pierrot The Prodigal," "Saturday to Monday," "The Torches," and the "Wooing of Eve."

The Selwyns also have many plays that have proved their popularity. Among them "The Crowded Hour," "Tea for Three," "Twin Beds," "The Money Makers," "Lilac Time," "Double Exposure," "Why Marry," and "Under Fire."

The comprehensive plans instituted by the Goldwyn Company include a selection of plays calculated to give Goldwyn exhibitors a perfectly balanced variety of screen entertainment in which the elements of drama comedy and romance will be well mingled.

ZUKOR BECOMES DIRECTOR IN STANLEY COMPANY

AT THE first meeting of the Stanley Company of America in Philadelphia, the concern recently incorporated for $15,000,000, and of which Jules E. What this would indicate was not hinted at, Mr. Mastbaum declaring merely that the company proposes to extend its business by buying existing houses, leasing or building new ones, wherever there is an unsatisfied demand for first class photoplay entertainment.

Letters from Readers

Suggests Improvements on Star Series Plan

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

I see quite a little said, pro and con, about the star series plan, and also the single picture policy of booking pictures.

I have never seen a contract yet that gave the exhibitor any consideration whatever, although I can say that most of the exchange managers have always given me a square deal.

Of course I am opposed to the single picture policy, but I also think the star series plan could be improved upon. We will take the six Anita Stewart pictures that have and are being produced under First National management, for instance, "Virtuous Wives" was the first, and was a very fine picture from every standpoint. "Midnight Romance" was the second and while not nearly so good as the first release, it got by all right, but "Mary Regan" (the third of the series) is not worth one-tenth part as much as "Virtuous Wives," yet I have to take it and pay the same price for it I did for the first two. It will be hard for me to get Anita Stewart back to "Virtuous Wives" standing after playing "Mary Regan."

The star series plan is all right if the exhibitor has the privilege of cancelling out such pictures as Mary Regan, but I do not think I should have to use any picture that will lose money for me, or either "kill the star" on her or his next picture.

Yours very truly,
J. O. MERCHANT,
Prop. Isis Theatre,
Alice, Texas.

Exhibitor Who Is Money-Dripping Hour Glass

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

"What are we going to do about it?" is the question we West Virginia exhibitors have been asking ourselves for some time now, and that the News had taken the stand that it has given us some encouragement to battle for our rights which have been completely taken away from us in this exchange field (Cincinnati).

I am only one of the many who have been set upon and done to death. I do not say that all the exchanges in Cincinnati have acted unfair, on the other hand some of them have been forced into this click or "Raid Rule" gang, who lett to themselves will treat the exhibitor as a fellow man doing an honest business.

You will permit me to state some of my experiences of late date and then you will judge as to the merits of a "kick" on this "Raid Rule" gang. "With the Paramount or Famous Players-Lasky Corp." I have, on three accounts, money deposited to the amount of nearly $150. A few days ago or when the new rules went into effect they sent me a statement that I owed them $19.33 and that the service would not be shipped until I paid same. I sent them this amount and also a check for the service that I was to use that week, and then I sent the second weeks' check and then they sent me a "special picture" that I had not booked and did not want, because it was of no value to my people at this late date and billed me for it at a price four times what I was to pay for service, and demanded that I pay for it when I did not weeks' service and received one picture to use it. I then sent to them for the third date and now they insist that I owe them $19.50.

Recently this same exchange made a contract with me for a certain service, and required a deposit of $15 which I gave the salesman. After a period of some two months without receiving a single picture on this contract I got a notice of cancellation at once for "various reasons satisfactory to themselves" and they failed to return the money deposited on same. I immediately wrote the Cincinnati exchange about the matter and I have not as yet heard a word from them on the subject, though it has now been two weeks since.

The Universal Film Exchange has $125 of my money deposited on one picture and I am unable to get a square deal out of them; they also have other moneys deposited on other pictures which they will not give me dates on because of the dispute on this other picture.

What are we to do?

A Word to the Press Agents

Omaha, Neb., July 22, 1919.

W. J. Johnston, Editor,
Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.

My Dear Johnston:

You can publish this or tear it up after reading it, but it had to come out after reading your editorial this week in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS about "The Boss."

First of all, I am one of those exchange managers that you hear so much about today, but I am working for one man in this business who is right here on the job with me in the territory but for ten years previous to my present connection I had the experience of working for New York film corporations.

I can truthfully say with the experience I have had not only in this territory with exhibitors but many other territories that more bunko and dope is handed out by a lot of companies in New York who would be press agents to the exhibitors than you or anyone else in New York can realize. There is only one man who knows and he is the exhibitor. I wish you could see the unopened mail on some exhibitors' desks in theatres I have visited, not only in the smallest towns but the largest. (Uncle Sam is getting rich from the picture game.)

The average so-called press agent you see for some of the finest pictures made unfolds a lot of stereotype matter that any newspaper office boy would throw in the waste basket. For instance, some of these fellows in the press departments sit back there and look over the stills, read the story then see the film and start in to rehash ideas telling how to put the picture on, what to use, how to fix up the lobby, dress up the ushers and decorate the newspapers. It all appears to me as if they sit there dreaming up a lot of damnfoolishness to make a hit with the big boss and draw their salary and then look around the Home Office for comment on their clever ideas.

Let one of these so-called dope writers get out into the mines and see how their stuff is handled and he will sneak back into New York with a guilty conscience that he has helped to increase the cost of white paper and used a lot of Uncle Sam's valuable time. If the average exhibitor went to a newspaper office and even asked the editor to insert some of the copy written by these fellows, the newspaper editor would laugh and take it out on the exhibitor as being a damn fool, but from past experience the exhibitor knows this condition and does not pay much attention these days to the dope sent out, but reads his little old Bible (MOTION PICTURE NEWS) and gets more practical information therefrom on how other exhibitors do it than all the stuff he could read in a month in the so-called press sheets.

I find that the best press sheet is the one with proper illustrations from the play, with an effective line of advertising cuts of the scenes with commercial value. In addition to illustrations of the various styles of paper, slides, novelties, etc., and about four lines of well meant wording hashed down to be easily and quickly read, but you can bank on it that the real ideas and material used generally today is the stuff that's written in the NEWS Exhibitor Service Bureau by other exhibitors.

I often wonder if the New York press writers ever had any actual experience running a theatre or writing practical copy. I doubt it. If they did some of them are certainly in the right position today, as they couldn't last long in practical theatre operation if they followed their methods and copies sent out to exhibitors.

Mind you, W. A. J., this is not meant for everybody but particularly those who are sending the majority of copy through the mails. In other words, known as the "bright boys" in this game who presumably know it all when it comes to theory.

If some of these fellows could only make a trip into the territory and see how the exhibitor goes to work and prepares his copy, he would soon learn that everything depends on local conditions.

I contend that press material should be prepared on a broad scale, but minimize the copy and accentuate the illustrations. Most generally every bit of press matter pulled today in the film business is localized with the exception of the newsy material that a picture affords, but I believe the "boss" ought to know that the stunts and general advertising matter constitutes a local situation and must be handled as such.

Six years ago, while working for a New York corporation I argued for a publicity man to localize copy and work with exhibitors on their bookings. It was "too expensive." But today the exchange that is getting anywhere at all, is the one that has a capable newspaper man with sales experience who will take the bookings and work with each exhibitor individually by studying local conditions. What is better for an exhibitor than to receive from his own exchange a rattling good idea of a stunt or advertising copy that is just suitable for his local situation?

To the "bosses" in New York—here is a good tip. Cut out the expensive mailing habit of indigestible copy or press matter and put your exploitation man on the job in the exchange and give the exhibitor real service for his money, and above everything else SUBSCRIBE FOR THE LOCAL NEWSPAPERS IN THE BEST TOWNS IN THE TERRITORY AND MAKE YOUR EXPLOITATION MAN STUDY THEM AND FAMILIARIZE HIMSELF WITH THAT PARTICULAR TOWN'S WAY OF DOING THINGS.

What is better and what can appeal to an exhibitor more than to receive a letter from his exchange that has the water marks of a perfect knowledge of what is going on in his town? For instance, there are always many leads of interest forthcoming in local small town newspapers that would furnish the exchange exploitation man with ideas for the local would furnish the exchange exploitation man with ideas for the local exhibitor that that particular exhibitor is blind to.

What's the use of going further? There is only one answer: "If you show a duck water he will swim."

Yours very sincerely, appear that Pickford, Chaplin, Nazimova and Fairbanks were being shown on one bill, consequently everyone will begin to read about this wonderful program. Then they find out that it announces a "Louisville made movie" with amateurs taking the parts. That is about all that could be expected on a proposition of this kind, so we should say that the whole thing is mighty good.

Some are exhibitors and some are showmen. There is a difference.

THIS two-column, 10-inch display of the Doric theatre, Kansas City, was the only one of a lot of good ads, but we selected it because it had an "exclusive" appearance that is mighty good.

In the first place this is the sort of display that carries an "atmosphere" of the attraction it exploits.

You know the kind of stuff which H. B. Warner does. He impresses you as a gentleman—a man of unusual refinement, and this ad is refined. There is nothing loud about it. With the exception of the two cuts of the desert, top and bottom, this is all typeset and can be duplicated anywhere. If you are going to play "The Man Who Turned White" cut this out and save it for your own showing. It is a sample of the best in every way. From selling talk to border it is correct, a dignified bid to the people of Kansas City to see Mr. Warner in his latest production.

Advertising is like some women. It never stops talking.

THIS display is from the Sioux Falls Press and is three columns by ten inches. If it were not for the fact that the "Anita Stewart" line is crowded and of too large a size we would say that this was a good example of advertising for the average program feature.

The cut selected is one furnished by the producer and the suggestion of "Justice" properly belong in a police story.

The personal guarantee at the top is "old stuff," but then it can always be found of use.

"The Greatest Police Story Ever Written" is a bit extravagant too and "great" might better have been used in place of "greatest."

Still the whole display catches the eye and invites inspection.

Some men have greatness thrust upon them but exhibitors achieve it only by honest and intelligent effort.

THIS quarter page display of the Princess, Toledo, Ohio, isn't especially artistic, but it is a good, straightforward announcement of what is to be expected at this theatre for the week beginning July 13th, the date the ad was published in the Toledo Times.

If the Princess hadn't had Charles Murray and the "Sennett Beauties," which it wanted to play up big, we would have said some selling talk about the feature picture should have been added and too, there is some doubt as to the advisability of wording the comedy bill announcement—in just the way it is here.

The Princess has properly displayed the names of the stars, especially if Wally Reid is popular in Toledo, and the cut, secured from the Exchange, carries out the idea that "You're Fired," is a romantic comedy.

There is plenty of white space which relieves the somewhat bold type used. There are more "caps" used than we like to see and we think it would have been better to have set "In their latest photoplay" and "The first time these two prominent stars have been seen together" in lower case.

Let your light so shine—on the screen that people will recognize that your projection is the best in town.

WE ARE selecting this one for two reasons. One that it is a mighty fine example of artistic advertising of the hand drawn type and another that it shows another big city theatre which isn't afraid to bring the good ones back after they are on the shelf as far as most theatres are concerned.

We will say very little about the artistic way this ad has been laid out, for it is one that few theatres can duplicate for the reason that few of them employ an artist.

However, the reading matter is worth commenting on and that is something that anyone may borrow. If you are thinking of playing this Mae Marsh picture again, better keep this page in mind and turn to it, when you get ready to bill "Polly of the Circus."

This display was taken from the Atlanta (Ga.) American, issue of July 20th. It was three columns by 8 inches.

Just knowing a picture is good won't bring a long waiting line at your box office if you keep the information to yourself.

WE haven't seen "Bolshevism on Trial," so don't know what it is about and therefore can not judge as to the producers claim that the feature is a lesson rather than the sensational type of production the title suggests. However, we are inclined to think if we were in the exhibiting end of this film game we would go after business just the way the Alcazar of Birmingham, Ala., has: make the advertising as sensational as the title of the production.

This three-column, 18-inch display certainly looks as if it had come straight from Petrograd and it may not be artistic, but you can bet that the people who would be interested in Bolshevism, I. W. W.'s and the rest of the Socialistic "'ism's," read this ad and came to see the picture.

If they were disappointed in that Labor did not crucify Capital every hundred feet of the film it isn't the fault of the manager of the theatre and he still has their money. Besides, if the picture is what the producers claim for it maybe these "nuts" might find a lesson in it.

Anyway, we can't imagine anything any more "artistically horrible" than this one and must admit that the artist who designed the display made his appear in a way that should "get 'em in" and that is exactly what any manager who books this picture must consider when he decides to play it. We don't care if the picture itself is the most impressive story ever filmed, it's appeal is to those who form that ever-increasing group of restless, dissatisfied souls who believe that everything in the world is wrong because they can't live without working and those are the people who are coming to see it.

What Live Wires Are Doing

At that the sales talk at the left is good, clean, logical stuff and asks a real question of national importance.

When someone thinks you have made a mistake in your booking don't tell him he is crazy—tell him you are sorry.

HERE is a little single-column, 4-inch display that we offer as a fine example of small space advertising. There is quite a lot of reading matter for so small a display, but it doesn't look crowded and it is quite properly balanced. Mr. Salisbury's name is brought into prominence in a very novel way. It looks good and in style is worth remembering. It has been a long time when so much of real value set in so small a space has come to our attention.

The Alhambra is located at St. Paul, Minn., and this display was taken from the St. Paul Pioneer of July 13th.

Big oaks may grow from little acorns but big box office returns have never been built on "little" pictures.

WE do not call this especially good, but it was better than the other displays of the Syracuse, N. Y., theatres and we are selecting it as we want every part of the country represented in this department. The big trouble with this three-column, seven-inch display is that it is not large enough for the three cuts and the amount of reading matter which has been supplied.

There should have been space enough so the talk about the Ray picture at the left of the top portion of the Semon cut could have been shoved up somewhat.

We think the Larry Semon billing is too large, unless this comedian is especially popular in Syracuse. However, with an inch more space over the two columns and giving the title line of the Ray picture a larger point, this would have been a good, fair display.

Make your theatre "a home" for everything but crying babies.

THIS quarter page is from the Topeka, (Kan.) Times of July 20th. As a specimen of the type of display for this type of picture we consider it excellent. It is pretty bold and the black border, which this department usually tabooes is used, but on the whole it probably did what the copy management expected it to accomplish—attract the people who want to see a picture which purports to contain a moral lesson (for everyone but themselves) and which might contain some sequences which are a bit risque.

The selling talk in this doesn't give a hint as to how the story is handled or what it really is about, but that is not necessary or advisable. The appeal of this picture is to the patron's curiosity and enough has been told in this ad to do that very thing if people are inclined to be curious, and most of us are.

There is one slip in the line just above the last display. "Married persons contemplating marriage" is something unusual, unless one is a Mormon, and Uncle Sam has put this sect on the black list.

Here is a very good cut for a feature of this sort. There is always an appeal in a picture of Old Father Time and his scythe and of the scales of Justice, which attracts the attention. The "Don't Get Married" line is crowded a bit too closely to the line above and would have looked better set in the same type as the two sentences above and used with it. If the Cozy had said "Call A Halt—Think it Over—Don't Get Married" and then jumped to the line beginning "Until you see" it would have improved this display.

God hates a liar and people who go to shows lose confidence in a theatre which lies about its entertainment.

give a comedy star equal billing with the dramatic star in small space—if you are going to use cuts.

Here we have two ads in one and the result is not any too artistic.

If the cut of Miss Dalton had been a front view instead of a profile we think this would have looked better. The Strand is located at Omaha, Neb., and this display is from the Bee, issue of July 20th.

pat ourselves on the back on any and all occasions, we do not think that the trade journals mean very much to the public and would therefore suggest that it would have been better to have placed some good strong selling talk in the space occupied by "Read What They Say."

Giving Mr. Sullivan prominence in the billing is correct. His name means a good deal to fans who have seen so many of his pictures which were good. "Sahara," of course, is entitled to the headline billing and the players' names who are given equal prominence here, we should say was good judgment. Matt Moore and Edwin Stevens are both well known and having good roles are entitled to as much space in the billing as the star.

The "washed air" probably has been given enough publicity previously so that this is sort of a trademark used by the Majestic.

As a whole this is a good display. Columbus advertising as a rule is well above the average in quality anyway.

Don't hire a man who never makes mistakes. He is so slow he never will get anything done.

HERE is a little three-column, four-inch ad of the Majestic theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, which we have selected because it illustrates the correct way to use black rule and for the reason that it is rather unique in design. We wouldn't reccommend this sor of style for a steady thing, but for a change it is good

The sign board idea is well put over, for the reason that the perspective has been correctly estimated in the framing of th rule angles.

If the Majestic had attempted to use much reading matter they would have failed with this, but as it stands, it goes for good display of an unusual design. The selling power is, of course, all centered on the stars' names and the titles of the two pictures. Here is another case where equal billing of comedy and dramatic picture is justified, even though the Chaplin offering is a re-issue. A Chaplin is a "Chaplin" and his admirers go to see him regardless of whether they have seen the picture before.

To begin with it is the cut of Ray which lifts this out of the common place class. The eye instantly catches this very good likeness of the Ince star and is then attracted to the billing of the star and title. The selling talk while not particular strong is in keeping with the style of stuff which people have come to expect in a Ray production. As a suggestion we should say that it would have been better to have left the words "who digs into your soul and says," etc., out entirely and shoved all the matter concerning the feature up about a half-inch, thereby giving the announcement of the other numbers on the bill more prominence. The Globe is located at New Orleans and this display was published in the Item of July 13th.

of screen entertainment and that it is well balanced from top to bottom.

Two cuts from the producers have been used to excellent advantage.

The explanatory matter under the "Today-tomorow," while not exactly selling talk, does give the reader a comprehensive idea of what to expect in this production.

The Rivoli has rightly featured the musical angle of this production and left plenty of white space. This ad. might have been improved somewhat if the Rivoli had wanted to go to the bother of cutting a mortise within the black circle of the second "Oh Boy" cut and utilizing the space secured for some mention of the balance of the bill. It really isn't so much work to do a trick like the one suggested as would be supposed. This was taken from the Rocky Mountain News published at Denver.

A straight line is the shortest distance between two points and square dealing is the only road to permanent success.

THIS display of the New Strand, Milwaukee, was four columns by four and one-half inches, and in the original presented a very classy appearance at the top of the page of the Milwaukee Sentinel of July 20th.

We do not see that calling attention that Miss Pearson has been absent from the Strand for over a year adds anything to the attractiveness or pulling power of this display and we would have used the space for the line referred to for anouncement of the engagement dates as we assume that the Strand is not making a daily change. We would also have dispensed with the two lines beginning with the words, "A picture which—" as it doesn't add anything of value to the display. The elimination of this sentence would have given opportunity to drop all the matter after the first line and would have relieved that crowded look the display now has. Miss Pearson's name is rightly billed above the title of the production in that the title of itself is of no particular significance and Miss Pearson is one of the stars who has made a lot of personal screen friends who will not need to be told that she is again to be presented at the Strand. The cut at the right came up very well.

If a film salesman reports that your competitor will pay more than you think the picture is worth—see if it is a bluff.

IF it were not for this "Futurist" idea stuff that the producers choose to use for the characters in many of the cuts furnished on "Mary Regan," we would say that this was a very good display. There is a nice balance to the ad. and the part of the cut showing Miss Stewart's face and figure registers very well.

It perhaps would have been just as well to have used some selling talk in place of the reading matter devoted to telling how great a success the fiction form of this story has been, but in as much as there is great value in letting people know when a picture is from a popular book this at least passes as good stuff. Then too if the words "Mary Regan" had been set in something less bold it would have looked a bit more refined and still attracted the attention.

how much material they wish to display. It also sticks to the style of border shown in this reproduction.

The specimen we have selected here was the best one in the lot and in fact is quite good for an all type ad. and necessarily cuts can not be used to any extent if only one column is to be utilized.

Some of the displays were very bad especially those full column in depth. We wish we might show you one of these full length displays so you could see what we intend to teach in reproducing this one, but the reproduction would be deeper than our page so this is impossible .

Now if the display shown is good while the longer ones are bad it would go to prove that for a one-column display about eight inches is all that can be used and have the ad. balance.

Consequently, let us assume that the Gaiety's "different" ads. are not good beyond a certain depth and when it wants to use extra space it should double it's width and not it's depth.

The reproduction of lines from the book in this one we think to be excellent selling argument. There is noth-the big "heart," that could not be improved upon. Of course, a large part of the material for this display is from the exchange and as this department only intends criticising the work of the exhibitor, we will pass the cut with only the remark that it is good and confine our efforts to the balance of the ad.

The selling talk is rather full of adjectives but the production will live up to the claims made for it and therefore this excess of verbiage is excusable. We see nothing to criticise and much to praise in this ad.

Dead men tell no tales, nor do they succeed in the motion picture theatre.

THE new Chaplin's today aren't just comedies. They are "Chaplins" and pretty nearly everybody knows that when an exhibitor books one he has had to come across with more money than he would for an ordinary feature, so the Princess of Wichita, Kansas, did the correct thing when it gave Sunnyside and Chaplin the best end of the three column by twelve display which was used on this bill.

There is another reason also why it is probably justifiable to let "The Final Closeup" slide by with passing mention. Shirley Mason with most exhibitors has never got her head up above the average and this feature is one that probably the Princess has been trying to get out of the way so it was put on the bill with a headline attraction. The result is a good bill, well balanced, with Chaplin getting the major portion of the business and "The Final Close-Up" rounding out a pleasing program.

There is one thing we call attention to as very good, and that is the way the "big double bill" sentence has been brought out. The following doesn't apply in this case for this is not a double bill so far as length is concerned, but when one is foolish enough to play two five-reel features on the same bill get that fact into your advertising so it will show. There are some people you know who like to go to a show that lasts all night and part of the next day so you want to let them know when you have a bargain day for them.

Once in the while someone puts one over on a "shoestring" but we like to see some capital back of a project. Moral—Don't get out where the water is too deep.

WE DON'T want to monopolize this department with displays of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, but this one is so good as an example of correct advertising, on a return engagement, that we are reproducing it for your inspection. Again there is plenty of white space which the light rule breaks up just enough to keep it from being "glaring."

Beginning with the cut of Miss Pickford, which is correctly placed, we get into the announcement. The first four lines tell you what the picture did on the first playing, and this is good stuff, for "nothing succeeds like success."

Then the name of the star and the title of the picture. Pickford headlined above the title. Right again. Then the little story of why the Princess brought the feature back. Excellent. Can't be improved upon. This was 12 inches, three columns.

"Sink or swim" should now be written on every picture released.

THIS is a full half page from the Winnipeg Evening Tribune of July 12th. It must have cost the Starland a pretty penny and we should say a good deal of this money has been wasted.

In the first place we hope that the Starland is not a house that has to "bally-hoo" two serials at the same time and if it does how can it afford to purchase so much space.

We haven't anything against serials, but we should hate to have a house which depends entirely on them to build permanent business, and for that reason we think the Starland is all wrong in it's style of advertising.

To begin with that "Halt" belongs to the days of the store show. Next "The Red Glove," billed above a good feature and in such a glaring, extravagant manner as this is far from being good advertising.

How much better it would have been to have used a good cut of Miss Dean, billed the title of the feature in a good extended type say about 60-point, using three lines for this at the side of the cut and with Miss Dean's name over both cut and title in a smaller size letter of the same design?

Then if you want to give the first number of "The Red Glove" a boost go to it with a little story which will explain about the new production.

Boys, this is bad in every way. Too much space purchased for what was to be said, poorly constructed reading matter badly displayed and with too many "caps" used. There really isn't much use of reproducing this kind except to show you what not to do.

"Let a Little Ray of Sunshine In" your theatre every chance you get.

NOW why did the chap who furnished the copy for this three-column 8-inch display want to stick that "Other Doin's" in this one?

If he had used two short lines to mention the rest of the Palace program, using the same style followed above, this would have been ideal for an ad where the appeal is staked on the title of the picture and the star's name, and it would also have been most attractive because it has so much white space.

But perhaps this is merely our personal viewpoint, and there are many exhibitors who will believe that the "Other Doin's" is a catchy little touch calculated to arouse curiosity where a bare announcement of the balance of the program would fall flat.

Gosh, who couldn't feel cool as they entered the lobby of the New Victoria, Buffalo

Still Another Way of Beating That "Hot Weather Jinx" Comes from Buffalo

SUMMER heat waves never put a crimp in the box office figures at the New Victoria theatre, Buffalo, for Manager Bruce Fowler knows how to cool off the hottest weather, at least in the vicinity of his theatre.

Recently when Old Sol was burning up everything in sight around the city, when patrons were wearing ice on their heads and industriously waving fans in an effort to live through it, Mr. Fowler struck upon a happy idea. If patrons thought of nothing but the heat, why not make them think about what a fine life the Eskimos were living up in the land of the Aurora Borealis?

With this idea in view, Mr. Fowler began at once to suround his house with "that cool atmosphere."

The front of the Victoria he transformed into what might look like the entrance to one of the igloos in Iceland. Around the large frames announcing his current attraction he put another frame, prepared by his artist, of snow and ice, which even if it was made of beaver board and mica powder to produce the effect of glistening snow and ice, looked enough like the real thing to make patrons forget all about the heat as soon as they saw it.

Any exhibitor can use this refrigerating plant—and it doesn't cost much

Across the entrance to the lobby he placed a reproduction of hanging icicles and repeated the idea around the large frame that hangs over the entrance to the theatre. At the top of all this frigid display there are the words "COOL AND COMFORTABLE."

Who could resist the interior when the exterior was so attractive. The box office showed that few could.

The "summerizing" idea was not stopped at the front of the house. As patrons proceeded through the lobby into the theatre they came upon a delightful furnished rest room, fitted in the latest style wicker furniture, which Mr. Fowler used to replace the mahogany fittings of the fall and winter. Ferns in the corner and a large wicker floor lamp gave Old Sol the knockout blow and when patrons sat down in the house itself and caught the breeze from a hundred electric fans, the effect was complete, fans were dropped, and patrons really began to enjoy themselves.

The ice bound front of the Victoria has brought forth much favorable comment from patrons not only in the vicinity of the house but from many parts of the city and Manager Fowler feels well repaid for his efforts in helping to make his audiences forget about the performances of the thermometer.

Minneapolis Exhibitors Capitalize Swedish and Norwegian Scenics

Selecting your pictures with an idea of giving them a local interest is displaying real showmanship. You not only get an audience attracted to your theatre from the entertainment viewpoint, but you also get one which comes especially to see the stuff which carries a special appeal.

Manager William F. Vance of the New Lyric, Minneapolis, has utilized this idea to advantage by booking the series of nineteen one-reel Swedish scenics distributed by Exhibitors Mutual and featuring them with his regular five- and six-reel dramas in all advertising. Minneapolis boasts a Swedish population of about 25 per cent and by advertising these special one-reelers in the local dailies and laying stress on them in two local Swedish newspapers Mr. Vance has been able to develop a considerably enlarged clientele. Manager Julius K. Johnson of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, is running a series of Norwegian scenics in natural colors, and is also enjoying increased patronage as a result.

When Is a Stunt Really a Boomerang for the Theatre Manager?

THE Oregon Journal, Portland, Ore., recently printed the following story:

CLASSIFIED AD. DREW MANY COOKS

WANTED—A cook, $100 a month, every afternoon off; use of family car on Sunday. Call Majestic Theatre, and see Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven.

This little "want ad." appearing in the classified columns of the Journal during the week, has been the source of wonderment, fun and—business.

The "ad." is worded the same as an ad. appearing in a newspaper on the screen in a scene of "Their Day of Rest," a Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven comedy feature at the Majestic Theatre, and Manager Frank Lacey, seeing opportunity for a bit of a joke and an opportunity to test out the pulling qualities of the Journal's classified department, had it published. The result was spontaneous. He has been deluged with answers, in person, by telephone and by mail. The letters, many of them, have been real gems, and Lacey is saving them to be forwarded in a bundle to his film distributing company.

Now this was a good little story as far as the Journal was concerned. It gave the paper a chance to "pat itself on the back" and call attention to what an excellent advertising medium its pages are but how about the theatre which originated the idea and was responsible for the want ad. insertion?

There is no doubt but that the Majestic received publicity through the stunt, free publicity at that, but is it the right kind of publicity?

The newspaper story mentions later that some of the applicants for this "good job" went away "peeved." Do you blame them?

Cooks as a rule are not people who have a whole lot of time to waste, nor can they be expected to be blessed with a sense of humor which would make them see spending an afternoon to call at this treatre, only to find they have been the victim of an "advertising scheme," as a joke.

Now if the Journal had not printed a story about the result of the want ad. insertion probably very few people in the city of Portland would have known anything about the hoax and consequently only those who called would have had an opportunity to ask themselves if this wasn't rather a shabby trick. As it was a whole city read the story and instantly in every mind came the thought that this wasn't "fair."

Yes, this was good publicity—for the newspaper but mighty poor advertising for the theatre.

Newspaper and Exhibitor Tie-up in Boosting Bill Hart

Tie-ups in the shape of motion picture advertising that serve to localize the message of the advertisement have long been considered one of the most effective means of conveying an argument to the public. This method of advertising was employed to good advantage by Mr. Thomas, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Nebraska, when he presented William S. Hart in the Artcraft picture "The Money Corral."

A series of stories had been running in the Omaha Daily News entitled "Bill Hart—the Boy's Friend." These had been illustrated with cuts showing Hart in the various acts of explaining to boys the art of handling a gun, the correct methods of mounting a horse and wielding a lasso.

When "The Money Corral" was booked to play at the Rialto, Mr. Thomas took a six column advertisement in the Daily News, including some of the illustrations from the series previously run with a mention of the series.

"Your magazine is a good one and has improved wonderfully in the last year or two."—Richard Stewart, Sherman, Texas.

Teamwork Surely Needed in Store Cooperation

Stuart Gould, Motion Picture Editor of the Omaha Bee, Writes the Following Advice to Exhibitors Contemplating Cooperative Advertising

THE glib, promising film salesman—he places his hand on your knee and stage whispers it to you: "Say, do you want to make a lot of money?" Or mayhap its the breezy press agent, with this: "I've got one now where the town merchants will do all your advertising."

It can't be done, fellows. And the man who knows it now is the tried and true exhibitor—the guy that used to fall for almost any old price on a film if he thought he could get a lot of advertising for nothing. And the reason we aver that it can't be done is just this: YOU'VE GOT TO GIVE THE MERCHANT WHO CO-OPERATES A RUN FOR HIS MONEY—MAKE HIM SEE THE DOLLARS AND CENTS TO HIM.

We've tried both kinds on the Omaha Bee, the kind where the merchants got their share and the kind where all they received was a bill for so much space used and from the newspaper's point of view the only kind that tends towards constructive advertising, and towards profitable to the paper and future advertising, is the kind where the merchant got just as much out of it as the exhibitor, or as the newspaper. Our only apology for the ones that didn't work out is that they looked good at the start.

Enrico Caruso in "My Cousin" was the picture that taught the lesson of making the merchant like it. It was booked at the Rialto Theatre, where H. M. Thomas, a live exhibitor and a big advertiser was manager. I proposed to Thomas that he take a quarter page ad and I would persuade the A. Hospe firm to put in a window display and take another quarter page ad on Caruso's records on the Victrola. In return Thomas was to place a couple of Victrolas on the stage, run a slide, and later we evolved the idea of playing "Pagliacci" while Caruso was shown singing on the screen. It worked like a charm—although the film drew a small crowd. The merchant was pleased over the advertising he received—so was Thomas. So was I.

The next opportunity came on "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," starring Constance Talmadge, played at the Strand. A display of shoes in a case in the lobby brought a quarter page from the theatre and another from the Drexel Shoe Company.

But the real cleanup in a two-way tie up was when Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road," was to be shown at the Strand. Guy L. Smith, distributor for the Hudson auto, came in with a two-page ad, paying for all the space while the Strand paid for only the cuts that went on it. It was the biggest ad the town had ever seen on a picture and it packed the house. H. B. Watts, manager of the Strand, ran a slide for the auto concern and had two of the cars on the stage, making a real stage effect for himself and a lot of advertising for Smith.

It can be done. Not every week nor on every picture, but where there's a good opportunity, giving the merchant his share of the publicity, will go a long way towards making a profitable deal for the theatre, the merchant—and last but not least, the newspaper.

by-the-way is also manager of the Star theatre of the same town, if he found it payed him to run the new stuff.

"It surely does," he replied, "a great many traveling people stop here over night and most of them wish to go to the theatre, but they want to see something new. Some of them look in the papers to see what is playing and others look the front of the theatre over. If the show is new and something they have not seen they go in. When we have a very new picture we advertise in the local papers that 'If you miss this picture here today you can see it next week at the Stanley in Philadelphia, or perhaps the Strand in N. Y.

"That sets the people to thinking and when they get the city papers on Sunday they verify our statement. I always keep posted by the city papers what is to be shown at the big theatres the week following."

Mr. Weber has also solved the daylight saving problem for the smaller towns at least. He says that if you get one full house during a summer's evening you are doing nicely. Instead of starting his show at the usual time 7:30 and 9:00 o'clock he runs one show in the afternoon at 2:30 and one show at night starting at 8:15 and he has found that instead of dragging out two shows which usually start with about two dozen people and ending with about the same amount, everybody gets in by the time the big feature starts. No one is disturbed during its showing, there is a jolly big crowd in the house, the show goes over twice as good as with the old way, and when the show is over everybody goes out with the big crowd happy and glad they came. On Saturday when the crowds are too large to be accommodated at one show, Manager Weber uses his winter schedule which is to begin his shows at 7.00 and 8.45 P. M.

There is another reason why the two shows are run on Saturdays.

People from the surrounding smaller towns come into Chambersburg on Saturday and they have become used to the two show schedule and Mr. Weber does not want to inconvenience them.

Under the one show plan, the matinee business of both the Star and Orpheum is double over that of last summer. The usual two shows will be adopted again beginning in September.

Why a "Small Town Guy" Plays 'Em Off the Bat

Recently we found a town of a little over ten thousand located along the Lincoln Highway playing pictures right out of the can. The town is Chambersburg, Pa., located midway between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

This was so unusual for a town of this size that we took the trouble to inquire of the manager of the Orpheum theatre, H. R. Weber who

"I want to compliment you on the June 28th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, giving us our first glimpse of the new size. It's great. The new and better size is jam full of good live stuff that every exhibitor should have. Your race for fewer and better pictures has been won. Your cooperation with the exhibitor is wonderful. Success and more success to MOTION PICTURE NEWS."—A. G. P. Chamberlin, Madera, California.

One Exhibitor in Every City Can Use This—But You Must Be First

SO far as we have observed no one yet ever invented anything that couldn't and wasn't improved upon by someone else, if the idea was worth anything in the first place.

Therefore it is fitting to call attention to the fact that this exploitation stunt is only an improvement on the original patent, but it is a good one at that.

Readers will remember when Mr. Kashim, at the Broadway theatre, New York, pulled a real "new one" by running Charlie Chaplin's first screen production on the same bill, "Shoulder Arms" and thereby got itself in the limelight with attendant pecuniary returns.

It remained, however, for Manager H. M. Thomas of the Rialto, Omaha, Neb., to further improve on the Broadway's original idea.

Many managers believe in hot weather to curtail expenses—Manager Thomas thinks to the opposite, so when the thermometer is registering around ninety-five in the shade, instead of going and getting the cheapest program he can find, he goes out and books a double bill consisting of Charlie Chaplin in "Sunnyside" and Marguerite Clark in "Come Out of the Kitchen." Then, for fear he was not giving his customers enough for their money, he digs up the very first Chaplin comedy ever made, and puts it over in something like this manner.

On one side of the stage he had the oldest moving picture machine he could find—an ancient Edison, while on the other side was a modern machine. In the center of the stage stood an old broken down electric piano, a relic of the nickelodeon days. Manager Thomas then comes on the stage, and announces that the Rialto will present the very first comedy Chaplin ever made, with projection and musical methods as in vogue in the old nickelodeon days, to be followed by the presentation of Chaplin's latest picture, "Sunnyside," with proper musical and projection setting.

To get the proper effect on the first Chaplin comedy, the operator used alternating current on a machine set for direct current, while breaks were made in the film by putting in plain white leader, and every time a break occurred a slide would be shown, "just a minute please, the operator is fixing machine," or similar slides which caused the audience to recall the five-cent movie days, while the wheezy piano croaked and groaned "In the Good Old Summer Time," "Shade of the Old Apple Tree" and other equally as well known old time popular tunes.

What was the result? With the thermometer hovering around ninety-five all day Sunday, the Rialto broke all attendance records.

This little inexpensive stunt is an example of one of the best methods of kicking the football of good business up for new goals in the shape of extra money and unusual attention.

This sort of stuff is "showmanship" of the highest order and the kind which pays in dollars and cents.

Mr. Thomas borrowed an idea and improved upon it just the same as every successful business man must do in any line of business if he is going to get up out of the average class.

We don't see any reason why every exhibitor can't utilize this scheme to his material advantage.

Many theatres have an old time projection machine lying around somewhere and if one was unable to get the really authentic first Chaplin, he can get one old enough to carry out the idea, besides who is going to prove that even the Broadway's and Rialto's Chaplin was the really and truly initial film this comedian made. Certainly not the writer and he has been connected with this hectic film game since the days Chaplin was a member of Billy Reeve's vaudeville offering, "A Night in an English Music Hall."

You won't have to place your affidavit on the authencity of the Chaplin film so go to this stunt for extra profits. It can't fall down any place where you get in with it for the first time.

Big League Advertising by the McGraw of Exhibitors

ONCE again we have to apologize because we are not able to reproduce an ad of the Circle's, Indianapolis, Ind., in colors so you might see the very highest type of newspaper display which a careful perusal of papers from all over the country discloses.

"A work of art" is a term which usually cannot be used in describing a newspaper ad. However, the original of this reproduction is all of that. It was printed in three colors, so nicely blended that all the effect of lithogravure was secured.

The idea is original with Mr. McCormick, who frames all his own ads. The cut used over the clasped hands was made from a "still." All the rest of the ad except the type matter is hand drawn.

It is perfect in every detail, from design to the wording of the selling talk. No wonder Mr. McCormick has secured the reputation of being the "most progressive exhibitor in America."

The size of this display was a full quarter page, and without question is the best display which has ever come to the writer's attention. It has been enlarged to two columns that it may be large enough for you to see it in all its artistic beauty, for there is beauty in a good newspaper display as well as in a flower or any other thing that we are wont to call beautiful.

Detroit Exchanges Put Publicity Men at Service of Exhibition

Michigan exhibitors are to have more publicity assistance in the shape of special press agents employed by the exchanges to aid an exhibitor in his exploitation of features.

Two Detroit exchanges have just announced the appointment of advertising and publicity men to help Michigan exhibitors in the exploitation of the features booked from them. Harold Heffernan, screen critic on the Detroit News, has been engaged by the First National exchange and Harry Guest, formerly of John H. Kunsky, Inc., will do similar work for Goldwyn. In fact Mr. Guest has already gone to work while Mr. Heffernan will commence on Monday, August 4.

Paramount and the Universal exchanges have had publicity men for more than a year and the plan has worked out well to the advantage of the exhibitors. Neither exchange insists that their publicity men and material need be used but they are always on call when an exhibitor wishes help in putting over some big feature and, of course, there is no charge to the theatre manager.

Australia Six Months Behind Time—On the "Flu"

From far off Australia comes another letter from Colin E. Wood, who controls the destinies of the "Caulfield Town Hall," Melbourne, Vic.

It seems that the Spanish influenza epidemic which is now only a memory with the States exhibitor, although in many cases not a pleasant one, was on June 5th, the date of Mr. Wood's letter, making the immediate prospects of good business in Melbourne look like the proverbial snowball.

But optimism seems to be Mr. Wood's middle name and there was no hint of mourning over the inevitable in his breezy epistle.

The bills mentioned as having current showings in Melbourne theatres at the time of writing, were: "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," "The Call of the East," "On the Quiet," "Woman's Weapons," "The Turn of the Wheel," "The Lure of Luxury," "For Husbands Only." You will note they are all American films. In fact American subjects are practically the only available bills on the Australian continent.

Using the Stage Setting for "Advance Work"

How Weinberger "Railroaded" Chaplin in "Sunnyside" to "S. R. O."—Novelty Slides Also Help Arouse Interest

PROVING that like charity, exploitation begins at home, Leo Weinberger, manager of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, launched a new idea for the world of showmen to ponder over, when he recently arranged a big stage setting to herald the coming of a special feature attraction.

For two weeks previous to a two weeks' run of "Sunnyside," Charlie Chaplin's comedy, large, selected audiences of the Strand have been getting a little taste of "Sunnyside," in the form of an extra added attraction, which, according to box office reports is "worth its weight in gold."

In arranging his big setting to exploit "Sunnyside," from the stage of his own theatre, Weinberger scoured the city in search for the largest available picture of Chaplin in a reclining position. He found just what he wanted on a 24-sheet. He cut that figure out and pasted it on card-board. Using this papier mache specimen of the star, he built a background of a typical village scene. A full drop painted especially for this setting and picturing a cross-roads, water tank, the "Charlie Chaplin Special," and cultivated fields of farmlands in the distance.

But the setting itself was greatly enhanced by the clever use of slides which were used to introduce the setting, as it were. Four weeks before the opening date of the attraction, the Strand used slides to the effect that Chaplin was on his way to the Strand and that he could be expected to drop in almost every week. Two weeks before the date set, the slide read:

"We promised to tell you when Chaplin arrived. Here he is now. He will appear at the Strand beginning Sunday, July 20, in his third million-dollar comedy, 'Sunnyside'."

Following the showing of this slide, the curtain arose on a sunrise setting, with lights graduated in order to give the effect of dawn, and the orchestra softly playing, "Please Go 'Way and Let Me Sleep." The entire effect provoked long rounds of applause at every performance.

With the second largest seating capacity of any theatre on the Pacific Coast, the Strand played "A Dog's Life," Chaplin's first million-dollar production for four solid weeks with doors opening at 9 a. m., and not a single performance when it was not necessary to hold out a large number of patrons on account of lack of seats. "Shoulder Arms," Chaplin's second First National production played a three weeks' engagement, only being crowded off the boards to make room for accumulated pictures, the contracts for which could not be broken.

Leo Weinberger, manager, the Strand, San Francisco

Each of Chaplin's pictures has been heralded by a unique stage setting, the foundations for which have been laid by the use of a series of slides. Weinberger has proved himself a past grand master at the art of writing slides with a punch.

The Strand's success at heralding advance productions with the use of novelty stage sets should be an inspiration for exhibitors who desire to boost a production to the maximum several weeks in advance of the opening playing date. According to Weinberger, there are certain limitations in the use of this form of exploitation that it would be well for exhibitors to observe.

In the first place, a stage set should only be used when the star and story are of undoubted popularity and the exhibitor can be convinced that his attraction is certain to please an audience. Use of this form of promotion with any average attraction would cheapen its value in the eyes of the audience.

A cut-out from a twenty-four sheet served in this stage setting used by Leo Weinberger at the San Francisco Strand on "Sunnyside"

"Dog Days" Show Credit Instead of Debit Balance for Hyman

WHEN the "dog days" of the summer descend upon your city it certainly is a difficult task for the manager of a photoplay theatre to book such attractions that will bring patrons to his theatre.

This is an admitted fact and those who know anything about the "movie" game are continuously perplexed during the hot weather to do something to fill their theatres.

Manager Edward L. Hyman of the St. Louis William Fox Liberty Theatre has adapted several common sense schemes which have almost assured him that the St. Louis theatre will show a credit, instead of a debit, on the books at the start of the fall season.

Hyman has accomplished success during the time when "debt is on the books" and he has no hesitancy in telling others who are trying to gain the same ends how the trick is done.

The booking of productions and the rendition of music are, of course, the paramount issues. People have to be assured that the production they are going to pay their money to see must be a good one and not too long.

They must also be satisfied before they enter the theatre that they are not going to be bored by too many "triangle" plays. Hyman overcame the first problem by booking such pictures as George Walsh in "Putting One Over," Albert Ray in "Be A Little Sport," Peggy Hyland in "Cowardice Court," and William Farnum in "The Lone Star Ranger," and adding short films, such as Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies, outing and scenic pictures and short reels of personal and intimate pictures of the stars of filmdom and also Fox Sunshine Comedies.

Then he arranged a program whereby the Liberty Symphony Orchestra, conceded by St. Louis movie fans to be the best orchestra in the city, played light and airy selections for the latest and most successful musical comedies now playing on Broadway in New York City.

One can easily forget the high temperature of the weather if their ears are filled with good music. There is an old adage which runs "Music soothes the savage beast."

Just so it soothes the patron who seeks relief from the heat, and anyone who doubts this assertion has only to ask his patrons to learn whether it is so or not.

Then Hyman used judiciousness in his advertising. The accompanying copies of advertise-

Will the Circuit Idea Solve the Small Man's "Special Number" Problem?

FROM time to time, exhibitors have written to this department asking if we could advise them in the matter of providing novelties in the way of additions to their feature programs, outside of the smaller lengths of film which nearly all houses now use.

Music is one of the subjects most of these letters inquire about no doubt because the big houses are making the musical program compare favorably with the best to be had anywhere at any price.

We have agreed that it would be a nice thing for every exhibitor if he could improve his bills by additions to it along the lines we mention but we have never been able to offer anything practicable which would tend to solve the individual problem.

However, we are in receipt of a letter, from William A. Dillon, manager of the Strand Theatre at Ithaca and a well known song writer as well which we publish as a possible solution of the smaller theatre manager's evident desire to make his musical numbers more of a feature and in publishing it do so only to invite discussion from exhibitors on the subject.

The News is not going into the booking business nor does it intend to boost any Lyceum bureau or other concern which may furnish talent of the type for which there is evidently a demand right at this time but it does aim to aid the exhibitor wherever it can and this looks like a place where a discussion in our columns might be productive of something tangible along the lines suggested by Mr. Dillon at the instigation of Mr. McVoy.

Following is Mr. Dillon's letter. The New's offers you space to express your views on this subject. If you people who would be affected by such an arrangement as is suggested aren't interested enough to pick it up and give it some impetus, the idea will die a natural death as many another good thought has done because everybody waited for someone else.

Mr. Dillon's letter:

Ithaca, N. Y.
July 24th, 1919.

Motion Picture News,
New York City,

Dear Sirs: Ross McVoy of the Morgan theatre has written me for my opinion on a subject and in replying I am choosing to take a public route in so doing. In other words I want to pass this request for opinion along to other exhibitors, and at the same time will give my judgment on the matter. My idea is that a little discussion from all sides will help.

This fellow, McVoy, always has good ideas and always will have, but likes to have someone else agree with him. This time he picked on me. McVoy believes that a circuit of theatres could be established over which a high grade entertainer, singer or instrumentalist could appear in connection with picture program. The idea of a singer on such a program has been tried out but never on an established circuit. Many times where tried on independent bookings it has proven a big success, but more often a failure for several reasons.

The average singer does not know how to lick a movie audience and the same compliment applies to some of our most popular managers because of their judgment in placing the act. Often times the selection or lack of personality is the cause of failure.

My opinion is that a circuit could be established and an entertainer used in connection with the pictures and with several weeks' bookings the managers could secure some excellent talent that would be an addition to any picture program, but no matter how great the artist, the manager must be sure to pick the right spot for such entertainment. Picture audiences do not want to be interrupted when enjoying an interesting picture unless by several good acts of vaudeville. It is the continuity, that rapidly interesting continuity of today's pictures that holds the movie fans in their seats. They get deeply into the picture and do not want to be interrupted, so it is my belief that in most cases the singer should choose a song in his repertoire that would fit a certain part of the feature and render this selection during the picture as a surprise to the audience, thus creating a situation of entertainment that most any second rate entertainer could extract big applause from. It is the unexpected in show business that makes the hit, if the artist were to appear after the picture he would have the goods and the big punch in delivery, for just the moment the lights are turned up and preparations are made to offer something special, the audience sit up and say. Hello what is this? Where did he come from, what has he got to offer? They expect him to be good, because he is featured and believe me under those circumstances, must be good, in order to get over to say nothing of being an asset to such a program. Put him on unexpectedly during the picture and it's a pipe for him to clean up providing the song fits.

Illustrated songs were a big hit and will be again with good singers. In some cities they are being revived this year with much success, but above all the picture is the thing, at all times that will win against everything except a real vaudeville combination. A good singer, a good orchestra and a fair picture will starve to death,

The Hand Drawn Ad, At Its Best, Shown in This Franklin Copy

SHEA'S Hippodrome at Buffalo, under the management of Harold B. Franklin, is consistently demonstrating week after week that it is not necessarily the big ad which has the pulling power.

Advertising rates are high in the Bison City and therefore Mr. Franklin tries to make his display so attractive and different that a smaller space display will bring the same results that a larger ad of the ordinary type would produce.

In order that we may show you the full beauty of one of Mr. Franklin's creations, his display on "The White Heather," the Hippodrome bill for the last half of last week, we are taking this out of "Your Idea and Ours" and placing it here.

Certainly this little ad which in the original was only four columns by three inches has pulling power that a much larger display carelessly framed would not produce.

It took time to draw it by hand, too, but the result is worth the effort. Shea's Hippodrome advertising has an individualism that stamps it as the result of the brains which are back of the theatre.

Hyman's Dog Day Policy

but a good picture will do business with no other attractions. We see it almost every week in our Broadway movie houses. Wonderful orchestras, organ, beautiful theatres, fair picture, business off. Versa vice across the street, business big because the picture has the wallop that the other one lacks.

Movie patrons want good movies and with such they will find perfect satisfaction at all times. Entertainers, etc., are good addition as novelties, but will never save the show when that big interest is lacking in the silent drama.

Yours very truly,
WILLIAM A. DILLON.

ments used by the Liberty Theatre suggest coolness itself. Hyman has gotten away from the old system of using stock type for his advertisements and for a few cents more has employed a competent artist to carry out his plans with pen and ink.

It isn't necessary to decorate your advertisements with frost and snow. Not at all. A clean, cool appearing advertisement has more psychological value than any other.

Hyman has "gotten by" the worst period of the year by the methods employed above and it seems to reason that if others do likewise they can accomplish the same end.

A Corking Lobby Display, Dandy Newspaper Advertising, and Satisfaction All Around, the Results of a Twin City Splurge on "Come Out of the Kitchen"

THE "Twin Cities" have come through with a new idea on the exploitation of "Come Out of the Kitchen," in which Marguerite Clark is starred, and, of course, the heroes of the story are members of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Advisory Board.

You will remember that the plot of this feature, adapted from a stage comedy, has to do with a young Southern girl who has to masquerade as the cook to satisfy the young man who is leasing her house, owing to the fact that he has a prejudice against colored servants. In reality Marguerite's old colored "mammy" presides in the culinary department while the girl gets credit for the edibles produced.

At the New Garrick, St. Paul, the feature was booked for a four-day run and Manager Theodore L. Hays began his advertising campaign early. The lobby of the theater was reconstructed into a "kitchen" and everything usually found around a real kitchen was installed.

With the opening of the show Mr. Hays added a gas range, a refrigerator, several tables and shelves full with canned goods, flour, and meats and daily demonstrations were given by representatives of local merchants who had put in the displays. Pancakes made with local flour were baked for those attending the theatre by the flour demonstrator in the lobby and Bohn refrigerators were demonstrated, iced and taken apart by representatives from the local agency.

Mr. Hays got the merchants who had their wares on display in his lobby to advertise their demonstrations in the local press. A composite ad about three quarters of an eight-column page in size was made up. Each ad referred to the demonstrations and the film play and contained a different picture of Miss Clark.

Success was assured before the first day had passed and Manager Hays booked the picture for another three days, playing it a full week to overflow business.

The Sunday following the close of the "Come Out of the Kitchen" run at the New Garrick, St. Paul, the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, began a scheduled four-day showing of the film. Manager Perry was handicapped to a certain extent by having a much smaller lobby than did Mr. Hays, but the entire lobby was turned into a pantry and kitchen. Shelves covered both side walls of the lobby and extended around the right and left fronts of the theatres. The shelves were filled with canned goods of many brands and many colored labels and in front of the shelves demonstrators for local merchants held sway. The Pillsbury flour mills representative fried flap jacks on a gas plate on the left and a market representative demonstrated the best meat cuts, gave out recipes for tasty dishes on the right. The lobby was filled with curious women, children and men from early morning until midnight and the clever stunt became the talk of the city. A Theatrical advertising representative for the Minneapolis Tribune obtained ads from the Pillsbury and Witt firms and combined them with a four-inch seven-column strip furnished by the Strand for a three-quarter page advertising display in the Wednesday night and Thursday morning issues. Each portion of the ad contained a picture of Miss Clark and referred to the demonstrations in the lobby and the photoplay.

Manager Perry, who, like Mr. Hays, is a member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Advisory Board, was not satisfied with the "kitchen" atmosphere in his lobby but had his doorman dressed as a cook and all of his girl ushers and ticket sellers dressed as "kitchen mechanics." The realism of the setting caused newspapers and public to comment upon the showing frequently. Receipts for the first four days of the showing were of such size and enthusiasm at such a high pitch that Manager Perry also held the film over for three extra days with receipts for the final three days totaling greater than those of the four opening days.

Bringing a Famed Sign Where All Who Ride Could See It

PROTRUDING from the top of the Doric theatre of Kansas City, is an immense sign which, by day or night flashes a message that may be read from any place on Walnut Street in the shopping district.

A. M. Eisner, manager of the Doric realizing the advertising value of the sign which is so familiar to all who have seen it, has capitalized it in a street car advertising campaign prepared by the Central Advertising Company of Kansas City. In other words, the sign which was visible only on Walnut Street has been brought into the street cars so that it may be seen in any part of the city; and it has been given a talking personality that appeals to the reader of street car advertising.

The campaign, reproductions of which are shown herewith, started with a semi-teaser card portraying the Doric sign in colors with the caption "A Permanent Beacon." The copy carried the slogan "Where interest never lags and Art reigns supreme" which has been used effectively in the follow up of this campaign.

Two more cards in the series

In the second card the same plates and color schemes were used, the copy being changed to carry out the nucleus of the campaign "The Sign Says."

The following cards, showing a reproduction of the Doric theatre front were printed in five colors from plates which are interchangeable, a different color scheme and change of copy being used on each.

This campaign will be run throughout the season with periodic changes of copy and occasionally a special feature card, as for example, a card commemorating the opening of the Doric theatre, which was displayed on the first anniversary, week of May twenty-fifth.

Uncommon Advertising Brings Exceptional Business

The Strand Theatre, Allentown, Pa., believes in advertising exceptional attractions with uncommon advertisements. Results were recently obtained on "Stolen Orders" through the use of the seven-inch, triple-column advertisement in the five daily newspapers.

This display was a radical departure from the customary Strand advertising. Included among the selling arguments was the announcement that this feature is a companion picture of "The Whip," which enjoyed a very successful run of a week at the Strand. The price of admission was omitted because the Strand has never varied its admission price since the theatre was opened. During the week the newspapers, following an established custom in Allentown, published free notices daily, giving detailed information relative to the production. Alluring and inviting lobby displays augmented by enlarged photographs of Kitty Gordon, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell and Montague Love exhibited conspicuously in show windows of business establishments on Hamilton street, the principal business thoroughfare, completed the advertising program for this feature.

The Strand has four shows daily, comprising two matinees and two evening performances. This plan was adopted for the benefit of patrons who dislike to get into a theatre at the middle of a picture. Every Strand advertisement clearly indicates the hour that the feature showing begins.

Real Thing As "Daddy Long-Legs" Will Help in New England Showings

STUNT ideas used in the exploitation of Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs" have been many but it remains for Boston to come through with a real novelty in the shape of the engagement of Fred H. Wilson, the champion stilt walker of the world who parades the Boston streets as a living example of what "Judy" imagined her "Daddy Long Legs" looked like.

Wilson is not new to the exploitation game, having in the past been employed by various business enterprises in advertising numberless articles, but has never been engaged in a capacity where his particular talents were so fitting to the occasion as in being "Daddy Long Legs."

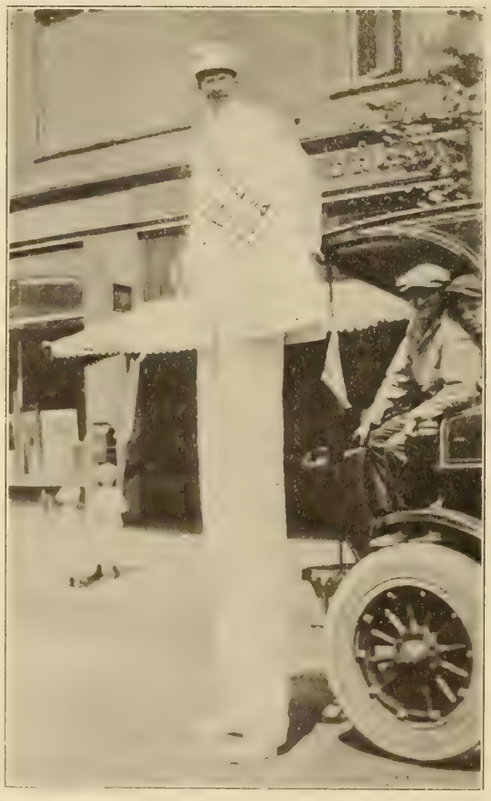
Wilson when equipped with his wooden legs stands thirteen feet in height and takes steps six times as long as those of the average man. It can be imagined with what speed he is able to walk without even hurrying and the attention such a figure would attract even in a busy city. To give an idea of his height and rapidity of motion, we relate an incident which occurred in Boston during a recent Liberty Loan campaign. A spectator on the roof of a building on "Newspaper Row" dropped a lighted cigarette on an awning below and in the course of a few minutes a fire which threatened to result seriously was blazing merrily.

Bystanders ran for water but before they could return the giant Wilson, who was engaged in urging people to buy liberty bonds at the other side of the street, dressed in the uniform of a soldier, had crossed to the scene of the conflagration with a few monster unhurried steps and smothered the small blaze with his hands.

He received a few minor burns in so doing but was not seriously injured. His act was greeted by a wild applause from the spectators.

Wilson's publicity work is to parade the streets of the city, stopping here and there to gaze about and talk to some little lad or lassie who would chance to ask a question or pass a remark about "Daddy." A sign on his breast, bearing the inscription, "Mary Pickford in Daddy Long Legs," is visible from every nook and corner in the Bean Town, and once he passes you, you see another sign, "At Tremont Temple," pinned on his back.

After a successful run of five weeks at the Tremont Theatre, removing only to make room for a musical comedy, the film removed to the Tremont Temple, a few blocks below the Tremont, and is expected to have a run of from six to eight weeks. Wilson will travel with the film throughout New England when the producers start on their tour of the states, visiting all the large cities, and giving the "Yankees" of New England a chance to see "Daddy" in real life as well as in screen life. Wilson will remain in Boston for a few weeks during the beginning of the film engagement at the Temple, and will then bid his farewell to Boston to start on his extended tour.



Ruffner Gets "Atmosphere" Into Lobby on Presentation of "Man Who Turned White"

RALPH RUFFNER, now managing the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, put over an effective lobby display in "The Man Who Turned White," as illustrated on the left.

The whole atmosphere of the picture was carried into the lobby display. The background showed the wastes of the desert and set as if to appear actually on the sands was a life-size cut-out of "The Man Who Turned White" on horseback. A few real palms set off effectively the idea of the oasis in the sands. An Arab tent of striped canvas was draped about the box office window. Realizing that the atmosphere was carried through effectively without the aid of lengthy explanations only the words "H. B. Warner in The Man Who Turned White," in medium-sized letters appeared in the lobby.

The attractive girl ushers in their Arab pantalette costumes were kept well in the foreground and they attracted a big crowd.

Atlanta Bookstore Co-operates in Advertising "Firing Line"

COOPERATION in advertising by window display has been recently accomplished by The Forsythe Theatre, Atlanta, Georgia, which merits more than passing mention.

In the illustration accompanying this article is a demonstration of what can be done at small expense to secure the very best form of publicity that can be had at any price.

This photograph taken of the window of the Weinuberg drug store of Atlanta is fundamentally a Ladies Home Journal display.

However, at the same time, this was attracting the attention of Atlanta shoppers, the Forsythe was running "The Firing Line" in which Irene Castle has the leading role.

Now the current number of The Ladies Home Journal had quite an article devoted to Mrs. Castle profusely illustrated with photographs of the actress. It also contained a mention that Mrs. Castle's latest picture was "The Firing Line," and attention was directed to the Forsythe bill.

The "pasters" on the windows said "Irene Castle's Summer Dresses That She is Wearing as Heroine in 'The Firing Line' are Pictured and Described in the July 'Ladies' Home Journal.'" This display in the Weinberg drug store, Atlanta, was one of several

THERE is diversity enough this week, between the three big Broadway picture palaces, the Strand, Rialto, and Rivoli, to satisfy even the most fastidious.

The bills range from melodramatic farce, comedy, burlesque, to the real thing in melodrama, a crook mystery production.

In the division of stars, the women are again in the lead with two, to the male persuasion's one, while broad comedy has crowded the more refined variety from the boards for the time being.

So far as the casual observer can see, the hot wave has not decreased attendance to any great extent and this fact is no doubt due to patrons of these theatres, knowing that the thermometer does not register any higher in these temples of the silent art, than it does outside and that if one must perspire it is just as easy to do so, sitting comfortably in a theatre with something to take your mind off the attempts of Old Sol to establish new records, as it is to perform the same function elsewhere.

It is at a time like this that a big roomy scientifically ventilated house, has the decided advantage over the smaller theatre and consequently is bound to profit in the matter of attendance.

The announcements for next week are as follows:

Strand—The Westerner by Stewart Edward White.

Rivoli—The Dark Star with Marion Davies.

Rialto—The Career of Catherine Bush with Katherine Calvert.

Rivoli Theatre

THE Rivoli feature offering this week is a serious drama based on the stage success "Nancy Lee," with the comedy balance of the bill depending on the smaller numbers.

The overture selected by Erno Rapee and Joseph Littau, is from Jules Massenet's composition "Phedre" a Grecian subject of great dramatic action. The plot of "Phedre" dates back to the time of Euripides and was again used by the French author Racine. The opera was written in 1873 and has been a favorite with musicians since but has never become a popular subject owing to the fact that it is difficult of rendition.

The second number on the Rivoli bill is the Bruce scenic titled "Scenic Succotash," referring to the fact that the reel is miscellaneous strips of scenic film made into a heterogeneous whole. It is screened to "Canzonetta" continued to the title "If the Landscape" with a serenade following to the title "Beat In a Few—" when "Canzonetta" is used again followed by Melodie in F. Effects are used on scenes where water falls are shown and as the waves roll in on the beach.

A stage setting is used for the third number, classic dancing of "Passepied" by Tulle Lindahl. This was in keeping with the number and served as a background to further beautify the offering. The stage was lighted in green with spots following the dancer.

The Rivoli pictorial is screened to "Petrova Waltz" which is continued through Kinograms footage on the arrival of the R-34 in England and Pathe's conrtibution concerning the passenger sea plane at San Pedro Cal., to be followed by "Corinalus" for Gaumont views of a spectacular fire at St. Louis.

On the scenes of the Chicago "Blimp" accident (Gaumont) the organ furnishes the music, with the orchestra returning on Pathe's views of the recent race riots at Washington, for which "Don Giovanni" was played.

This selection is continued into the projection of the cartoon comedy "His Briny Romance" with a change to "By the Sea" on the title "On The Beach," after which "Love The Sand" is played to the action where the man yells for help.

"Trosseau Ball" is played from this title until the man and girls are again on the beach when, "This Is the Life" is used until the title "Alexthander" when "Rip Van Winkle" is played to the end of the cartoon story.

"Cavalry Parade" is used on Kinograms strip concerning the U. S. Field Artillery on the Border with a change to "Rambling Roses" on the California fish scenes from International. "Amerinda" serves for the scenes by Kinograms of the lumber raft at San Diego, Cal., and "Ballet Suite" for Pathe's footage of U. S. Subs being repaired at Boston with "Manhattan Beach March" for the balance of the reel. scenes at London, England, showing General Haig honoring American officers.

Number five on the program, Mark Winston baritone, singing "Invictus" was rendered with the stage in green and the orchestra flooded in amber. The green rays were projected from the sides.

For the feature the orchestra was tacit for the screening and until the title "Let it Be Understood," when "Clematis" (D. S.) was played for the footage to the title "Nancy's Martyrdom" when a change is made to "Wild Women."

As the dancing stops and she reads the letter "Remembrance" is taken up and continued to until Nancy and the boy are left alone where there is a short pause, with the same selection again used for the sequences to the title "At Her Lawyer's office," then "I'll Pray For You" is the melody for its length after which the organ relieves the orchestra for the scenes up to the title "Out In The Westchester Hills."

On this title the orchestra again comes into action using "Fillonette" until Tony hears the piano, when recourse to "Wild Women" is again made for the footage to the title "Mrs. Trevor came down here—", on which "Constance" is used, until the couple leave in the car.

"The Old Love Story" (D. S.) is used for the scenes following to the title "With the death of Nancy's father," when "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the selection, to the action where Tony comes to Nancy when the "Old Love Story" is resumed for the footage to the end of the picture.

Vincent Bach, trumpet solist renders "Love's Old Sweet Song" for the seventh offering.

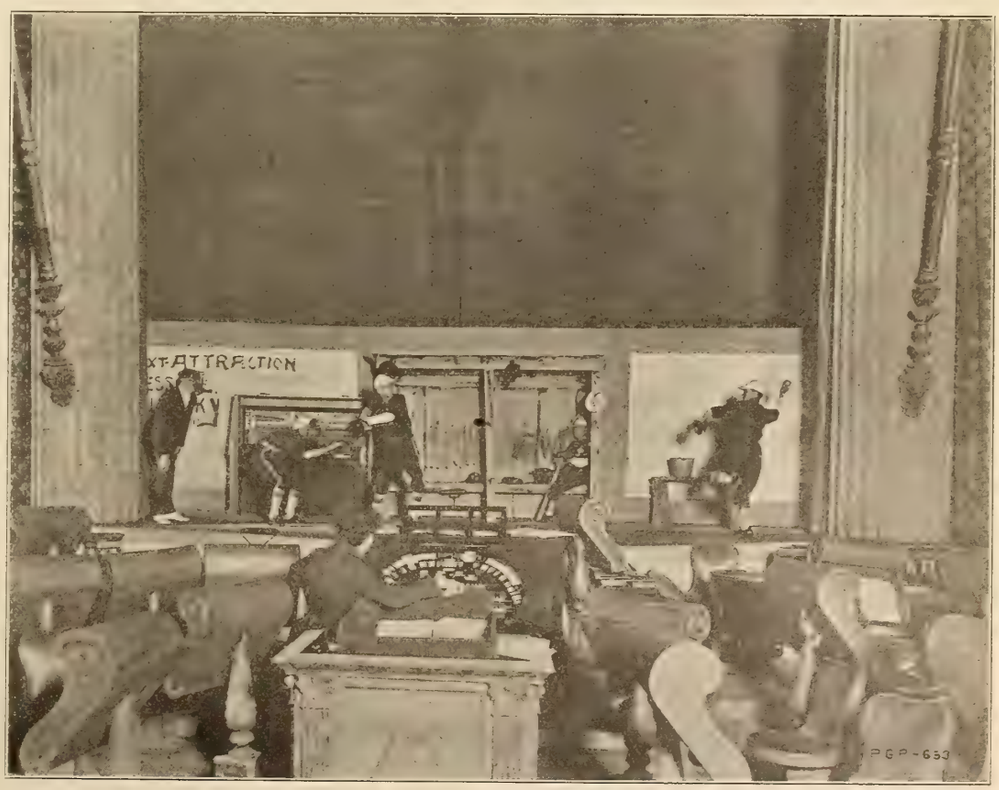
Number eight on the bill is a comedy "A Baby Doll Bandit" which is screened to "Porcupine Patrol" and continued to the title "He also Robbed the Country" when "School Days" is taken up for the footage of the colored boy eating the melon when "Kinky" is played.

For the school room scene "I Can't Do That Sun"—is played with "Nice and Breezy" when the train comes in and "Good Morning Mr. Zipp" as the action goes back to the school room.

For the saloon scene "When It is Circus Day Back Home" is played changing to "The Zoo Step" on the title "He Has Seen So Many," following which "Toute La Nuite" is played beginning on the title "Paying the Bank."

On the title "To Keep A Date" "Wyoming Days" is begun and played to the end when "Club Gallop" follows for the footage remaining.

The organ solo is the grand march from "Aida" played by Prof. Firmin Swinnen.



Sid Grauman has his back to us, for he is busy rehearsing an elaborate prologue arranged for the presentation of Charles Ray's "The Busher," at Grauman's, Los Angeles.

Rialto Theatre

THE Rialto theatre has a bill this week where comedy not only dominates but monopolizes. The Educational subject contains comedy, the comedy is really comedy and the feature is a farce comedy with burlesqueing, a melodramatic plot used as the method of getting the laughs.

The overture selected this week, is excerpts from the light opera "Jolly Robbers", a composition not commonly known but which offers excellent melody as played by the Rialto orchestra. "Jolly Robbers" is from the pen of Franz von Suppe (1820-1895) and was done in Vienna in 1867. It is typical of the music of the period and is one of the best of von Suppe's creations. Von Suppe wrote many operas and light works for European music lovers.

The overture is rendered with the house dark and at the opening with the orchestra flooded in blue, which is later changed to amber.

The Educational number, "A Day and Night at Coney Island", is screened to "Holly" followed by "He's Had No Loving" until the title "Prince Nelson", where "Geraldine" is taken up and played to the title, "The Human Poll Table", with "Jazzin' the Blues" used to the finish of the reel. Wind effects are used on the scenes showing the "Crazy House" and water effects on the water scenes.

The third offering on the program is the rendition of Strauss' "Spring Voices" by Rosa Lesca, coloratura soprano. This number is given with the stage lighted in scarlet and the singer within an amber spot.

The Rialto Magazine opens with a Pathe strip showing scenes at Camp Farwell, Washington, and is screened to "Master Builder", which is used through scenes by Gaumont concerning San Francisco with a change to "Humorous Drinking Character" on the Mutt and Jeff cartoon "West Is East". Following this to International's contribution concerning the big seaplane on the Pacific coast, "Pahjamah" and "Moorish" are used and on the change referred to at the title "Biggest Sightseer's—" "China land" and "Bluebird" are played, with the orchestra tacit and motor effects used as the machine is seen flying.

Gaumont furnishes the next strip, with scenes of a bicyclist who rides down steep inclines into water, at Oakland, Cal., to which a drum roll is used for the footage to a novelty, a cartoon of a tooth beginning to decay. Through this "Silent Sorrows" is played with anvil effects as the tooth aches, and the orchestra playing "Anvil Chorus".

Gaumont's views of the Pacific fleet leaving Hampton Roads is projected to "Col. Philbrook March", this selection being continued to the finish which includes a strip from International with further views of General Pershing and other notables abroad.

Greek Evans, baritone, renders "And He Played on His Old Bass Viol," for number five on the bill, the stage being lighted in scarlet with the singer within a spot.

The feature picture, "Nugget Nell", with Dorothy Gish in the leading role is screened to "Stampede No. 159" which is continued to the place where the men sing "Sweet Adeline" at which the orchestra changes to this song.

When the men stop singing, "Whispering Flowers" is played continuing to the title "Here Comes Some One" when the organ relieves until the title "At Last the Outlaw Gang", when "Stampede No. 75" is taken up to be followed by "Dear Little Boy of Mine" (burlesqued) on the scene where the outlaws leave the man at the table.

On the sequences following this action and to the scene where Nell enters her home three selections from the Rialto private library are used with a change on the above action to "Zephyr" with reference again to the Rialto library for scenes to the title "The Last Bullet" where "Hearts and Flowers" is taken up (from sign) and played through with resort again to the Rialto library for two selections until the title "Stranger Pull Your Freight" when "My Hero" not too slowly, is used to the finis.

The comedy "Shades of Shakespeare" is screened to "Songs of Shakespeare No. 2" played twice, continued into the action and followed by "Midsummer's Night Dream" played until the title "Prof. Irving Boote" when resort is again made to "Shakespeare Songs No. 2".

When the band is seen the chorus of "Over There" is played with changes to two sketches until the title "Just As Shakespeare Did" when "Breil Tremelo Agitato" is taken up and played until she kisses her hero, when a change is made to "Salut D' Amour" (burlesqued). On the title "Naturally Everybody", "Garden of Love" (from sign) is used with "Flirtation" as the selection when the sign of the final dress rehearsal is shown.

As the curtain rises for the performance, the snare and drum are used with march effect, with "April Moods" played quickly as the scenery falls down. On the scene where the German officer comes, "Keep Your Head Down Fritzie Boy" (from chorus and played to action) is played with a change to "He's Just Like You" as the curtain drops.

After the title "With a Sight Change" "Battle Agitato No. 317" is taken up and played to the title "The Germans Are Coming" where a trumpet signal and snare drum are used timed to the action, stilled to a muted trumpet signal as the title "They're a Long Way Off" appears. When the orchestra leader rises, "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" is played with "Reuben Fox Trot" used as the fire house is seen.

A return to "Battle Agitato No. 317" is made when the curtain rises again with the orchestra tacit and a bell effect when the man rings the fire bell, with the orchestra coming into action again with the chorus of "How I Hate To get Up" as he stops ringing.

When the curtain again rises, "Battle Agitato" is again used and is played to the scene where the curtain drops, when "Oh Harry" with the chorus fast, is played to the end of the picture.

The organ solo is played by Arthur Depew. The title is not announced.

Strand Theatre

THE Strand program for this week might truly be said to have been prepared for those whom Lincoln said God must have loved, for it is the best of "movie fan" stuff, just the sort that never disappoints the majority of those who go to the theatre for entertainment.

The overture is from Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta," one of the most popular of this composers' works, and the exerpts rendered are familiar enough to our ears to give them an added interest.

Herbert is probably the most popular of any of the living composers and his history is so well known that we will not dwell on that point. Suffice to say as master of the Twenty-second Regimental Band his name is as familiar as that of a President of the United States.

The scenic offering from the usual source, Outing Chester, is "Put Your Cares On Ice," being what the title suggests, winter sports scenes. Appropriate music is played throughout it's length, with the orchestra and organ alternating.

Dorothy South's vocal number this week is "Starlight Love," rendered with orchestra accompaniment and with the singer in a spotlight of amber.

The Strand Review contains Pathe's "How Britain proclaims Peace," and scenes of the "Chicago Blimp," the "Grand Prix Races at Paris," Kinograms views of a monster log raft at San Diego, Cal., Internationals "Henley Races," Pathe's colored views of the goldfinch, The Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day," "The Bray Cartoon," Pathe's strip concerning a fire from gasoline at Bayonne, N. J., International's views of "General Haig Honoring American Officers at London," and Pathe's scenes of army ceremonies at Camp Farwell, Wash.

For the screening of the feature, "The Love Burglar," "La Nave Rossa" is played, continuing until after the title "Joan Gray," which is followed by "If You Look Into Her Eyes" (after introduction), until the scene where Coast stops the girl singing when "Merci Beaucoup" is taken up for the sequences to where Bull reads the letter.

The next selection is "Crafty Spy," used to the title "There's a Little Bit of Bad—," when the change is to the song of the same title, for the footage to the scene where Reid puts his ear to the wall when "Dreamy Alabama" is played until the girls stop singing.

"Templeweithe" is then played to the title "Lay Off, Boys," when "The Vampire" is used until the title "You Know the Marriage Service," the selection then made being "Dramatic Andante."

When the parson goes to the piano, the wedding march (piano alone) is played, after which the organ furnishes the music for twenty minutes.

After the scene where Coast leaves the barroom, the piano is used for the rendition of "Sentimental Melody" until the girl listens, when the orchestra begins again with the same melody playing this number to the title "On the Evening of Elsie's Wedding," when "I Hear You Calling Me" is used until the title "Dave Dorgan."

On the above title "Mason and Dixon Line" is played until the title "If you Need Any Help," when "Love Theme" is played for the footage to the title "We've Had a Guy Around Here," the change then being to "Roust D' Omphale" (at H).

On the title "The Real Colt Kid," "Gruesome Misterio" is played to it's end with a change to "Andrea Chenier" as the man chokes the girl.

When the mother enters the "Love Theme" is repeated to the scene where Reid takes off his sweater, when the wedding march is played to the end.

For the sixth number on the program Malcolm McEachern rendered "The Company Sargeant Major" and "Friend O' Mine." Mr. McEachern is a basso.

"Mary Pickford at Her Home," a single reel released by the Photoplay Magazine, is the seventh number.

The comedy is "A Howling Success," one of the "Hall Room Boys" series, a picturization of the famous McGill Evening Sun cartoons.

The organ solo is a selection from "Il Trovatore."

"Hallowe'en Masks" Advertise "False Faces"

The Palace theatre of Burlington, Iowa, managed by L. P. Blank, recently evolved a clever advertising idea for its presentation of "False Faces" by having a sort of "Hallowe'en mask" printed in quantities which were distributed to the children. Of course the "masks" bore some advertising concerning the film, but the Palace did not make the mistake of overdoing that part of the thing, and in consequence the whole of Burlington's host of young hopefuls were wearing these paper masks for days.

The cost of the masks was small compared to the results accomplished in publicity.

Making a "Drive" Help Out for Full Weeks

The Imperial, of Ottawa, Works on That Principle and Recently Showed How It Is Done with the Medium "Choosing a Wife"

MAKING a big drive with a good picture and securing great crowds for a week's run lends momentum to a theatre's patronage for several months to come if the proper plan is followed, according to Manager Joe O'Leary of the Imperial theatre, one of the finest in Ottawa, the Canadian Capital.

An example of special boosting for an attraction was seen during the week of July 21 when the feature at the Imperial was "Choosing a Wife." The Imperial enjoyed first Canadian run for this picture and emphasized it in such a manner that the house was literally bursting with people twice each night during the week although the weather was hot. By boosting this one feature and then drawing attention to coming attractions in several different ways the theatre's popularity was insured for six weeks to come, according to Manager O'Leary. And the fact of the matter is that the "stunt" has been done successfully on previous occasions.

The Imperial theatre went to it hard in the matter of advertising for "Choosing A Wife." Newspaper advertisements, theatre programmes, window cards, window posters, newspaper publicity, various sizes of billboard posters, slides and an automobile were used in the campaign for the one attraction.

Two daily newspapers are found in Ottawa and in each appeared a 1,500 line advertisement on Monday, July 21. This makes practically two-thirds of a page and the moving picture editors of the two papers used the remaining space on the page for reading matter and illustrations referring to the feature. O'Leary emphasized that it was the first run in Canada for the release and the hook on which he hung his advertising theme consisted of advice to see the picture before one thought of getting married. It might be a real lesson for those who contemplated wedlock in the near future. The title was just the kind to bring out the women and O'Leary made a big play with the title. He mentioned it whenever he could, and paid little attention to the cast, the principals, the director or anybody else. "Choosing a Wife" was a box office title, he figured.

During the remainder of the week O'Leary scattered seven, eight or nine small advertisements, 25 line space each, daily throughout the Ottawa Journal. He used 100 or 150 line display ads in the other paper, The Citizen, daily by way of change. On Tuesday, July 22, the small scattered ads in The Journal carried only the name of the feature five times, the name of the theatre and the regular prices. On following days there were references to some of the situations in the story. In Tuesday's and Wednesday's Citizen appeared an "apology" because many people could not gain admittance to the theatre on previous nights and advising prospective patrons to try the matinee performances if they wanted to see the picture at all. Regular advertisements also appeared in the same editions.

The theatre programmes printed for the week totalled 10,000 and these were handed to only every second or third person entering the house.

Posters and window cards were used in quantities.

Both one sheets and the window cards were used in windows but the larger posters were used on the regular stands around the city. Passes were given to storekeepers in the usual way where window cards or posters were displayed.

A Dodge touring car was fitted with three large cloth signs on which appeared the name of the feature and the theatre. This was driven around the main streets all week and was on the go practically all day and during the evening. Slides were screened during the previous week as is the custom in many theatres.

Now comes reference to the methods pursued to "cash in" on the big patronage during the week. One of the slides used read as follows:—

"Tell your friends that this picture is being shown here all week. Tell them to come and enjoy the picture as you have done and they will thank you."

The printed programme bears a similar request while another slide draws particular attention to the programmes distributed. This slide reads:—

"Read the synopsis of next week's attractions in your programme."

Once more there is a link between the present and the future. Another detail of the programme which helps the patrons to think of the future consists of a list of coming pictures at the Imperial. This list extended to the end of August and length of each run, the title of the release and star of the feature are given in condensed form for quick reading. In addition to the synopsis for the next week's attractions and the lengthy list of coming features, as well as the request to patrons to tell others about the enjoyable current picture, the printed folder gives a picture of the star for the next feature. The complete programme for the current week is also given in detail, of course. During the last three days of the week, reference is made in the newspaper advertisements about the coming attraction. This consists of a mere line or two at the bottom of regular ads.

The interest aroused in coming attractions during the one week's drive is felt for a month to come, and longer, according to Manager O'Leary. The people take home the four-page programmes and keep them for future reference. Incidentally, the use of colored slides for coming features at the Imperial as well as at the Family theatre, another local theatre owned by Harry Brouse, also works along the same lines.

Considerable money is spent in advertising the one feature and such prominence is indirectly attached to coming events during the one week that it is considered sufficient to use only ordinary newspaper space and but a few posters during the next four or six weeks. This policy has been followed by the Imperial theatre for a number of years, and with admitted success.

The Imperial theatre does not have an orchestra but it does have an organ and an organist who plays to suit the action of the picture. The organ is played continuously throughout a performance and an organ overture is also a distinct number of the programme.

Cincinnati Newspapers to Increase "Movie" Pages

Cincinnati newspapers are beginning to see the light of advertising. It is known that plans are afoot, following a long "missionary" movement by Oscar A. Doeb, publicity manager for the Lisbon chain of theatres, to open moving picture departments of important size in at least two of the four dailies.

The Cincinnati Enquirer is already giving more space to moving pictures and is carrying material of interest to the fans and therefore of more benefit to the local exhibitors. It is said that this paper plans to start a four-page Sunday supplement within a few weeks devoted to theatricals and films.

The Post, always an ardent admirer of the moving picture, and thoroughly realizing the importance of movie news as a circulation builder, also is making plans along this line and already is giving much more space than formerly. The Times-Star and Commercial Tribune, too, are devoting more space than ever.

There is no doubt but that these improvements can be traced in a measure to the large advertising campaigns of the big local theatres—especially those of the Libson movie houses. The Walnut, Strand, Family, and the Lyric now use three times as much space as they did a few years ago.

Live News from the Producers

First United Artist Film Is Named

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS will inaugurate the releases of United Artists' Corporation on September 1st with his big new film, "His Majesty, the American." The picture has been in course of production since April. The actual filming is completed and the picture is now in the stages of final editing and titling.

Eight weeks were devoted exclusively to the preparation of the scenario. Director Joseph Henaberry, with the assistance of Elton Banks, developed the story, and it is reported that the picture is a veritable Fairbanks frolic, giving Doug a wealth of opportunities such as no production has heretofore offered him.

The picture abounds in novelties. Its very beginning offers a feature that alone has cost a little fortune to produce, but that is counted on to make a season's hit in itself. It shows Doug in the agonies of a nightmare and the stunts he goes through and the dangers he courts start the story off with a rush. In these nightmare scenes many novelties in photography and set construction have been employed. Those who feel that there is nothing new under the sun are said to have a revelation awaiting them.

A splendid cast surrounds the agile Doug in his first "Big Four" production. Marjory Daw plays the feminine lead. This makes the sixth picture in which she has played opposite Fairbanks.

Frank Campeau, who has been associated with Fairbanks for over a year, plays the heavy role. He was a noteworthy member of numerous recent Fairbanks' cast and has a big reputation not only as a screen artist, but likewise as a stage player.

Albert McQuarrie, who had a good part in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," likewise appears in "His Majesty, the American," and in addition served as an assistant to Director Henaberry.

Much interest also attaches to the initial screen appearance of Sam Sothern, well known New York and London actor and a younger brother of the famous E. H. Sothern.

Lillian Langdon, who appeared with Fairbanks in his first motion picture, "The Lamb," and in a number of later productions, is also prominent in the cast.

In the realization that "His Majesty, the American" was to be the first release of the "Big Four," Fairbanks is said to have spent a fortune on the production. Massive sets, both interiors and exteriors, have been provided without reckoning the cost, for Fairbanks has had in mind the longer runs to which the picture is booking, and he has put everything into the production to justify the highest hopes of United Artists' Corporation and the exhibitors who are going to run the picture.

Incidentally, the advance bookings on the production are said to set a record that is unequalled in screen annals. Beginning last May the biggest theatres throughout the country began booking the picture for lengths of runs that were actually revolutionary. A check-up of the first run bookings carries practically every big theatre and circuit throughout the country that could be accommodated for a simultaneous showing.

It is confidently expected that in the first four weeks after release, "His Majesty, the American" will show to more people than any picture that has ever been released.

Bookings are now being made through all seventeen of United Artists' Corporation Distributing Depots in United States and Canada and enough business has now been written to keep a big number of prints busy without let-up over a long period.

Claim W. H. Production Will Score Heavily

"Everybody's Business," the six-reel photoplay which W. H. Productions Company has now in the final preparation for distribution, is considered by the producers to be a remarkable theme in many ways. In the unfolding of its story it possesses the unusual elements of a serial photoplay; every foot of film being crowded with punch, pep and power. It has the delicate touch of romance and love and the contrasting features of intrigue, adventure and sensationalism. All of these elements are closely woven together so that they form a perfect continuity of story.

W. H. Productions Company predicts that "Everybody's Business" will not only be a tremendous financial success, but it will also be one of the most talked of films that has been released in recent years.

Big Equity Announcement Coming

BOTH Herbert K. Somborn and Joseph I. Schnitzer, respectively president and treasurer of the recently formed Equity Pictures Corporation, will leave New York City within the next few days on a tour of the important moving-picture distributing centers of the United States and Canada. Upon their return there may be expected a detailed announcement of the plan of distribution and exploitation which has been devised by the Equity people and the important connections which have been made for the company. This detailed announcement will be received with interest by the industry in general, as it is known that the several novelties intended to make for greater co-operation between the producer of the pictures which the Equity company will handle and the men and organizations in the field that will ultimately introduce the pictures to the general public are the things which were responsible for enlisting in the Equity corporation the enthusiastic personal and staunch financial support of a number of the most careful operators in the motion picture industry.

The trip which Messrs. Somborn and Schnitzer are making is intended to close a number of important contracts which have already been arranged, but which can be most conveniently closed in territory outside of New York.

Officials on Trip to Arrange Distribution Plans

Another announcement of interest which the Equity corporation will make in the immediate future will have to do with the acquisition of the pictures of an internationally-known star. Four pictures a year by the Fine Arts Film Company, starring Clara Kimball Young, have already been announced. There are to be four big pictures a year by the other star whose name is being jealously guarded at the present time. In addition, in all likelihood, there will be two other pictures a year of a calibre which will make them stand out.

President Somborn, of the Equity corporation, is in constant touch with the Clara Kimball Young organization on the Coast and is informed that work on the first production to be handled by his company, "Eyes of Youth," starring Miss Young, is well under way. Pauline Stark has been engaged to play the sister in the bill. Vincent Serrano will appear as the yogi, Milton Sills as "Louis Martin," William Courtleigh as the impresario, Gareth Hughes as the brother, and Edmund Lowe as the "lead." Albert Parker is directing the production from a scenario provided by Charles E. Whittaker.

Some idea of the thoroughness with which the Equity corporation has gone into the matter of helpful co-operation with the field distributors and exhibitors of Equity pictures may be gathered from what is already being done from the New York offices in regard to the first release, "Eyes of Youth," which will be ready about the middle of October.

A research publicity and advertising department has been established and exhibitors throughout the country are being asked to express themselves as to just how "Eyes of Youth" ought to be handled to get the most money in their respective territories. Their attention is being called to the remarkable box office strength which the play has shown in New York and the "provinces" ever since its production a couple of seasons ago and they are being asked to send in reports which will help to measure the interest in the play which has resulted from its presentation in stock in the various important cities of the country. This information is being tabulated in the New York offices of the company and will be used in laying out the general advertising and publicity campaign which it is planned to prepare for the exhibitors and to have ready at the time the first picture is released.

A Booking Record to Be Proud of

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, claims honors for breaking all records for the booking of short subjects in the foremost New York City theatres. Last week saw six "Educational" subjects in the four big motion-picture houses of the Times Square district, the Rialto and Broadway having two pictures each, while the Rivoli and Strand both used single-reel productions.

Younger Roosevelt Endorses "Red Viper"

Theodore Roosevelt, son of the late Theodore Roosevelt, states that the effective work portrayed in "The Red Viper," Tyrad production, would counteract Bolshevism, and meets with his unequivocal indorsement. Governors Robertson of Oklahoma, Norbeck of South Dakota, William S. Sproul of Pennsylvania, Holcombe of Connecticut and Milliken of Maine have indorsed this photoplay and movement. In addition such indorsements as Hon. Clayton R. Lusk, chairman of the Lusk committee; Thomas W. Herndon, president American Cross of Honor; Right Rev. Manning, rector Trinity Church; United States Senators Frelinghuysen, McClean, Thomas, Trammel and Fernauld have been received by the producers.

Two of the largest distributing organizations in this country have offered to buy the negative. No decision has been reached in connection with same, pending the arrangements for a Broadway showing.

"The Red Viper," "The Menace of a Nation," promises to be one of the most unique photoplays—exceptional and novel in many respects. Mr. Jacques Tyrol, director of the production, and Miss Winifred Dunn, who wrote the story and scenario, announce that the cast includes Gareth Hughes, supported by Ruth Stonehouse, Jack Gilbert, Irma Harrison and Alfred Hollingsworth.

Outdoor Ad Campaign Begun by Realart

Realart Pictures Corporation has started its extensive outdoor exploitation campaign. Within a very few days a poster advertising Mary Miles Minter has made its appearance on the billboards of New York. It is soon to be seen in other cities.

The poster is a twenty-four sheet and not only does it appeal to the eye because of its artistic beauty but the public's attention is held by the unique, concise and unusual manner in which the story Realart has to tell about Mary Miles Minter appears.

The presses of the lithographic concern, with whom the contract for the posters was placed, are running now and it is expected the quantity will soon be large enough to undertake extensive work.

The striking new theatres, projected by the Allen Interests of Canada, and whose construction will mark the invasion by the Allens of the American field. Both theatres, according to plans laid down, will be the last word in up-to-dateness

New Allen Theatres to Excel

Expected to Set a New Standard in Beauty of Construction; the Plans

A NEW mark in the construction of motion picture palaces is promised with the opening of the Allen theatres in Detroit and Cleveland—houses that will mark the invasion of the United States by the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Canada. C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, who has designed more high class theatres than any architect in the country, is authority for the statement that in every way these five will mark a most advanced step.

Size will be one of the striking things about the two houses. The Allen, Cleveland will seat 3,000 while the Detroit house will be still larger, caring for 3,500. And though the auditorium will necessarily be very large including space for orchestras of fifty pieces and room for all sorts of presentation effects. It is said that more space will be devoted to rest and recreation rooms and features other than the theatre proper than in any house ever built.

One of the striking features of the Detroit theatre will be a tremendous inner lobby thirty-five feet wide and 100 feet deep which will form a Palm Court, with an eliptical ornamental glass roof through which all sorts of color effects may be obtained with either natural or artificial lights. There will be playing fountains and atmosphere suggestive of the Tropics. In fact during the winter season one will get a breath of the far south amid Detroit's snows.

In exterior appearance the Cleveland Allen theatre will be entirely different. On the one houndred feet front there will be a six story office building, and naturally the lines will have to be modified. Front of the building will be of Bedford lime-stone and the decorations simple, yet striking. With a handsome marquee and unusually large lobby this theatre idea will be kept dominant.

Although it has been but a week since the announcement of the Allen Enterprises to enter the United States through Detroit and Cleveland, the headquarters in Toronto report scores of letters received from residents of the two cities congratulating Messrs. Jule and Jay T. Allen and pledging their patronage. A great share of these have come from people who have visited one or more of the finer Allen theatres in Canada and who are familiar with the entertainment standard maintained by these houses in the Dominion.

Many other letters have come from residents of other cities who have seen the Allen Canadian houses and who express the desire for the Allens to build theatres in their respective cities. However, word comes from Toronto that no definite plans have come for houses in other American centers for the present.

Fox's Salesmen Contest Enters Last Month

Never has a contest between salesmen of Fox Film Corporation created such a strenuous rivalry as has marked the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon competition. Now entering the last month of the contest, Fox salesmen the country over are straining every nerve to win the beautiful Mutt and Jeff silver cup, donated as a trophy by Mutt and Jeff's creator, Capt. Bud Fischer.

The contest opened June 29, and will end with the close of the day's business on Aug. 30. Each day the exchange offices send a telegraphic report of the day's sales to Tom North, manager of Fox Film Short Subjects, at the home offices in New York.

Mollie King to Star in Five Pictures

After running their first production, "Greater Than Love" starring Mollie King, Walter Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation, immediately signed John M. Stahl to direct the next five productions with Miss King. Work on her second picture will begin within two weeks. Title and author of her next picture will be announced shortly.

Ellen Terry in First and Only Picture

There comes from Triangle one of the most interesting bits of news of the week in its announcement that Ellen Terry has at last succumbed to the lure of the silver-sheet sufficiently to make one picture. The production in which Miss Terry makes her bow to the movie public is entitled "Her Greatest Performance," and is scheduled for August 24th release. The story was written especially for Miss Terry, and it is a satisfying reflection upon the sagacity of this artist that she chose a vehicle wholly suitable to her mature years, and did not attempt to play the part of a woman young in experience and age.

Ellen Terry is too well known as the greatest living emotional English actress to require an introduction to the American public. As leading woman for Sir Henry Irving and the Bancrofts, frequently she has visited the United States, where her ability always has been widely acclaimed.

First Fox News Weekly In Sept.

ANNOUNCEMENT as to the preliminary arrangements for showings of Fox News, now being featured as "the news weekly that will surprise the theatre-going public," has been made by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation. The first issue of Fox News will be released about Sept. 15, and thereafter there will be weekly releases of features which Mr. Sheehan says will have a power and quality never before known to the screen.

"Fox News is to be something absolutely new in motion pictures," says Mr. Sheehan. "It will be a feature that no exhibitor can afford to overlook, for it will have tremendous drawing power and will be talked of wherever motion pictures are shown."

Arrangements have been made whereby news and special current event picture features from all parts of the world will be released through Fox News. There will be motion picture correspondents in London, Paris, Petrograd, Brussels, Berlin, Hamburg, Tokio, Shanghai, Buenos Aires, Bogota, Sidney, Australia, Fairbanks, Alaska, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Hawaii, Manila and throughout the United States, Canada, Mexico and the West Indies.

Herbert E. Hancock Is to Be in Charge of of Feature

In charge of Fox News is Herbert E. Hancock, formerly a newspaper reporter, editor and special writer of note, and later a director of picture features. Mr. Hancock has established headquarters on the fourth floor of the Fox Building, No. 130 West Forty-sixth street, and now is busy completing his staff and interviewing expert cameramen. In Mr. Hancock Mr. Sheehan believes he has an executive and motion picture feature editor who will make of Fox News a screen feature journal that will make a new epoch in pictures.

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, is the originator of the entertaining and instructive idea to be embodied in Fox News. When he presented the idea to Mr. Sheehan, the latter, an experienced New York newspaper man, became enthusiastic. He and Mr. Fox worked out the plan, which, while founded on the regular news reel features now being shown, is a new and surprising elaboration of that idea, and then Mr. Hancock was engaged to supervise Fox News.

The Fox News section of Fox Film Corporation, it is announced, will have the biggest staff of cameramen ever known in the picture industry. It will be divided into three departments—one for news, another for features, and the third for sales. Each department will have as its head a man well known to the trade. Mr. Hancock has with him his brother, Don, who is a former newspaper man and was business manager for H. & H. Productions, Inc.

"Fox News will be handled like a big newspaper, with the added advantages offered by motion pictures," said Mr. Hancock. "What the average man or woman of intelligence wants to know nowadays is: 'What happened, how did it happen, and who were the parties concerned?' Fox News will show those things intelligently. There will be no wild clamor for 'beats' and the like. We will get what happened, tell it briefly, forcefully and attractively in pictures, and show it to the public. Then we will have features in which the public is keenly interested—features that appeal to children as well as grown-ups—features that tell something and that entertain."

Gertrude Atherton Now at Goldwyn Studios

Telegrams from Los Angeles announce the arrival of Gertrude Atherton at the Goldwyn studios for her first Eminent Authors Picture, "Perch of the Devil." She motored out to Culver City just in time to wander through bits of Petrograd, Cairo and London, and to find herself an onlooker at a magnificent victory ball with Geraldine Farrar the central figure.

On the vital question of her transcontinental journey, what had the Goldwyn staff done with "Perch of the Devil," she wires: "Having had disastrous experiences with three companies, am delighted to find that continuity of 'Perch of the Devil' is the sort I would write if able to write continuity at all. They have caught fascination of the ore and mining and grasped psychology of my characters. There is not one point I could criticise."

Year's Tour Starts for Travelogues

With his photographic equipment and personal effects in three automobiles L. J. ("Dick") Burrud, producer of American and foreign travelogues, left Los Angeles last week for a fifty-two weeks' tour of the American and Canadian Rockies. Burrud, who will release his pictures through Bulls-Eye, is one of the pioneers in travelogue photography, and has the distinction of having received government commendation for his pictures of the Yosemite Valley and the new Roosevelt National Park. After completing his present tour Burrud will go to the Orient.

"Auction of Souls" is a Washington Hit

The local appreciation for a special feature attraction recently caused the Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C., to establish a record for the house by holding the picture over for another week's run, according to Tom Moore, manager of that theatre.

Personal appearances of Aurora Mardiganian, star of "Auction of Souls," of which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, the use of two full orchestras, morning matinees for ladies and use of the apt phrase "the only picture ever shown at $10 per seat," are thought to be largely responsible for the great success of the attraction.

"Sky Eye," Long Feature, Made by Steiner

From the offices of William Steiner, the independent producer of extraordinary motion picture features, comes the announcement through D. J. Mountan, special representative for Mr. Steiner, of the completion of the seven-part feature "Sky Eye," upon which the Steiner company has been actively engaged in production for the past four months.

Mr. Steiner's latest "hit" carries the embodiment of two subjects which stand prominent in the eyes of the world, namely the vast Texas oil fields and the subject of daring aviation. The authors of "Sky Eye" have interwoven from these two subjects a romantic drama of the oil fields and the air.

Under the direction of Aubrey M. Kennedy and Louis Lewyn, Mr. Steiner has, through the co-operation and sanction of Lieut.-Col. Lawrence W. McIntosh, J. M. A. Commanding Officer of Ellington Field, been permitted a wide scope in taking of startling airplane thrills and hitherto unphotographed "stunts."

Broadened Plans for Paramount Magazine

The wide prestige already attained by the subjects appearing in the Paramount Magazine was emphasized this week by Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is producing the magazine for release on a weekly basis beginning September 1.

Each number of the magazine, it is declared, will comprise epigrams taken from the Smart Set Magazine, epigrams written by Helen Rowland, of the New York Evening World, an animated technical drawing of some popular scientific subject, and animated comic cartoons by the best artists now doing this work.

Barthelmess East for Griffith Play

Richard Barthelmess, who has the leading role in the D. W. Griffith production to follow "Broken Blossoms", has completed his scenes in the West Coast studio and is expected to arrive shortly in New York, where, it is understood, the next Griffith play will be enacted.

Ovation Accorded MacManus Film

"The Lost Battalion" Given Showing at Hartford

THE S. R. O. sign outside the Grand theatre, Hartford, July 28, and a thermometer registering 96 degrees in a drug store next door marked respectively a red letter night in the capital of the Nutmeg State. The theatre however, was packed from orchestra to gallery with an enthusiastic audience who braved the heat to see Edward A. MacManus's production of "The Lost Battalion."

The first public showing of the picture brought together many of the survivors who had not seen themselves as others see them, and they were just as enthusiastic as the rest of the audience for among the tears that rose unbidden to the eye, come also tears of laughter, for the American fighting man even in face of death is a humorist and Edward A. MacManus has drawn out all the comedy and romance that beset the life of the doughboy in the camps at Yaphank and in France.

The theatre scribe of the Hartford Post in a spirit of enthusiastic criticism extolling the MacManus production said: "Last night at the initial showing of "The Lost Battalion," some of the pain and the suffering of those valiant men was transplanted into the hearts of the distinguished gathering. The heat was overpowering yet, cold drinks waited out doors just a few feet away, while on the screen was pictured those agonizing days when the surrounded men were practically without food or water or hope of relief. What a contrast! And the audience realized and understood.

"The audience forgot their own discomfort for 'The Lost Battalion' picture never loses its interest." Whether or not as one notable critic said: "Our hearts do not keep the fragrance or pain of yesteryear" everyone admitted through tears, through laughter, which the picture evoked in lightning succession, that 'The Lost Battalion' was not only a beautifully visualised romance, a stirring drama, but that it was an imperishable record of American valor, an inspiration to the youth of the land, a holy reminder of duty well performed to those who returned, and the much needed story for those who could not go, but who made great sacrifices for those who had the glorious privilege of participating in the greatest battle ever recorded in American history."

"Thrills and Laughs," said the Hartford Daily Courant. "'The Lost Battalion'," the battle motion picture which reproduces the stand of one battalion of the Seventy-seventh Division in the Argonne Forest, cut off from communications with the Americans and besieged for six days by Germans on all sides, is more than an entertaining picture, as shown at the Grand theatre last night. It is more than a battle picture. Its scenes portray for history's keeping the two pregant years through which this nation has just passed, and showing the rapid formation of our national army, it culminates in visualization of one of the bravest exploits of any military unit in all the years of history. Because of its fidelity to details and to the spirit of every home and individual throughout this land when once the United States was roused to war. 'The Lost Battalion' may be called a most valuable historical document."

The New York Evening Journal correspondent wrote:

"The film, which was reproduced by Edward A. MacManus, was shown at the Grand theatre. Governor Holcomb and Mayor Kinsella attended.

"The house was packed, hundreds being turned away, necessitating an extra detail of police to keep traffic clear.

"'The Lost Battalion'" as a production excels in photography, originality and scenic effects. In fact, it is one of the most remarkable screen features ever produced, rivalling anything ever attempted before, greater in both story and romance than the 'Birth of a Nation,' and excelling the latter production in its originality, if not artisically."

Claim "Desert Gold" a Sensation

Private New York View Is Given; Release About Sept. 1

REALLY successful motion pictures are, after all, so comparatively few and far between that the achievement of one becomes known throughout the length and breadth of the industry as if by electric communication. Such a feeling with regard to Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner's first Zane Grey picture, "Desert Gold," is claimed by the producers to have received verification during the week upon the arrival of the picture in New York and its private presentation, folowed later by a trade showing for the representatives of the English and continental picture organizations.

For two months the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors of all the Benjamin B. Hampton Great Anthors and Zane Grey productions, has been seeking to expedite the delivery of "Desert Gold" to New York and with equal resoluteness Benjamin B. Hampton has been holding on to his production until it received from his California organization final touches.

"Desert Gold" is a picture that Hodkinson believes will beyond question make records. W. W. Hodkinson's personal comment on the production after its initial showing to the executives of the Hodkinson organization gives a valuation of the picture. He said: "Not since I first saw 'The Birth of a Nation' have I had such a thrill from a motion picture." And a competitive distributor of one of the most powerful companies further emphasized this comment by saying: "'Desert Gold' is not in the same street with any other picture I can remember."

Zane Grey manifestly expresses his own complete satisfaction with his picture by putting his autographed signature on the opening title of the first of his novels made by the company bearing his own name.

T. Hayes Hunter is the director of "Desert Gold" and following the Hampton idea and policy of not permitting any one actor to dominate a picture and consequently distort the story by such undue character emphasis, there is a cast with E. K. Lincoln as Fighting Dick Gale; Margery Wilson as Dolores Castaneda; Eileen Percy as Nell; Russell Simpson, W. Lawson Butt, Arthur Morrison, Edward Coxen, Frank Brownlee and William Bainbridge. Readers of the story "Desert Gold" will be amazed to see the tremendous breadth of the story and how a plot of such diversity and so many angles has been compressed into seven vital reels. No detail or sequence of events in the plot of the novel have been eliminated or abridged.

The Hodkinson organization announces that "Desert Gold" prints will be in all of its offices by August 15th and definite announcement is made that no theatre presentation to the public can be booked or arranged prior to September 1.

Odd Animal Life Shown in Pathe Review

Of rare appeal to naturalists is the Pathe Review, No. 15, released August 3rd. Every student of the habits of birds and animals will find in the scenes presented some new and surprising phases of life in the open. Under the title "Zoo Babies", a series of pictures taken under the direction of Dr. Ditmars, curator at the Bronx Zoological Gardens, one gets an intimate portrait of the Australian emu.

The Ditmars pictures also show little Teddy bears at play, mother meantime watching.

Benefits of Non-Theatre Release

A DIRECT benefit to exhibitors is one of the important results expected from the plans of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to produce and distribute educational subjects to non-theatrical organizations such as schools, clubs, commercial bodies and social welfare centers. This declaration was made this week by David K. Niles, head of the non-theatrical pictures department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Only one section of the motion picture's field has been developed thus far," declared Mr. Niles. "The situation in the film industry as it stands now is the same as if all the publishers in the world united and declared they would publish nothing but love stories, adventure stories and joke books. Practically the only motion pictures that have been produced are photo-dramas or comedies.

"Now there is an immense section of the American public that would like a little more solid food with their entertainment. These people, educators, ministers, social workers, club women—attend motion picture plays in theatres, but the number of people who have not yet realized the merit of pictures—in fact, condemn pictures out of hand—is astonishingly large. These people are a dead loss to the exhibitor; he cannot reach them with the pictures which he shows for entertainment.

"One of the results of the distribution of educational pictures to clubs, schools, colleges, etc., will be that this large public will be sold on motion pictures in general. Once they see pictures that have an educational value—and people in the film industry, I think, are pretty unanimous in the opinion that the motion picture is the greatest educational force there is—they will be more open-minded regarding pictures in general.

A beautiful set of white fox furs—and Enid Bennett, Paramount-Ince star

"The educational picture will act as a missionary which will convert millions of men and women to the motion picture. Thus the non-theatrical distribution of pictures will bring new patrons to the regular exhibitor's theatre—and these patrons will be leaders in the community.

"The truth of the statement that the best way to convert the motion picture's enemies to the merit of the screen is to show them good pictures of an educational value was strikingly illustrated at the recent centenary convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Columbus, Ohio. There were a large number of Methodist clergymen and church dignitaries who, opposed to motion pictures, confessed that they never had seen a picture. We showed them some, and right then and there those men became picture fans. When they returned to their home towns they were new patrons for their film theatres; and because of the prominence of their position they will prevail upon others to become film fans, too.

"The same result will happen from the distribution of our pictures to schools and women's clubs. This distribution will win educators to the value of the picture as a community asset and will enlist their support in behalf of the regular picture exhibitors.

"So that exhibitors will get the full benefit of this missionary force of the educational picture, we are taking elaborate precautions to insure the regular exhibitor from competition by the non-theatrical picture shows. The pictures which we shall distribute to the non-theatrical field will be of a nature that will not bring them in competition with exhibitors."

French Sales Offices to Rent Vitagraphs

Ronald A. Reader, formerly at the head of the Vitagraph Company in Paris, France, has sailed for France, where he will open a number of sales offices for the renting of Vitagraph films in that country.

While abroad Mr. Reader will make an exhaustive study of post-war conditions in the motion picture field, not only in France, but in England and other countries. He is thoroughly conversant with the European field, both as it concerns the native and the American-made product.

In addition to a general office in Paris, Mr. Reader will open offices in Marseilles, Bordeaux, Dunkirk, Havre, Lyons, Nice, Rouen, Toulon and possibly other French cities.

A Serial to Reach All the Theatres

THE prejudice of many of the exhibitors in the larger motion picture houses against the serial or episode play undoubtedly has cost not only the producers many thousands of dollars but has been nearly as costly to the exhibitors themselves. In addition it has deprived hundreds of thousands of picture fans from seeing a form of entertainment which they welcomed and enjoyed.

This situation has been brought about, Vitagraph believes, not alone through the inferior quality of chapter play which crept in during their infancy, but the unfavorable conditions under which they were booked.

Vitagraph always has had faith in this particular form of entertainment. It continues to make serials, and now it is soon to launch a big one, William Duncan in "Smashing Barriers".

Vitagraph points out to the exhibitor, the very name of the producer is a guarantee of the excellence of the serial. Neither Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, nor Cyrus Townsend Brady, who wrote "Smashing Barriers", would lend their names to any play which was not clean and wholesome and which they were not confident would please every man, woman and child.

The day has come, Vitagraph believes, when the big, the exclusive, the down town motion picture theatres, should balance its present program by arranging a new one, not so classic as to be almost boresome. Music, lights and color are all very well, but the pictures should not be overlooked, for it is they that make the screen theatre possible. Vitagraph claims for its serials that they are far above the general run and has undertaken to impress this, not alone upon the exhibitor, but upon the general public as well.

Vitagraph Believes Its Play Will Break Prejudices

Mr. Duncan is making rapid progress on the new serial. Working in the mountains of upper California ten episodes have already been completed. Mr. Duncan is acting as his own director. Literally hundreds of persons have been engaged for the picture and in addition there is an unusually strong supporting cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

Antonio Moreno in the Vitagraph serial "Perils of Thunder Mountain"

"Smashing Barriers" is described as a big, high-powered play of the open spaces. The producers have planned it as a play for every theatre. It is a story of luck and pluck—love and jealousy. Starting in at college, where he is a foot-ball hero, but is expelled for the wrong doing of another, Dick Daring, as played by Mr. Duncan, is taken through a strenuous career in which he successfully combats the efforts of his enemies to keep him down. He succeeds in regaining the love and confidence of his father who has turned from him because of his failure at college, Of course, ultimately he wins the girl who has been his companion throughout all his trials.

No Vacation for Morey

Harry T. Morey, Vitagraph star, is a busy man these days. His "The Man Who Won" has recently been released, "The Gamblers" has been completed and now Mr. Busy is busy on his new feature, "Out of the Dark." In fact, Mr. Morey has gone with his company to the lumber camps in New Hampshire to "shoot" the outside scenes.

Twin City Theatres Give Return Dates

For the first time in the history of the New Garrick Theatre at Minneapolis and the New Garrick Theatre at St. Paul, special feature attractions which were adjudged record breakers by popular opinion, will be playing return engagements at those theatres during State Fair week in Minnesota beginning August 31.

"Daddy Long Legs," starring Mary Pickford, produced by her and released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which surpassed all records for the Minneapolis house by more than $1,000, and which also established a high record at the New Garrick in St. Paul, will be the attraction during this carnival week.

"Burglar by Proxy," starring Jack Pickford and "A Dog's Life," a million dollar Chaplin picture, both First National attractions, will be presented State Fair week at the Lyric in Minneapolis, and the Strand at St. Paul respectively.

Territory Snapped Up on S. L. K. Serial

Attesting the poularity of Helen Holmes as a serial star, announcement comes from the S. L. K. Corporation that with only four episodes of "The Fatal Fortune" completed, practically all the American and European rights to the serial have been sold.

S. S. Krellberg, the producer and president of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, has the following to say:

"The demand for the Helen Holmes' serial, 'The Fatal Fortune,' is away beyond my fondest expectations. It proves clearly to me that Helen Holmes occupies a niche in the moving picture world that has never been obtained by any serial star.

"All those who have witnessed the first four episodes of this latest serial are very enthusiastic, and I believe the public is to witness, when completed, in 'The Fatal Fortune,' the greatest serial story that has ever been produced."

Sterns Announce First "New Plan" Comedy

The new policy already announced by Messrs. A. and J. Stern will commence on September 3rd. The first release will be a Century comedy directed and supervised by Fred C. Fishback. The title of this subject is "A Village Venus" and features Edith Roberts, formerly of the Universal, and Jimmie Adams, a well-known Keystone favorite.

Fishback has woven this little story about a home-loving wife who owns a husband, a baby, and a mortgage, and when the wily artist vividly paints a rosy horizon for Edith if she will go with him, she sees the means of paying off the pending mortgage. At the studio of this artist very funny situations arise wherein an ebony maid, some pretty scantily dressed maids, and some artists get into a mix-up. A very interesting finish ensues.

Anita Stewart in East

Anita Stewart, accompanied by her husband, Rudolph Cameron, and her production manager, R. W. MacFarland, has returned to New York after almost a whole year at the Coast. Her stay here will be brief, for she plans to return shortly to the coast to begin work on her next season's series of production under the banner of Louis B. Mayer.

Eminent Authors Refute Slander

Criticism of Pictures by Scientist Calls Forth Replies

AN answer to the attack of Dr. Hickson, psychopathic hospital expert of Chicago, on the motion picture, has been given by seven authors, whose writings are filmed by Eminent Authors. Dr. Hickson was quoted in a Chicago newspaper as saying pictures appealed only to persons whose mentality is that of children. Statements were immediately telegraphed to the Goldwyn offices in refutation and thence telegraphed to newspapers in Chicago.

Wrote Rex Beach: "Dr. Hickson evidently knows more about psychopathic ward in Chicago hospitals than about motion pictures or he would know that many established writers are anxious to follow the lead of Eminent Authors and coöperate directly with scenario experts and directors for the screen as seven of us are now doing and as I have done for several years. He is still in the dark ages of the movies, while a new day, the author's day, has dawned."

Gertrude Atherton said: "There was a time—and that not so long ago—when the author had so little consideration paid him that it wasn't strange he hesitated to write for motion pictures, but more and more I am sure the best writers will have the pleasure of seeing their stories on the screen. I am at the Goldwyn studios in California to coöperate in the production of my first picture for Eminent Authors, 'Perch of the Devil.' Actions perhaps speak louder than Dr. Hickson's words."

And Rupert Hughes: "Every man is worth writing about and writing to—even Dr. Hickson. There is still too much good in the worst of us for the best of us to scorn the rest of us. The average man is America's greatest problem. He is the chief ingredient of the cup of fury which Father Time is holding up to the lips of the world."

Basil King followed with: "Dr. Hickson is too severe. At worst the producers of motion pictures have got into a rut. My sensation at screen plays is that it is a little always the same thing—as the French say. I am at present writing what I think will make a really big picture play, and I am not appealing only to the mentality of children. Does that answer the doctor's criticism?"

Mary Roberts Rinehart replied as follows: "Moving pictures must inevitably take their place among the solid institutions of life. Here is a new art, compounded of the work, the coöperative effort of the author, director and actor. It is an art as stable as the theatre."

Gouverneur Morris wrote: "The screen is rapidly becoming a new and true medium for artistic expression, that carries something of the charm and personality of an author as well as sustains the spirit of his story."

And Leroy Scott: "Contrary to report of Dr. Hickson's statement Tolstoi thought the peasants were the hope of Russia and the true artists. Ask the doctor to read 'What Is Art,' by Tolstoi. Personally I have great hopes for the photoplay. It is coining a new form of art."

Rush Noted at Universal Studios

Thirteen Directors Busy on Coming Releases

THIRTEEN directors are actively engaged in production at Universal City this week, four others are busy cutting and titling and still another is making necessary preparations to start producing at an early date. In fact, Universal City is the busiest center of the motion picture art at present. All of the work is being carefully watched by Carl Laemmle, who is on the ground offering suggestions and supervising the production of the bigger and better pictures which Universal is now producing.

Tod Browning is filming the Henry G. Rowland story with Mary MacLaren in the leading role. Such well known players as David Butler, Spottiswoode Aitken, Fred Turner, Clarissa Selwynn and Eugenie Forde are seen in her support.

"Loot", Arthur Somers Roche's mystery story, which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post, is being made into a six-reel photoplay by William C. Dowlan, with Ora Carew and Darrell Foss in the principal parts.

Harry Carey and his entire company of more than sixty persons are on location at Big Bear Lake shooting the mountain exteriors for Carey's new photodrama, "The Eternal Savage", written by the star in collaboration with Jack Ford his director, and for which Hal Hoadley prepared the scenario.

Production started last week on "The Winged Trail", the five-reel serial melodrama, which Jacques Jaccard is producing with Lieut. O. L. Locklear, the only aviator who changes planes in mid-air, as the star. Francelia Billington, who played the principal feminine role in Eric von Stroheim's "The Pinnacle", heads Locklear's supporting cast.

"The Desert Trail" is a two-reel western drama Edward Kull is producing with Pete Morrison and Magda Lane in the principal roles.

Final scenes are being taken by Director Paul Powell on "Common Property" a drama of nationalization of women in Russia, by Elliott J. Clawson, starring Robert Andersen, Colleen Moore and Nell Craig.

"The Trembling Hour" the mystery melodrama by Kenneth B. Clark, which George Seigmann is directing, is progressing speedily with Kenneth Harlan and Helen Eddy as featured players.

Having taken the final scenes for "Sundown Trail", starring Monroe Salisbury, Rollin Sturgeon is collaborating with the editorial department on its cutting and titling.

Florence Turner this week completed "Oh, It's E. Z.", a one-reel comedy, both starring in and directing the funfest.

"Sea Goils" is the title of a beach comedy with bathing girls de luxe, which Eddie Lyons and Lee Morgan are producing at Universal City.

Monroe Salisbury's next story, based on "The Altar on Little Thunder", is being prepared by F. McGrew Willis under the supervision of Douglas Gerrard, who is to direct this new Salisbury feature play.

Norman Dawn is meeting with much success in the production of his dog drama, "The Eternal Triangle", a play of domestic life, in which only canaine actors are used. "The Jack of Hearts" is the title of a two-reel western drama Reeves Eason is producing with Josephine Hill and Jack Perrin in the leading roles. Thrills and heart interest are paramount.

Monroe Salisbury is declared to have one of the best roles of his career in "The Face in the Moonlight," Universal film

Corinne Griffith, now that she has completed her new Vitagraph feature, "The Bramble Bush," is taking a vacation before beginning her next picture, "The Climbers."

Actor Deals a Blow to Bolshevism

Frank Keenan is Guest of Famous Mayor Hanson in Seattle

FRANK KEENAN has taken the Northwest by storm, and has done a powerful work in combating the feeling of unrest among workmen of that territory. During his visit to Seattle, Mr. Keenan was the guest of Mayor Hanson, whose determined stand against the men who virtually represent Bolshevism in the United States won him nation-wide fame.

The meeting between Mayor Hanson and Mr. Keenan was a memorable event, because of the views in common held by these two regarding American labor and the things that make for ideal Americanism. In Keenan's special production, "The World Aflame," which Pathe is releasing, Seattle's historic strike finds a close parallel in the situation in which the film-world Mayor personally settles a great strike by running a car throughout the route, and finally deporting the alien disturbers. But, in the screen story, the Mayor goes further than the record of reality of making strikes thereafter impossible by bringing about the establishment of a profit sharing plan which would give labor a property interest in the work —not an autocratic profit sharing, Mr. Keenan explains, but a democratic arrangement without any touch of paternalism.

Like Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, Mayor Hanson thinks the story of "The World Aflame" carries a timely and most vital message.

In fact so thoroughly impressed was the famous Mayor by the earnestness of Mr. Keenan's interest in the working man, and of the great good which "The World Aflame" will do, that he has offered to do everything possible to further its exploitation. He has even gone further than to endorse the production by agreeing to appear in Seattle and Tacoma and make a speech during the runs of "The World Aflame," booked for those cities.

On Tuesday morning, July 15th, Mr. Keenan arrived in Spokane, where he was met at the station by Ex-Mayor Flemming and a large delegation of business men. He was conducted to the Davenport Hotel, where he was received by Mr. Davenport and escorted to the presidential suite, in which place he received hundreds of admirers until noon. He then went to the Chamber of Commerce Building, where a special luncheon had been prepared for him and at which time he gave a comprehensive talk on Labor and Capital and his next big release, "The World Aflame," a super-picture based on this vital question. In the afternoon he went to the Clemmer Theatre, where he appeared in conjunction with one of his recent releases, "The Gates of Brass." Again at the theatre his talk took a large audience by storm.

Tuesday evening he left Spokane for Seattle, arriving there Wednesday noon. Two hundred enthusiastic exhibitors and Exchange men, together with Mayor Hanson were at the station to greet him.

For a week he was honored guest at receptions and banquets, sandwiching in speeches at theatres between times.

Fairbanks Company Is Working in Three Units

There is so much activity going on around the Douglas Fairbanks Studios in Hollywood these days that the casual observer might think that there were three companies working instead of one. As a matter of fact, for all practical purposes, there are three companies at work, all with the energetic Doug in the stellar role.

No quick-change artist on the vaudeville stage has anything on the irrepressible Fairbanks these days.

He has three distinct working crews busy on his first United Artists release. As soon as he finishes with one bunch he jumps to another gang that is all set up and waiting for him. Sometimes it means a change of make-up and costume and if it does—Zip!—Ready—Camera.

Joe Henaberry is in charge of the first company and is director-general for the picture. Art Rosson has a second outfit and Victor Fleming has the third.

Pathe Serial List Progressing

Two Subjects Complete and Three More Under Way

PATHE'S serial program for 1919-1920, the largest in the history of the organization, is progressing rapidly. Two serials are ready for release, three new ones are in production and three more will be started on August 1st.

"The Great Gamble," the Western Photoplays serial co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, will be released on August 3rd. This will be followed by "The Black Secret," Pearl White's last serial, based on stories by Robert W. Chambers and produced by George B. Seitz Productions, Inc.

At the Seitz studios, Director Seitz has just completed the first episode of "Bound and Gagged," a ten-episode comedy drama serial by Frank Leon Smith, and has started work on the second. Mr. Seitz is co-starring himself in this production with Marguerite Courtot and handling the direction at the same time.

Ruth Roland has her new serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," well under way in Los Angeles. This is from a story by Miss Roland herself, and is the first production of her own company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc. The scenario is by Gilson Willets. Supporting Miss Roland is a splendid cast headed by William Human.

"The Isle of Jewels," the Arthur F. Beck serial for the Pathe program, is in production at the Crystal studios in New York City. Co-starred are Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann, and the supporting cast includes Wilfred Lytell, William Welch and John Webb Dillion. The story is by Charles Turner Dazy, author of "In Old Kentucky," and the director is Perry Verkoff.

On August 1st, Jack Norworth, vaudeville and musical comedy star, will begin work in the stellar role of a ten-episode serial by Fred Jackson, playwright. This is entitled "The Crooked Dagger" and will be produced and directed by Theodore Wharton at Ithaca. The supporting cast has not yet been announced.

About the same date Lillian Walker will begin work at Ithaca in a serial entitled "One Million Dollars Reward" by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Gray. She will be supported by a strong cast, headed by Coit Albertson. George Lessey will direct. The serial will be produced by H. Grossman of Grossman Pictures, Inc.

The Louis J. Gasnier serial, "The Third Eye," co-starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy, will be started in Los Angeles within the next few days.

This record of production sets a new mark in serial making and, when completed, will give the House of Pathe not only a huge reserve stock on which to draw, but also offers exhibitors an opportunity to supply themselves with serials for the next two years.

None other than dimpled Lillian Walker, who is making an excursion into the serial field in a production which Pathe will release

"The Blue Bonnet" Was Half Year in Making

When the executives of the National Film Corporation in Los Angeles shipped their first Billie Rhodes production for Hodkinson release, "The Blue Bonnet," to New York last week they checked up on their production records a picture that had been more than six months in the making. Taking extra time in which to produce pictures is developing into a new fashion, more especially since the producers have discerned that the old kind of pictures "do not go" with exhibitors any more.

"The Blue Bonnet," like all other productions flowing through the Hodkinson distribution mechanism, is a selective booking picture. It is not a part of a series of pictures starring popular Billie Rhodes, although in the course of a year there will be six pictures with Miss Rhodes as the star. "The Blue Bonnet" will be sold singly on merit and those exhibitors who like it can book and those that do not can leave it alone.

To Loop-the-Loop in Air Over Broadway

Plans are being made whereby Helen Holmes, star of the S. L. K. serial, "The Fatal Fortune," will, for a scene in one episode, loop the loop in an aeroplane over 42nd Street and Broadway, New York. A well known flyer, just returned from abroad, will pilot the machine.

English Peeress Was to Pose for Griffith

News from the D. W. Griffith motion picture studios in California has just brought to light the fact that Lady Diana Manners, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Rutland, and considered the most beautiful woman in England, had signed a contract to appear in motion pictures in America under the Griffin direction on the very day she received the serious injury while watching the Victory Parade in London.

It will be recalled that Lady Diana posed for the motion picture camera in London during the taking of the scenes for Mr. Griffith's "The Great Love," a picture shown in this country last year.

First Sale Recorded on Burston Serial

News from the Fancis Ford Studios at Hollywood, where President Louis Burston of Burston Films, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, is supervising, and with the aid of his staff putting the finishing touches on his latest serial, "The Mystery of 13," includes the announcement of the first sale of territorial rights to the picture. Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby head a very large cast in the production, as they did in its predecessor, "The Silent Mystery," These facts together with the enthusiastic report of his Western representative, and the unanimous and favorable verdict of Coast reviewers, led Jacob Glucksman, 110 West Fortieth Street, New York, to purchase all distributing rights to the production outside of the United States and Canada.

President Burston is shortly to leave Hollywood for New York, and will bring with him complete prints for the Eastern review.

Blackton Feature Not of Propaganda Nature

In refutation of various rumors to the effect that the first release scheduled by The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., "Moonshine and Shadow," is propaganda for prohibition, Commodore Blackton, president and director-general of the company, states:

"These rumors have evidently cropped up out of the report that William Jennings Bryan was actively interested in the production of 'Moonshine and Shadow' and would also appear in it. I have not only repeatedly denied this report, since Mr. Bryan has nothing whatever to do with the picture, but also wish to say that 'Moonshine and Shadow' is a simple straightforward argument, presented via a dramatic and entertaining fictional story, for temperance and moderation."

Intensive Journal Campaign

F. P.-Lasky Arranging Exploitation on "Dark Star," First Cosmopolitan

AN extensive campaign of exploitation, involving the use of the leading newspapers of the country, is planned for the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Dark Star," the first of the Cosmopolitan Productions, which is released August 3.

In co-operation with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the International Film Service Company, Inc., producers of Cosmopolitan Productions, have mapped out a line of action for "The Dark Star" which will be followed and from time to time amplified in connection with the exploitation of succeeding Cosmopolitan Productions.

On Sunday, August 10, a full-page magazine feature story about "The Dark Star" will appear in the magazine section of the New York Sunday American, Chicago Examiner, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner and Atlanta Journal.

About the same time, a half-page illustration by Nell Brinkley, on scenes from "The Dark Star," with Marion Davies, will appear in the following newspapers: New York Journal, Boston American, Chicago American, Los Angeles Examiner, Detroit Free Press, Atlanta Journal, Beaumont (Tex.) Journal, Washington Times, Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegram, Philadelphia Bulletin, Springfield (Ill.) State Register, Van Couver (B. C.) Sun, Fort Worth (Tex.) Southwestern American, Waco (Tex.) Tribune.

The International Film Service Company, Inc., has also sent representatives on the road to place a serial story of "The Dark Star," illustrated with stills from the picture, in the following cities and probable newspapers: Cleveland News, Baltimore American, Portland (Ore.) Oregonian, New Haven Reporter, Buffalo Inquirer, Minneapolis News, Kansas City Post, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Des Moines Register-Tribune, Omaha News or Bee, New Orleans Item, Dallas Times-Herald, Salt Lake Tribune, Denver Post or News, Birmingham News, Memphis Commercial Appeal, Indianapolis Star, Louisville Herald, Cincinnati Inquirer.

"The Lyons Mail" Soon Ready

Picture Introducing H. B. Irving to the Screen to Be Released in August

THAT the cutting and titling of "The Lyons Mail," which will introduce H. B. Irving to the screen, is now completed and the picture production of this well known play will be presented in August is the anouncement made by Triangle Film Corporation.

It is generally recognized that "The Lyons Mail" is one of the first great dual role dramas that made its appearance and the opportunity it offers for powerful acting was illustrated on many notable occasions by Sir Henry Irving, whose appearance in "The Lyons Mail" on Broadway caused a sensation in the theatrical world. The screen production of this drama presented by Triangle is said to be well worthy of the importance of the subject. Hundreds of people appear in the big scenes which have been staged along the lines of huge spectacular offerings while the dual role of the master-criminal and the prominent business man who is mistaken for him is made effective by clever camera work; the art of double exposure enabling H. B. Irving to play scenes, with himself as his double, which make the intensely interesting situations in the drama even more thrilling than the stage version.

No better opportunity for a star to show versatility is said to have ever offered by a dual role than this great classic.

Mae Murray is now at work on her second production under the direction of Leonce Perret, called "The A B Cs of Love."

New Lantern Slide Made of Celluloid

A new and improved lantern slide which is confidently expected by its makers to revolutionize this important branch of the motion picture industry is placed upon the market this week.

The new slide is known as the Fine Art Slide. It is made by the International Lantern Slide Corporation, a concern licensed under the patent held by Robert John, from whose laboratory have come scores of innovations in the photographs and printing arts.

The Fine Art Slide is not made of glass, but is printed on celluloid by a new photo-mechanical process which ensures all the best qualities of a photograph with all the evenness and perfection of a printing press copy.

Fox Film Corporation is the first company to purchase the new slide in large quantities and has already ordered Fine Art Slides for all its announced features.

The danger of breakage is entirely eliminated, as the slides are printed in celluloid instead of on glass. They can be shipped more easily than the old style slides, as a two-cent stamp will carry them anywhere in the United States by first-class mail. Hand coloring is not necessary to produce a colored slide as the slides may be tinted in any color or shade desired or in any combination of two colors. Including black and white, some thirty-four attractive color combinations have been worked out, while the possibilities of new combinations are infinite.

The slides are trimmed to lantern-slide size and are furnished in an envelope containing complete instructions for projection. These instructions are simplicity itself. The slide may be placed in the lantern as it comes, or it may be fastened between two pieces of cover glass, the tops and bottoms of which are fastened together with the adhesive tape which is furnished with each slide.

Although made of celluloid, the composition of each slide is such that they stand up under the heat from the lamp house almost twice as well as do ordinary lantern slides.

The new process by which these slides are made is the invention of Robert John, a photographic and printing expert. The International Lantern Slide Corporation has arranged for an exclusive license under Mr. John's patents, and has equipped a large loft with the automatic machinery necessary to make these slides. The company now has a capacity of 200,000 slides a week.

J. C. Ragland who will handle Realart's interests in St. Louis

Topic of Day Features "Everybody's Business"

Bolshevism is one of the outstanding features of "Everybody's Business," the six-reel photoplay to be released very shortly by W. H. Productions Company. It picturizes every phase of Bolshevism in a dramatic way. However, one of the most predominating elements throughout the film is that of the spirit of Americanism that is developed so that the patriotism of every audience will be aroused to the greatest degree.

Throughout every scene there is said to be action, suspense, and dramatic interest. Many agencies for co-operation have been linked up in the exploitation of this feature. Civic societies, schools, women's clubs and all other prominent organizations in every city, town and hamlet will join in to help boost "Everybody's Business."

Blackwell Begins on New Production

Carlyle Blackwell, long a star personality of the screen, has launched his own producing company and leaves for California this week to begin preparations for the first production which is to be a society drama photographed from a popular fiction work now reckoned as one of the best sellers.

Mr. Blackwell is busily engaged casting the twenty-three principal roles.

The productions will be made on an elaborate scale, with no maximum cost set.

The entire output of the Blackwell organization has already been disposed of to Joseph Friedberg, who in turn is to arrange distribution.

Pickford Success Opens a Theatre

"Daddy Long Legs," Miss Mary Pickford's rare success, has been selected by the M. E. Comerford Amusement Company, as the attraction for the opening days of the new Strand Theatre at Sunbury, Pa. The theatre is to open under the Comerford management July 31, and the Pickford film has been leased for that day and the remaining days of the week.

No American-English Rancor

Hard Feeling Confined to Few, Says English Film Man on Business Here

As an earnest of England's producing intentions, A. H. Sowerbutts, Managing Director of United Kingdom Photoplays, London, is here and has signed for the complete line of studio equipment controlled in foreign fields by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. Major Sowerbutts—so called because he served with that rank in the Royal Engineers throughout the late war—is headquartering at Inter-Ocean Building.

"England feels no bitterness against American producers now working there, despite the ravings of a small section of our own industry of which you may have read," said the visitor. "The mass of us have not lost our sanity enough to believe that no possible good can come of such an invasion. If America is at the pinnacle in film producing, England can only benefit by the work on her shores of American producing talent. She will benefit as you folks did when the French studio wizards came to your country.

"Among other good things American we want your best studio accessories. For England is frankly tired of her old place in the producing field. We are going to turn out the best. We are going to use the best tools. British Charlie Chaplin and Canadian Mary Pickford are evidence that we have the acting talent: we must simply develop this, also the directorial and technical. On the all-important story side we need fear no one—the release lists of the biggest American producing firms show where the work of the British author stands.

"So it is just a case of capitalizing all these elements and moving slowly but surely to the top. Certainly the market for well-produced pictures is tremendous. I have been perfectly amazed to learn first-hand the amount of business a really big picture could do in this country. I know of a recently released British film that is close to the hundred thousand dollar mark already. This must clearly indicate to my friends at home that it is untrue you do not want British pictures—when they are right."

Beach's Film for New House

Capitol Theatre, Claimed Largest in World, Will Run "Girl from Outside"

Another triumph for Goldwyn Pictures is found in the booking of Rex Beach's "The Girl From Outside," the author's first big picture in the series scheduled for release during the period beginning September 1st by Vice President and Managing Director E. J. Bowes, of the Capitol theatre, located at Fifty-first street and Broadway, New York, and claimed to be the largest theatre in the world.

The date of the opening of the mammoth theatre, devoted to motion picture productions of the highest order, has not been decided upon, but it will be some time early in the autumn, and Mr. Bowes, who is going to conduct the house on an independent policy, is combing the market for films of the highest quality. Those who have seen Mr. Beach's latest and had a chance to compare it with his previous successes, such as "The Auction Block," "The Brand" and "The Crimson Gardenia," state that it surpasses anything he has done. "The Girl From Outside" will be one of the first, if not the initial, production to be shown at the Capitol.

Mr. Bowes has expressed himself as being convinced of the popular appeal of this story of Alaska which contains some remarkable fight scenes and night effects such as never have been achieved in any film. Included in the cast are Clara Horton, in the title role; Wilton Taylor, Cullen Landis and others who are recognized as screen players of the highest caliber.

World Shifts a Title

World Pictures announces a change in the name of the release scheduled for August 25, from "The Man Without a Name" to "The Clouded Name." Corene Uzzell and Edgar Keller are featured with John Lowell, who is the star of the production.

Many Inquiries About New World Release

The announcement made last week in trade papers that the World Film Corporation had secured the distribution rights to "When Bear Cat Went Dry", has resulted in so many telegraphic inquiries concerning the release date and other matters incidental thereto, that similar records held by other features distributed by the World company have been broken. It would appear that "When Bear Cat Went Dry" will set a high water mark for receipts if these inquiries are any value in forecasting business.

The advertising department of World pictures is busy devising new ideas for exploiting this feature and the exhibitor will be furnished with a number of business teasers that should help to make this feature a box office winner of the first magnitude. The twenty-four sheet stands are of the kind that you can read blocks away and feature the name of the picture and have the least possible amount of reading matter, so that the title is given every chance to be prominent.

Suggestions for stage settings will be illustrated in the plan book so that it will be an easy matter for the exhibitor to get an idea that will be inexpensive and yet at the same time effective.

Famous Play Screened by Triangle

Among the important features to be presented by Triangle Film Corporation in the near future is one which it is thought will prove an addition to the list of really great stage dramas recorded by the camera. It is an elaborately staged production of the drama "The Lyons Mail," made doubly famous as Sir Henry Irving's favorite vehicle and played by him with success on Broadway.

Few dramas of recognized greatness present the picture producer with such opportunities for thrilling situations and big spectacular scenes as this melodrama. Opening with a sensational robbery of the mails, followed by a foul murder, the story suddenly develops an unusually absorbing plot by fixing the crimes upon a man of excellent repute who bears an uncanny likeness to the criminal.

H. B. Irving appears in the dual role.

Road Success Reported by Pioneer Salesmen

The Pioneer force of salesmen are touching every centre in the country, rapidly bringing their first tour to a close and will shortly report to the home office in New York, for instructions regarding their second swing across the country.

Jerry Abrams has been actively engaged in the middle west and within a few days expects to sign up for the sale of the entire Pioneer list of pictures to the leading independent exchange men of that section.

S. Arnowitz of the Quality Films of Des Moines is meeting with success with "Virtuous Sinners" and the other Pioneer features which he is handling.

Lee Kiddies Toiling; Not Retired

Jane and Katherine Lee, who are now producing a series of two-reel comedies for the Rogers Film Corporation, have been the recipients of a great many "movie fan" letters recently. This is remarkable due to the fact that they have not been making pictures since March, and their many admirers have sent queries as to their future plans.

As they are very busily engaged, it was decided to make a beautifully designed card, with their pictures enclosed in a medallion, and an autograph. On this they also state their plans for the future. They will be mailed all over the world in answer to these many letters.

Beck Leases Studios

To house the companies numbered in the producing activities of Arthur F. Beck he has leased both the Crystal Studios and laboratories located in the Bronx and the Pathe Studios located in Jersey City.

Both studios are humming with activity at the present time and some big announcements are in the offing.

Mr. Beck states that for the opening of the motion picture season this fall he will offer no less than five big special productions and two fifteen episode serials through different distributing channels.

The present serial now in course of production will be released by Pathe—in September. It is entitled "The Isle of Jewels."

Pathe Serial Program Opens

"Great Gamble" Released August 3; Brunet Sees Greater Serial Demand

GREATLY increased popularity for the ever-popular motion picture serial is predicted by Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., judging from reports received from Pathe's thirty-one branch offices following the announcement of the firm's big serial program for 1919-1920.

"The Great Gamble," the Western Photoplays serial which will be released on August 3rd, is looked upon by branch managers and exhibitors who have seen the early episodes as the ideal attraction with which to launch a project as big as Pathe's announced serial program. According to their opinion, it contains all the elements that have been found to grip and hold audiences, mystery, romance and thrills, without once resorting to illogical situations.

"'The Great Gamble,'" said Mr. Brunet, "is in our opinion just the kind of a serial the public wants. It contains no tiresome mystery, hideous characters or unrealities, and yet there is present the element of adventure under sufficiently strange circumstances to arouse and hold interest throughout the entire fifteen episodes.

"Pathe is universally known as 'The House of Serials,' not alone because of quantity, but quality as well. Pathe has made more successful serials than all other companies combined, and today our serials have a proven value. We have specialized, therefore we know how to make serials.

"Serials today are in greater deman than ever, as the record of our recent releases prove conclusively, and with our plans for 1919-1920 now well in operation we are looking forward to a record-breaking period."

Anticipate Briggs Cartoons

Exhibitors Anxiously Looking for Sept. 1 Release Through F. P.-Lasky

AN indication of the great exhibitor interest which prevails in good comedy subjects, and the desire of theatre managers to get such subjects, is reflected in the numerous letters of inquiry regarding the Paramount-Briggs Comedies said to have been received by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which will release the comedies beginning September 1.

Exhibitors throughout the country, who long have been admirers of the Briggs cartoons, which appear in nearly 500 newspapers all over the United States and Canada, have expressed themselves in letters to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as eagerly awaiting the first release of the Briggs subjects September 1. This interest on the part of the exhibitors, the letters indicate, has been heightened by inquiries from their patrons, who have gone to them and asked if they were going to show the Briggs Comedies.

"That is one of the outstanding features of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies," said Al Lichtman, general manager of the distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "The tremendous popularity which the Briggs newspaper cartoons already have established throughout the country has furnished a ready-made demand for the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, which are screen interpretations of the stories told in the Briggs cartoons. The 500 newspapers which carry the Briggs cartoons reach every city and hamlet of the United States and Canada, and have made the public familiar with the Briggs type of clean, wholesome humor.

"In addition, this public demand is being stimulated by the publication in all the newspapers of the New York Tribune Syndicate of numerous feature stories, regarding the Paramount-Briggs Comedies."

Mayer Acquires Novels and Big Stories

In the efforts by producers to tie up every available story, whether in magazine or book form, and even to tie up the authors themselves, Louis B. Mayer has quietly done considerable tieing up himself, with the result that he has acquired a batch of much-talked of magazine stories and best selling books. Some of these will be used as vehicles for Miss Anita Stewart, one of Mr. Mayer's stars, and the others will serve to star Mildred Harris Chaplin who recently signed a long-term contract to produce pictures under Mayer's management.

While no information was given out as to how much Mr. Mayer paid for each individual story and book, it was stated at the Mayer offices here that a good-sized fortune was paid for the following: "The Yellow Typhoon," by Harold Magrath, "The Fighting Shepherdess," by Caroline Lockhart; "Old Dad," by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott; "The Judgment of Men," by Mabel Keightly and Leigh Gordon Giltner; "The Lady From Longacre," by Victor Bridges; "The Bitter Cut," by Edith Sessions Tupper; "Foolish Youth," by Louise Winter; "Danger," by H. H. Van Loan, and "Watch Your Wife," by E. Mason Hooper.

Realart Branch Notes

The Omaha exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation will be in charge of B. A. Lucas, who was appointed by J. S. Woody, General Sales Manager.

Starting as an exhibitor, Mr. Lucas has been identified with several of the more important picture companies.

Owing to the difficulty of getting suitable quarters for the Pittsburgh exchange of Realart Pictures Corporation, Nat Barach, branch manager, has been temporarily located at 412 Ferry Street. He will remain at the Ferry Street address until the middle of August when he will move into permanent offices at 1018-1020 Forbes Street.

King Cole Comedies

Sammy Burns, comedian and director, whose work will be featured in the forthcoming King Cole Comedies, is rapidly organizing his cast for the first picture. Filming will begin as soon as alterations are made of Motion Picture Producing Company of America's studio at Dongan Hills, Staten Island.

Keeping Finger Close on Exhibitor Pulse

In pursuance of the United Picture Theatres, Inc., executive policy of keeping in constant close touch with the views and interests of its exhibitor-members, Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of that organization is away on a tour of the Middle West and Coast circuit of United Theatres.

C. R. Seelye left last week for a tour of the South with Atlanta as his immediate objective. The enlargement of the United field in the South, necessitating the appointment of additional sales forces, is among the matters that have taken the United secretary to Atlanta, and it is said that important announcements are likely to follow upon his return to New York.

C. C. Johnson, business manager of United Productions Corp., starts this week upon a visit to the chief Eastern centres to supervise the field forces under his charge and will be accompanied by Jack Levy, special Eastern representative of the Productions Corporation.

Post Nature Pictures Appeal to Clubs

A feature in connection with the booking of the Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, which will be released every two weeks beginning September 1st, was emphasized this week in a statement by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which will distribute the pictures.

In booking these pictures, it was asserted, exhibitors will find that they can obtain the coöperation of schools, women's clubs and nature study organizations, for, while the pictures are produced primarily for entertainment, they have a distinct educational value which will enlist the support of organizations interested in nature study.

Chicago Corporation Changes Hands

Acme of Artistry Is Sought

"The Gray Horizon," Robertson-Cole, Said to Set Mark in Creative Effect

AN indication of what the motion picture producer of today is trying to do along artistically creative lines is said to be contained in the Robertson-Cole feature, "The Gray Horizon," starring Sessue Hayakawa, which will be released by Exhibitors Mutual.

In its campaign on this production Robertson-Cole call particular attention, besides the dramatic merit of the offering, to its photographic composition and treatment; the artistic handling of the lighting effects in the interior scenes; the beauty and richness of the exteriors, especially in some of the mountain and cloud night scenes, and the great amount of detail used in Haworth's for making motion pictures really beautiful as well as entertaining.

"The Gray Horizon" is from the pen of Clifford Howard, author of a number of very successful motion picture plays, and was directed by William Worthington, who has achieved the maximum success with every Hayakawa offering since the Japanese star aligned himself with Robertson-Cole.

Hayakawa, Worthington and Frank D. Williams form an artistic trio hard to surpass. They spent hours achieving the effect they desire before a scene is "shot." In addition, they have innumerable special lenses, filters, lights and other effects that enable them to get almost anything they desire in photography.

Tauru Aoki, Hayakawa's wife, will be seen again with him in "The Gray Horizon." This is Aoki's first appearance on the screen since "The Courageous Coward." The clever little Japanese actress has appeared with Hayakawa in his biggest successes and her work is always of a character that arouses the most favorable comment of critics. A high-class cast supports Hayakawa in "The Gray Horizon."

$100,000 for Four Film Plots

Universal Makes Big Offer for Plots Suitable for Miss Dorothy Phillips

BELIEVING from every viewpoint that the motion picture art should be and is being advanced and that money should not be spared in making it perfect, the Universal Film Company announces a great offer for material with which to produce great photo-dramas.

The large sum of one hundred thousand dollars is offered for four stories which can be put into screen form and which will be suitable for casting Dorothy Phillips in the leading role.

For years the Universal Company has gone forward, each year reaching a higher level and perfection in the production of motion pictures. It has never failed to realize that the public is the master of the future of any art or organization and has continually endeavored to please. What Universal has accomplished need only be judged by the fact that it is today the oldest producing company in America. And at this time when motion picture history is being changed as well as advanced, Universal officials agreed that only the best material possible to obtain would be suitable for Universal's greatest star, Dorothy Phillips.

The Universal Company asks the assistance of the Authors of America League and its members, in a letter sent to the managing secretary of the league.

The plots may be submitted in story or scenario form.

Vera Stedman, well-known throughout Los Angeles for her swimming feats, is being featured in a two-reel comedy by Messrs. A. and J. Stern.

The L-KO release of August 19 will be entitled "The Girl and the Gangster," which will feature the clever comedian, Chai Hong, or better known as Charlie from the Orient.

Salesman, Back in Atlanta, Banqueted

To celebrate his return to Atlanta, the Film Managers' Association of that city gave a luncheon in honor of Ben F. Simpson, Field Manager of Realart, on Saturday, July 19. Four years ago Mr. Simpson represented George Kleine in the southern metropolis, and during his term of office there he made many friends among exhibitors.

Mr. Simpson reports that exhibitors in Atlanta have shown keen interest in Realart Pictures. This interest is intensified because Arthur S. Kane, the head of this organization, is extremely popular with the men who run photoplay theatres in that territory.

"Judge Rummy" Release

"Judge Rumhouser" and the cimic characters of Tad's famous "Silk Hat Harry Livestock Co," are the featured artists in "His Briny Romance"—a story of the "Judge" and "Harry" and the sad sea waves—that provides the funny streak on this week's Rialto program. The subject is one of the new International Black-and-White comedies, released by the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Convicts and Officials of State in Picture

Actual convicts take part in a series of films just completed by the Universal Industrial Department, under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager, for the state of Illinois. This series of pictures is representative of one of the most novel uses to which the motion picture has as yet been put.

Not only convicts, but inmates of the Illinois hospitals for the insane and other institutions, take part in the picture, which is to be used by Illinois state officials for educational purposes. It will receive its first showing next week at the mansion of Governor Louden in Springfield, Ill.

The Governor himself, as well as his cabinet, the state senate and the house of representatives, took part in this series of pictures.

This film for the first time in the history of Illinois, presents the Illinois senate and house of representatives in actual session. Several minor bills were discussed and passed while the cameraman arranged his lamps and while he "shot" the scenes.

Universal Educationals Are Sought For

Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational and Industrial Departments, returned this week from a several days' visit in the west, during which time he visited business acquaintances in Cleveland, Chicago and other points. Incidentally, he announced that he had brought back to New York the largest contract for the distribution of educational pictures in the history of the industry.

Mr. Levey is supervising the production of several thousand feet of educational film devoted to the rubber industry. One of his cameramen is at present in the South Seas, and while there will take several thousand feet of film on the Islands of Sumatra, Java and Borneo.

New Christie Special in Preparation

Al E. Christie has started production upon his new Christie Special in two reels featuring Edith Roberts, Neal Burns and Eddie Barry. Neal Burns not only is Miss Roberts' main support, but is author of the story as well. The picture, which will be ready for release sometime in September, will be called "He Married His Wife."

Woman in State Rights Distribution Field

It has remained for Cleveland to produce a woman state rights distributor. Miss Margaret Celestia Ferron, has accomplished two important things. She paid $40,000.00 for the Ohio rights of the picture, "Determination," which is to be made shortly, said to be about the biggest price ever paid for the Ohio rights.

Vivian Martin Returns to New York

Vivian Martin, who tripped away from Broadway three and a half years ago for a fling at motion pictures after her stage successes in "Stop Thief," "Officer 666" and "The Only Son" and who has been making from nine to eleven pictures annually ever since, has returned to New York for her first visit.

Kremer Resurrects Features

Many Popular Pictures Including "Skinner's Dress Suit" Are Offered

"SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT" will make its bow to the public a second time very shortly. This will be followed later by the other two in the Skinner series, "Skinner's Bubble" and "Skinner's Baby."

These features will be released State Rights by Victor Kremer Film Features. It was decided to put out new prints on these pictures after hundreds of inquiries had come from exhibitors asking why Skinner was not on the market again.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is the story of Henry Irving Dodge, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The picture features, as does the other Skinner stories, Bryant Washburn and Hazel (Honey) Daly.

The story of the rise of a man of ability from a clerk to a partner in his firm, after having been a drudge for years, because he invested in a dress suit and moved among the men who amounted to something, attracted unusually wide attention.

Exhibitors, who ordinarily use only first run pictures, have expressed themselves as desiring to make an exception in this case and to run "Skinner's Dress Suit" a second time. A full complement of new advertising matter will be put out with the picture.

Victor Kremer also is planning to distribute other Essanay feature pictures, beginning early in the fall, probably in September. The first releases will be a block of ten pictures, to be released one a week through state right buyers.

These will include two Henry B. Walthall pictures, "The Misleading Lady" and "Little Shoes," two of the best pictures made by this genius of the screen; the best of the Taylor Holmes features, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship"; a Bryant Washburn mystery play, "The Alster Case"; "The Man Trail," with Captain Richard C. Travers, the star who quitted photoplays to enter the army when the war broke out; four Jack Gardner western dramas, "The Range Boss," "Open Places," "Men of the Desert" and "Land of Long Shadows," and "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," featuring Mr. Travers and Sallie Fisher.

Campaign to Exploit Pauline

Supreme Pictures Plan Far Reaching Advertising of Serial with Hypnotist

J. ROBERT PAULINE, hypnotist and vaudeville headliner, who has just commenced work on the new Supreme Pictures, Inc., serial, temporarily entitled "Brewster's Mysterious Millions", is to be given a great exploitation and publicity campaign covering numerous phases of motion picture advertising, according to Mr. Sidney Reynolds, president of the Supreme Pictures, who goes on to state that every city in the United States with a population of 25,000 and over is under consideration for a bill-board campaign wherein twenty-four sheets will be utilized with a design which, it is planned, will be a box-office smash. This poster campaign is being definitely determined with representatives of the poster companies and artists are already working on the designs.

Mr. Reynolds adds that a string of 1,500 newspapers is to be utilized to carry the message of J. Robert Pauline across the country while a series of special articles on hypnotism and the spirit world are being prepared for use in magazines and Sunday Supplements. One of these series has already been accepted by a syndicate which represents a string of several hundred newspapers in the country—the article going to one newspaper in each city exclusively.

Mr. Reynolds also announces that the motion picture exhibitors will be acquainted with the merits of his serial through the advertising pages

Second Part of Jose Film in Making

The first half of "Mothers of Men," the first of the Edward Jose Productions for Film Specials, Inc., featuring Claire Whitney and Lumsden Hare, has just been completed. This takes in the German Episodes of the book. Part 2, which is composed of the French Episodes of this novel by Henry William Warner and DeWitte Kaplan, was started last week with Martha Mansfield in the role of the French girl, "Paulette."

Mr. Jose is using some remarkably elaborate sets for "Mothers of Men," one of them a typical German bier garten, in which almost three hundred extras take part. There will also be an elaborate wedding scene, and several settings giving opportunity for the display of ultra smart fashions in the gowns worn by Martha Mansfield.

Star Aids Stage Women's War Relief

Miss Constance Binney, who will star for Realart Pictures spent all of her spare time last week in the interest of the Stage Women's War Relief. This organization is presenting a series of twelve photodramtic productions in which appear the foremost stage celebrities of the present day.

The play in which Miss Binney starred was known as "Tom's Little Star." It was written by Mrs. Otis Skinner, and associated with Miss Binney in the cast were Blanche Bates, William Jefferson, Wheeler Dryden, Henry Hull, Lucia Moore and John W. Cope.

Well Known Players in Blanche Sweet Cast

A Zulu village has been constructed in Tejunga Pass near Los Angeles for use in the production starring Blanche Sweet titled "A Woman of Pleasure," an English melodrama by James Willard. The story, which was picturized by George Elwood Jenks, and is being directed by Wallace Worsley, has been enlarged upon for screen purposes to a size of seven reels. In the cast are several well known players including Wheeler Oakman, Wilfred Lucas, Spottiswoode Aitken, Joseph Swickard and Frederick Starr, not to exclude the rising juvenile, Wesley Barry.

Kerrigan's Picture Attracts Exhibitors

The W. W. Hodkinson announcement that "A White Man's Chance," J. Warren Kerrigan's first Robert Brunton production, is unquestionably the most powerful picture made by this star brought scores of the nation's most prominent showmen to trade showings held the fore part of the week in Hodkinson exchange cities throughout the country.

As a result many of these big exhibitors are now engrossed arranging play dates on the big Kerrigan-Brunton special.

"A White Man's Chance" is by Johnston McCulley and it first was published in Munsey's Magazine. Mr. Kerrigan has as his leading woman in this story Lillian Walker, long a star in her own right.

Leaders in All Fields Disport in Film

What is claimed to be one of the costliest and highest priced one reelers ever produced, that is, potentially, was filmed at the Thomas H. Ince studio in Culver City a few days ago, and will be released to exhibitors all over the country—costly, not in point of the footage or time consumed, but considering the salaries of the actors who appear therein.

The picture was filmed by the cameraman during the lunch hour and shows the various actors, officials and others at informal recreation on the lawn surrounding the big natatorium. Among those who will be seen in the picture are Thomas H. Ince, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett, Douglas MacLean, Doris May, Louise Glaum; Directors Fred Niblo, Henry King, Jerome Storm, William P. S. Earle, J. Parker Reed, general manager; Clark W. Thomas, manager of production; Fred Fralick, casting director; C. Gardner Sullivan, head of the scenario department, and Ma.

Many Exhibitor Aids on Capital Offerings

Believing that the Neal Hart and Al Jennings features are in the class of productions that will permit of being exploited with big advertising surroundings and stage settings, Capital Film has at big expense prepared a complete line of pictorial printing. One sheet, three sheets, six sheets and twenty-four sheets are stands, and special lobby display photographs are included.

The Heralds and advance work novelties comprising cut outs, window cards, etc., have been designed and executed by artists whose skill places them in the front line of commercial art and will compel attention. The trailers and slides have been made by the Filmcraft Company.

Kremer Puts One Over

Victor Kremer, according to word from the Coast, has completed one of the biggest deals of the year in selling to the M. & R. company of San Francisco some score of pictures. The list includes seven five-reelers of brand new films, ten other five-part pictures and thirty one-reel Essanay re-issues, the latter including Broncho Billy stories, comedies and George Ade's fables in slang.

Beck Is Expanding Interests

Closes Deal Acquiring Interests in Artco Production Starring His Wife

A NEW deal by Arthur F. Beck has been culminated whereby he has bought out the entire interests of former president Harry Raver and Arthur Butler Graham and George Irving in Artco Productions, Inc.

Artco Productions, Inc., is producing the series of Leah Baird-August Thomas special productions for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This is the firm that produced "As A Man Thinks," and is just getting ready to release "The Volcano."

In assuming the reins of production, Mr. Beck announces "Taking a tip from the phenomenal results that the Hodkinson organization is producing with our first special, "As A Man Thinks," I have told Mr. Thomas that we want to produce his biggest play successes and provide them as the vehicles for Miss Baird."

"Every big circuit and theatre of standing in the country has been enthusiastic over the work of Miss Baird in "As A Man Thinks." Instead of original scenarios by Mr. Thomas, the future vehicles for Miss Baird will therefore be known box-office attractions similar to our first big success. Our second release, "The Volcano," will be a sure-fire winner for the exhibitors because of its vitally throbbing timeliness. The demands of the first-run houses for Miss Baird in the big special dramatic plays that she has established herself in, causes me to definitely state that her future releases will follow the lines requested by her followers, however."

George Irving will continue as director of all the productions, his only reason for selling his stock being that Mr. Beck was desirous of owning 100 per cent of the stock of the company of which his wife, Leah Baird, is star.

A Convention Feature

"Heroes All!" a one-reel picture produced under the supervision of Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational and Industrial Departments, through the courtesy of the Universal company, will be one of the features at the convention of the Motorcycle and Allied Trades Association at Atlantic City, August 6th and 7th.

"Heroes All" was photographed on the day that 3,000 motorcycle riders in New York and Brooklyn visited the army hospitals in the city and were entertainers of more than 3,900 wounded soldier boys in a "sidecar" tour of the city which wound up with a royal entertainment at Van Courtlandt Park.

"Bandbox" Cast Augmented

Three Players Are Added to the List of Those in First Deitrich-Beck Film

THREE additions have been made to the cast of "The Bandbox," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series of super-features to be made by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., and distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The three latest acquisitions are Greta Hartman, Edward Keppler and Lorraine Harding.

Greta Hartman is "the girl of many names." Born a Swede, she began her stage career under her own name of Greta Hartman. Soon afterwards she changed it to Gretchen Hartman, which was a very fine name until Germany got into bad repute, by which time Miss Hartman had attained stardom. Then an enterprising producer, objecting to the German sounding name, decided to make a Russia of her, for the Czar was still the Czar and the Russians were fighting shoulder to shoulder with the Allies. So Gretchen Hartman became Sonia Markova, under which nom de theatre she starred until Bolshevism cast odium on all things Russian. Then back to Greta Hartman, the name she was christened, went Sonia Markova. Miss Hartman, despite the many changes of names, is considered one of the foremost screen artists before the public. She has a very important part in "The Bandbox," second only to that of Doris Kenyon.

The other woman addition to the cast, Lorraine Harding, is declared to be the most photographed girl on the screen. She is frequently referred to as "the girl with the thousand faces."

The third addition to the cast is Edward Keppler, a talented Belgian actor who is appearing in the French theatre.

Minta Durfee to Star in Truart Series

Film Work Begun by Constance Binney

When Constance Binney arrived at the Estee Studios in New York on Monday morning, July 28th, to begin work on her first Realart Picture, "Erstwhile Susan," she was accorded a big reception. One of her associates had learned that it was Miss Binney's birthday and spread the word to the others. Upon opening the door of her dressing room, Miss Binney thought she had entered Thorley's, as she found it crowded with flowers, an offering from each member of her company. Her director, John S. Robertson, combined utility with his remembrance by presenting her with a patent leather luncheon case.

Miss Binney will leave the cast of "39 East," now playing at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York, on Saturday night, August 2nd, for a four weeks' vacation.

Surrounding Miss Binney in her Realart debut will be a cast of all-star calibre, including Mary Alden, Jere Austin, Alfred Hickman, Georges Renavent, Anders Randolf, Bradley Barker and Leslie Hunt.

Mayflower Directors to Have Free Scope

The production policy of the Mayflower organization will give special stress, it is said, to the importance of the director in the creation of artistic screen stories. Each director, according to an announcement of the company this week, is to be at the head of his own producing unit, select his own story, prepare his own script, engage the cast and staff of assistants, supervise his own sets, cut and title the picture and determine the amount of money to be spent on each production. Many good directors, according to the company's policy, have been handicapped by studio limitations of money and material for productions, and it is to avoid this that a free hand is being given to George Loane Tucker, Allen Dwan and Emile Chautard, who are now under contract to direct for Mayflower.

Distribution plans provide that each picture will be marketed independently without any programme or series which might bind the exhibitor to more than an individual choice.

Interest in New Vitagraph

Exhibitors Look Forward to Earle Williams in Stage Feature, "The Wolf"

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are taking the liveliest interest in Earle Williams' new feature, "The Wolf," Vitagraph's screen version of the drama of the same name by Eugene Walter. They are confidently expecting it to equal the record of the play in its spoken form. The feature has been completed and shown to a chosen few who were agreed that it was one of the finest pictures made in many a day.

The thousands of theatregoers who are familiar with the drama which brought fame and fortune to its author realize that it provides the screen star with one of the strongest roles in his extended career. As Jules Beaubien, the role originated by William Courtenay in the stage production, Mr. Williams has ample opportunity to display those characteristics which has made him one of the best known actors in the motion picture world.

Not alone has "The Wolf" the advantage of a capable star in its screen version, a strong cast and strong, thrilling story, but it has the additional advantage of wonderful scenic effects. The locale is entirely in the mountains of the Dominion of Canada, but the actual natural scenery of America cannot be excelled and perhaps where in the world could a more picturesque atmosphere be found for "The Wolf" than the location in the California mountains selected by James Young, the director.

Vitagraph's camera men shot all the beauties of the woods in taking the scenes of "The Wolf." When the films were developed they proved to be a revelation to the studio men.

Hilda MacTavish plays opposite Williams. Brinsley Shaw, George Nichols, Robert McKim, Billy Mason and Beulah Clark are other members of the cast.

Big Plans for Pearl White

Though Work on First Fox Picture Is Not Yet Begun, Others in Preparation

"TIGER'S CUB," announced as the vehicle for Miss White's debut as a William Fox star, will be the first of a group of big productions which Mr. Fox has planned for her.

The Pearl White program will be a series of big pictures and Miss White, under the Fox direction, is expected to add materially to the popularity she already enjoys. Every detail of the White productions will be supervised rigidly in an effort to make them stand out as pictures of marked distinction; there will be nothing of the commonplace about them.

The care that was used in the selection of a story for Miss White's Fox debut is significant of the importance which Mr. Fox attaches to the signing of this star. Scores of novels and scenarios were rejected before the choice finally fell upon "Tiger's Cub" as peculiarly adapted to Pearl White's talents.

Although work on "Tiger's Cub" has not been started, material for other Pearl White pictures is already under consideration. The novel and scenario markets will be combed in a determination to provide her with stories worthy of her art and to make sure that a Pearl White production will be a guarantee that the theatregoer is seeing something above the ordinary—something exceptionally distinctive and artistic.

Certain details of the Pearl White program are not yet ready for public announcement—for example, the identity of her director.

Music Aids to "Heartsease"

Five Music Publishing Concerns to Aid in Exploitation of Goldwyn Film

AN exploitation campaign designed to drive home the "Magic of Music" and its effects upon the sentiment of the universe is now under way by Goldwyn's Service Department for the nation-wide promotion of Tom Moore's forthcoming vehicle, "Heartsease," from the successful stage play by Charles E. Klein, directed by Harry Beaumont.

Five of the leading music publishing institutions, each having scored remarkable sales records with the various versions of the song "Heartsease," have announced their cooperation for window displays, lobby exhibits and cooperative newspaper advertising campaigns. The White-Smith Publishing Company, the Oliver Ditson Company, the C. B. Jennings Publishing Company, the John Church Company and the Jerome H. Remick Music Publishing Company are the prominent music houses supporting and boosting the new Tom Moore production.

Acknowledged to be one of the most popular ballads of the day, the song "Heartsease" will be used everywhere in conjunction with the exploitation and presentation of "Heartsease." Traveling demonstrators will lend their services for preludes and "break-ins" and orchestrations and sample copies of the piece will be supplied exhibitors with the compliments of Goldwyn and the publishers.

Beach Joins Fellow Authors on Coast

Rex Beach has left New York to make the transcontinental trip to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., where he will have a good deal to do with the next Rex Beach picture from his novel "The Silver Horde" and will cooperate as President of Eminent Authors' Pictures with Gertrude Atherton and Rupert Hughes who are already on the ground cooperating in the production of "Perch of the Devil" and "The Cup of Fury."

So far as could be learned there was no rumor of trouble in the West to take Rex Beach away from his summer home at Ardsley on the Hudson at this time. He goes according to the plan formulated at the time the new million dollar corporation was formed.

Kirkland to Again Direct Miss Talmadge

David Kirkland, who directed "A Temperamental Wife", the first of Constance Talmadge's Emerson-Loos Productions for First National, has just been signed by Jos. M. Schenck, to direct the second Constance Talmadge Production, "The Bachelor", which has been adapted for the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos from the Clyde Fitch play of the same name, which had such a successful run as a Broadway play, some few years ago. Conway Tearle will play opposite Miss Talmadge in "The Bachelor".

"A Temperamental Wife", is now completed, having been cut, titled, and delivered into the hands of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, who will shortly announce the release date of this first picture since the formation of Constance's own company.

Open New F. P.-Lasky Branches Aug. 9

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that the two new branch exchanges at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Charlotte, North Carolina, will be opened for business on or about August 9th.

Joseph H. Gilday has been appointed branch manager at Oklahoma City and David Price will act in the same capacity at Charlotte.

Further Metro Expansion Coming

Rowland's Return Will Be a Signal for Announcement

ANNOUNCEMENTS of the highest importance as bearing upon a still further expansion of Metro Pictures Corporation's "fewer, bigger and better" pictures policy will follow directly the arrival home of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., from his first-hand survey of the European motion picture field.

Cable advices from Mr. Rowland to W. E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, have been most optimistic and encouraging. They have represented the foreign field as ripe for American invasion in general and, from Mr. Rowland's viewpoint, for Metro invasion in particular.

Consequently the promised early return of its president has caused the greatest elation in the Metro organization. When Mr. Rowland comes back he will find the home office, the spacious west coast studios and the Metro exchanges throughout the country not only humming with high tension activity, but imbued with a spirit of enthusiasm and "pep" that should make glad the heart of the president of the organization.

Plans that Mr. Rowland and his immediate associates conceived as far back as a year ago, tending to the inauguration of the "fewer, bigger and better" pictures idea have matured and been carefully carried out by the organization under Mr. Atkinson's guidance. Loose ends have been gathered up; there is an undeniable momentum in all the activities of Metro just now.

Nevertheless the organization is keenly eager for Mr. Rowland's return. A very gratifying development from the first announcement of "fewer, bigger and better" policy has been a recent deluge of appeals from exhibitors all over the country seeking to book solid the entire production output of Screen Classics, Inc., which Metro is to distribute beginning with the first of September.

This has placed Mr. Atkinson in a quandary. Metro is and has been a consistent advocate of "open booking." For exhibitors to clamor for solid bookings of the Screen Classics, Inc., productions would be somewhat in contravention of this idea.

It is a problem that Mr. Atkinson is more than eager to take up with Mr. Rowland. He has made it plain that Metro will not abandon its slogan of "open bookings." It will stand by its promises to the exhibitors. But the situation is one that calls for the wisest counsel on the part of Mr. Atkinson and the Merto president as well. Immediately after Mr. Rowland's homecoming Mr. Atkinson will confer with him on this vital subject and announcement of Metro's solution of it will be made.

The air of restrained eagerness and expectancy in the Metro organization is heightened by the latest cablegram to be received from Mr. Rowland. In this he imparted the news that he has purchased the screen rights to several big European stage successes, three of which enjoyed record-breaking runs in London.

Announcement of the titles of these plays, together with full details as to the stars who will appear in elaborate screen versions of them is promised soon after the homecoming of Mr. Rowland.

The Metro president has pursued no chimeras, and has ridden no hobbies. In deciding recently upon the "fewer, bigger and better" pictures policy he followed the plain instinct of knowing the needs of the time. He foresaw the widening scope of the silent drama; he foresaw constantly rising standards of public taste and the folly of endeavoring to "play down," rather than to "play up" to this ever bettering public taste.

Mr. Rowland recognized also the intrinsic worth, as attractions of immense pulling power, of famous stage successes and celebrated novels. Metro was a pioneer in launching this idea. The company set quietly to work and by getting in on the ground floor first, acquired the screen rights to thirty-six plays and novels that are world famous.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corp.

Metro appreciated what an enormous asset there was in the advertising—through printed and word-of-mouth publicity—that accrues to a stage play that has run a year, or two or more, or a novel that has endured until millions upon millions of readers have given it the stamp of approval as a classic. It plans to put this accumulated advertising to work for Metro and for exhibitors of Metro pictures.

Maxwell Karger at Production Helm

IN order doubly to insure that the Screen Classics, Inc., studios in Hollywood shall more than fulfill all that is implied in the Metro slogan of "fewer, bigger and better pictures," Maxwell Karger has taken over complete control of production.

He will personally and constantly oversee the making of every Screen Classics, Inc., picture. He will select the cast. He will suggest to the art directors the nature of the settings; and pass carefully upon their work when submitted to him for approval. He will work at times with the scenario writers who are to turn the plays and novels Metro recently has bought, and the European dramatic successes Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., recently bought abroad, into screen form. Mr. Karger will be in conference with the several directors engaged in the actual filming of the plays which Metro will distribute.

Maxwell Karger, general supervisor of Metro pictures, production end

This procedure is entirely in line with Maxwell Karger's policy of upholding his ideas with untiring effort. Convinced that today overproduction and concomitant short runs are the principal menaces of the motion picture industry, the Screen Classics, Inc., director general has pitched in to turn out motion picture productions of such quality that exhibitors cannot afford, because of their drawing power, to play them for short runs only.

"We cannot merely stand still," said Mr. Karger recently, "and urge the exhibitor to discontinue his short-run system. Although he is in a way to blame, we cannot lay the responsibility for the evil that is besetting the industry today entirely at his door.

"And so, while we point out to the theatre manager that the long run idea in pictures, just like the long run idea in stage productions, is the best possible financial arrangement for all concerned, we must get busy ourselves and turn out pictures which because of their very merit cannot be taken from the screen and shelved after a brief period of exhibition.

"The practice of shelving a picture which cost in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars after a few weeks is preposterous. One might as well expect a publisher to put out only a few hundred copies of a best seller, or a Broadway manager to produce a stage play for a two weeks' run. The financial loss in such cases as these is most apparent, of course; yet the film industry today is indulging in a system of production and distribution that is almost comparable to it."

W. E. Atkinson
General manager of Metro

Reports of Mr. Karger's assumption of entire responsibility for production in the Screen Classics, Inc., studios, coming on the heels of the news that Mr. Rowland had gone to Europe to buy at no matter what cost the best screen material available there, has enhanced the spirit of optimism and enthusiasm among Metro exchange men. The announcement, too, that Metro stands by the open-booking system has made the task of the exchange managers decidedly easier to handle. One of the branch managers in the Middle West expressed the sentiment of the entire organization when he wrote in recently to the New York offices: "With the best pictures in the market today, we cannot help putting things over big."

It has always been the contention of Mr. Karger that no man, no matter how capable or how tireless, can turn out an abnormal quantity of work and still maintain his highest standards. Under the pressure of having a heavy and rigid schedule of releases to meet, there is bound to be, he asserts, some falling off in the standards of picture making.

Mr. Karger believes that the motion picture public today is regularly demanding standards in motion pictures that can be met only by the utmost care and the hardest work on the part of those who prepare them.

Long Runs on "Red Lantern"

Discerning exhibitors in small cities and towns have been quick to see the possibilities for profit in the Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern." Reports from Metro exchanges in various parts of the country have revealed the fact that the communities of lesser population as well as those in the great cities have demanded long runs of this picture presenting Nazimova.

In addition to the merit of the production itself, the setting and title give opportunity for exploitation.

Metro Pictures Commended

Three Metro productions are highly commended by the National Committee for Better Films and the Social Service Department of the National Board of Review, in their bulletin, issued monthly under the editorial management of Orrin G. Cocks. The photoplays so singled out are "Faith" and "The Lion's Den," in both of which Bert Lytell appears as the star; and "The Amateur Adventuress," starring Emmy Wehlen.

In the cast selected by Thomas H. Ince for "Americanism vs. Bolshevism" are Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Castleton, Claire Du Prey, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman and Gordon Mullen.

"Maruja," one of the best known of the Bret Harte stories, is the vehicle in which H. B. Warner, Jesse D. Hampton's star, has begun work under the direction of Parke Frame.

Many Studio Improvements Made

Electrical Equipment But One of Number of Items

In order to give to Screen Classics, Inc., productions every mechanical facility possible the million dollar studio at Hollywood has installed improvements which place the plant at the very top of its class. Electrical equipment costing close to $90,000 has been put in. This includes not only new devices for lighting the several stages in the studio lot, but also the generators and transformers to supply them. How extensive are these improvements may be judged from the fact that a three-story building, especially for that purpose, houses them.

Furthermore an additional open stage has been erected to give directors, electrical and photographic experts sufficient time to prepare settings for the players without sacrificing working time during the actual filming of pictures.

The Metro slogan of "fewer, bigger and better" pictures therefore is being followed from the ground up. No item—technical or otherwise—has been omitted in order to insure that exhibitors, when they receive Metro releases, may be assured that they are the last work in motion picture production today.

The new system of lighting the stages does away entirely with the old system of heavy and technically portable switchboards which must be lugged across the entire floor to get a light where desired. It does away with the shouting for lights and for "killing lights" which heretofore had been considered a necessary accompaniment to motion picture direction. There is no further need for a swarm of electricians and helpers clustered about the stage.

The lighting system is not the only evidence of mechanical advancement in the Hollywood plant. The equipment has grown while the number of productions is being cut down to conform to the fewer and better pictures idea. Only recently a fourth stage was erected in the Screen Classics, Inc., studio lot. It is an open platform 90 by 150 feet and was used for the first time by the Hale Hamilton company in filming that genial Metro star's latest picture, "The Four Flusher." Indicative of the intense activity of the studio management is the fact that this latest stage was put up in the record time of nine days, complete and ready for action. To do the work in the specified time a force of sixty carpenters worked on it.

With the additional room afforded by the erection of this open stage and the elaborate new lighting equipment there is room at the Screen Classics, Inc., plant at present for fourteen companies to work simultaneously. This would seem to imply over-preparation, inasmuch as there are only four productions in work at any time; but this is not the case. The extra space and facilities at hand will be used to put into the pictures all the care and foresight necessary to such productions as those which Metro plans to release.

It may be readily understood that with extra room the directors are enabled to gain extra time without a lapse in production. The space for a set may be left vacant without crowding other parts of other stages while the art director and his assistant erect sets without having to hurry. Then the company can move into a new set that has been prepared down to the last detail.

The electrical staff, too, in conjunction with the directors and the art directors, will have time to experiment with lighting effects. At first consideration an excess of space, it is apparent upon second thought that with the new facilities the Screen Classics, Inc., force—players, directors, art directors, photographers, electricians and carpenters—is enabled to turn out productions with all the time necessary to excellent work, yet with no hitch or conflict.

"The more I see of the work now progressing in our studio lot," said David Thompson, studio manager, "the more meaning I can see in the name of the company—Screen Classics, Inc. What with the wealth of story material, the Screen Classics, Inc., stars, the unusually capable force of directors under the supervision of our Director General, Maxwell Karger, and the best mechanical equipment to be found in any studio today, we simply can't help but make every picture we turn out a screen classic."

Seven Vehicles Selected by Nazimova : : : : : : :

NEW worlds to conquer await Nazimova, is the confident belief of Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, who present the Russian artiste in her own screen productions. And Mr. Karger, who is Nazimova's director general, feels that she has the material wherewith to conquer these waiting worlds, inasmuch as she has now selected her seven next vehicles to follow "The Brat," her own and Charles Bryant's adaptation of Maude Fulton's play, which was put into scenario form by the clever June Mathis.

Nazimova, Herbert Blache and Charles Bryant, lunching during the filming of "The Brat," Metro picture

Nazimova has just begun work before the camera in "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya," adapted by Charles Bryant from the novel by I. A. R. Wylie. Nazimova has the role of Sigrid Ferson in this vivid narrative of Anglo-Indian life from the pen of Miss Wylie. A heroine of striking personality and character is Sigrid, in a tale of love, hardship, mystery and mutiny.

As Major Tristram, Mr. Bryant plays opposite the star. He is "the hermit doctor"—a man who day by day and hour by hour offers his life freely in the great fight against famine and disease. The story has all the pomp and splendor, all the allure and haunting mystery of the Far East, although peopled with the sons and daughters of Britannia.

Miss Wylie is also the author of two other stories selected for Nazimova's use. They are, respectively, "The Native Born" and "The Temple of Dawn."

Of the remaining four of the seven new stories that Nazimova is to do, and the completed productions of which will be distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation, one is "Wholly Innocence," by H. Austin Adams. Mr. Adams, a former clergyman, wrote the original drama, "'Ception Shoals," in which Nazimova starred on the stage, and which Albert Capellani and June Mathis later translated to the screen under the title of "Out of the Fog," as a starring medium for Nazimova. "Wholly Innocence" is also a dramatic composition.

Nazimova, in the widely heralded Metro production, "The Brat"

From French sources are "La Maison de Danses" and "L'Homme Riche," which are among Nazimova's seven new vehicles. "La Maison de Danses" is by M. Noziere and M. Ch. Muller, while "L'Homme Riche" is a dramatic composition by Jean-Jose Frappa and Henri Dupuy-Mazuel.

"The Heart of a Child," from the novel by Frank Danby (Mrs. Julia Frankau), is another of the septet of new screen stories.

As is an invariable rule with Nazimova, each of the seven new stories was personally selected by the star herself, and each of them is far removed from the commonplace.

In the production of her new vehicles Nazimova pledges to maintain and if possible to surpass the strict standards of artistry that have marked her screen works.

"Hospital Day" in Lieu of Civic Tax

Motion picture exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, have proposed that the city institute a "Hospital Sunday" for the purpose of raising funds for the local hospital and orphanage institutions in place of continuing with the civic tax upon admission tickets to the theatres. The exhibitors have asked that all collections at local churches on the proposed Sunday be turned over to the hospital fund and that nurses be placed at the entrance to all theatres on the day to secure donations from all theatre patrons.

It is the opinion of the exhibitors that the local institutions would derive considerable revenue from this plan and the theatres would be relieved of one of many forms of taxation. The opinion is also expressed that the public would prefer such a plan and that it would overcome much inconvenience.

Rapid Progress Made on Filming of Three Stage Hits

"Fair and Warmer," "Lombardi Ltd." and "Please Get Married" Adapted Well to Metro Star Trio

PROGRESS in the production of the first three of the thirty-six great plays and novels which Screen Classics, Inc., is at present filming at its spacious studios in Hollywood, Calif., is being made to a degree far surpassing the expectations of the producers.

The achievement of Screen Classics, Inc., in obtaining as first releases for its stars such stage hits as "Fair and Warmer," "Lombardi, Ltd.," and "Please Get Married," the expenditures to insure every modern mechanical facility for motion picture production: and the ability of the directors in charge of production, has promised to result in extraordinary success.

Never has May Allison appeared to better advantage than in the scenes taken to date in the farce of Avery Hopwood's "Fair and Warmer." For sheer absurdity of situation without the loss of probability or of the natural humanness of the characters, this stage play is a winner. After making a record run in New York the play was taken to London for a two years' engagement.

Bert Lytell in his special "Lombardi, Ltd.," has a part entirely different from anything in which he hitherto has appeared on the screen, that of Tito Lombardi, a temperamental and more than capable Italian dressmaker. Although it is an especially difficult role to enact, calling as it does for unusual sympathy and insight upon the part of the actor attempting it, Mr. Lytell was so impressed with the possibilities of this play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton that he went to work with his customary vigor to study the character of the proprietor of the shop whose sign reads "Lombardi, Ltd."

Mr. Karger's comment upon this dashing Screen Classics, Inc., star speaks eloquently of his success in thoroughly mastering the part.

"We thought we knew out here what Bert Lytell could do, but he has certainly surprised us. His work in 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' is his best thing yet —and when applied to Lytell that means a lot."

For the supporting cast in the new Lytell feature a bevy of exceptionally beautiful girls has been gathered. This applies not only to the principals, but also to the swarm of girls taking the smaller roles, such as those of mannequins or models. Alice Lake, whose work in support of Mr. Lytell in "The Lion's Den" and "Blackie's Redemption" won her recognition, is again his leading woman. Juanita Hansen plays the character of Phyllis Manning, whom Tito thinks he loves; and Thea Talbot, Ann May and Jean Mendoza have responsible roles.

Fully as gratifying as that of "Fair and Warmer" and "Lombardi, Ltd.," is the progress being made in Viola Dana's special Screen Classics, Inc., feature, "Please Get Married," a screen version of a recent New York theatrical hit. As the persecuted little bride of Ferdinand Oliver Walton who one minute is sure she is married and the next is convinced she's not, Viola Dana has opportunities never before afforded her in her motion picture career.

This play from the pens of James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne was their first dramatic writing, although both are well known in the magazine and newspaper field. When presented on Broadway the piece rose to instant popularity. The script for the feature has been prepared by Finis Fox, of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff. John E. Ince is the director of the production and John Arnold the photographer.

The addition of another stage to supplement the already more than commodious facilities in the Screen Classics, Inc., studio lot has been no little item in getting the results sought in the new productions. Although only four companies are ever at work at the Hollywood plant at one time, there is room there, if necessary, for fourteen productions to be filmed at once. This margin of space, however, is valuable in that it allows those in charge of planning and constructing the settings to work unhurried and well in advance of the directors, and so achieve the best possible artistic effects, as well as to experiment carefully with the lighting of the sets.

There has been, too, a noticeable diminution in noise and nervousness since the installation of the extensive new lighting equipment for the Screen Classics, Inc., studios. All of the heavy fixtures which formerly had been carted about from one place to another on the stages have been placed overhead, and only the control by which they are operated is on the stage where director and players work.

West Coast Will Have Pre-Release View of "The Brat"

Metro Wishes Advance Criticisms on Nazimova Feature in Order to Benefit by Suggestions

MAXWELL KARGER, who with Richard A. Rowland presents the Nazimova Productions, has arranged for a special pre-release showing on the West Coast of "The Brat," the Russian star's latest screen contribution.

Mr. Karger, besides being co-sponsor for the Nazimova Productions, personally supervises these productions at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood. According to advices to the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, exclusive distributor of the Nazimova pictures, the Pacific coast pre-release showing of "The Brat" will be given at Miller's new million-dollar California Theatre, in Los Angeles.

It has been tentatively planned to show "The Brat" at the California for a week's run some time before Monday, September 1, the announced release date of "The Brat." Under the arrangement, exhibitors East of the Rocky Mountains will be a week or so behind the west in showing the Nazimova feature, but it is largely for their benefit that the pre-release showing has been designed.

The new California Theater, the most recent addition to the many temples of the cinematic art in Los Angeles, the motion picture producing center of the country, puts on and plays up its attractions in the most elaborate fashion and with the most up-to-date exploitation methods.

Messrs. Karger and Rowland decided upon the pre-release showing of "The Brat" in order to get for the exhibitor, especially the eastern exhibitor, first-hand and unbiased comment by press and public upon the merits of this feature under actual exhibition conditions.

Careful note will be made of all advertising and exploitation stunts used in the presentation of "The Brat" at this theater. Based upon the experience of showing the Nazimova special before the public will be prepared a flood of exhibitors' aids and a mass of suggestions for putting over the picture in a manner worthy of its merit.

This is but a step further in the line that Metro has chosen of offering pictures whose drawing power is not an experiment but a certainty.

The interval between this work-out of the Nazimova picture under practical conditions and the day when Metro exchanges will be given the word to release the production elsewhere will not be longer than a fortnight, it is believed. This will give ample opportunity for the final touches and suggestions for a big exploitation campaign.

The western press comments upon "The Brat" will be of value to the exhibitor. The Los Angeles film reviewers, with the New York, are perhaps the most difficult to satisfy of any. Being in the very midst of the motion picture producing world, they have every opportunity to become entirely familiar with every phase of the industry. What they say may be taken as the diagnosis of specialists.

This will serve two purposes: it will give to the exhibitor an impartial and highly critical report of the picture; and it will serve as a splendid advertising basis for "The Brat" in recommending it to his patrons.

James Kirkwood, for several years noted as a director, is returning to the screen as an actor, and has been engaged by Allan Dwan to appear in several of the principal roles of the latter's coming productions.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announce the release of a new Ford Educational Weekly, "Caught," which was taken in the Canadian Northwest. It deals with fish catching.

A page from "The Brat." Nazimova, according to the Metro office, has in this big production an instrument which will play on the public's moods and touch the heart-strings, and at the same time exquisitely portrays a role which gives her wide scope, in a manner which will make the picture "sure-fire" with any audience

Screen Classics, Inc., Boasts of a Noted Author Group

Avery Hopgood, the Hattons, Thomas Hardy and Sir Gilbert Parker Are Some Who Lend Talents

METRO points to the list of noted authors whose works are to be converted to the silent drama in the form of Screen Classics, Inc., and Nazimova productions as one of the most distinguished ever gathered together for the advancement of the motion picture art.

Acquisition of the screen rights to thirty-six plays and novels by these authors Metro pridefully regards as one of the biggest literary coup the industry has known. They were secured as a stroke of enterprise at great expense and after a minute survey by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., of the choicest material in the market.

Mr. Rowland declares his sole aim to have been to secure vehicles of the highest literary merit with proved records of popularity; such material as would be fitting for the productions of superb artistry that are to be made by Nazimova and the Screen Classics, Inc., stars, May Allison, Bert Lytell and Viola Dana.

The list of contributors of these big special productions includes the names of many of the present day's most eminent writers of novels, short stories and plays; names that are familiar by-words wherever the English tongue is spoken and fiction is read or the drama is seen.

First among the names of successful playwrights is Avery Hopwood, whose works stand out prominently in the annals of the dramatic history of the American stage. There are few more capable writers of rich, snappy farce than he.

Two of the theatre's most prominent collaborators, Frederic and Fanny Hatton, are also in Metro's list of authors, having been the creators of that delightful comedy which made Leo Carrillo famous on the stage in the title role of "Lombardi, Ltd." The screen rights to this play, which was produced by Oliver Morosco, have been secured and Bert Lytell is at present engaged in a picture production which it is promised will surpass even the stage version of the original piece.

James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne, who leaped into theatrical fame over-night as collaborators on the recent Broadway sensation, "Please Get Married" starring Ernest Truex and Edith Taliaferro, make up another pair of authors whose works will be produced by Screen Classics, Inc.

A name which will recall memories of the beginning of the American drama and which is also among Metro's authors, is James A. Herne. Since the decease of this actor and playwright, whose sole purpose in life has inspired many eulogies of his wholesome character, his plays have made his name more famous than ever during his lifetime.

"Shore Acres," Mr. Herne's greatest success, is one of the Screen Classics, Inc., offerings for the season of 1919-20.

As collaborators on the Japanese play, "The Willow Tree," both J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes added to their laurels as dramatists. "The Willow Tree," as produced by Cohan & Harris on Broadway, will be remembered as the success which served to bring Fay Bainter into fame. With the purchase of the screen rights to this drama Viola Dana has had another vehicle added to her list.

"Wholly Innocence" is the second of the works of H. Austin Adams which Nazimova will do for the screen to be distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation. Mr. Adams is a novelist as well as a playwright and "Wholly Innocence" has been selected as one of his finest books. He also wrote "'Ception Shoals" in which Nazimova was seen on the stage, and which was later converted to the screen under the title of "Out of the Fog," one of Nazimova's greatest successes.

In maintaining a well-balanced schedule, Screen Classics, Inc., has also secured the stake play entitled, "Yosemite," a melodramatic story of the locale of which is set in the famous valley of the same name, and with which the co-authors, Charles A. Taylor and Asa R. Cassidy, are entirely familiar.

Noziere and Ch. Muller are two French authors contributing their work to Screen Classics. Larry Evans, Thomas Hardy, an English writer, and Gilbert Parker are others. The list also includes I. A. R. Wylie, Frank Danby (Mrs. Julia Davis Frankau) and George Gibbs.

About New Pictures

"In Mizzoura," the Paramount-Artcraft picturization of Augustus Thomas's famous play, in which Robert Warwick is starred, has been completed at the Lasky studio by Director Hugh Ford.

The L-Ko release of Aug. 19th will be entitled "The Girl and the Gangster" which will feature the Oriental comedian, Chai Hong.

The next animal Century comedy will be released on August 29th, entitled "Lonesome Hearts and Looney Lions." The supporting cast in this subject includes Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell.

Tom Moore's next Goldwyn picture, which will shortly be released for general distribution, is 'Heartsease," from the play by that staunch American playwright, the late Charles Klein.

George Melford has practically completed arangements for the production of the Paramount-Artcraft version of "Everywoman," Walter Browne's great play, which he is to direct at the Lasky studio.

The William S. Hart Company is now in Santa Cruz filming logging scenes for "John Petticoats," the newest Artcraft film in which he is to be starred.

Last Lytell Picture on Program Basis

In acordance with the announced schedule of releases for the month of August, which represent the last of the Metro releases under the program policy to be discontinued beginning September 1, Bert Lytell's last program vehicle, a five-act comedy-drama called "Easy to Make Money," will be released August 4.

Two new Ford Educational Weeklies are announced for release by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. One is a story of the city where Panama hats originated; the other is a trip through the Canadian Rockies.

Louis King, who has recently been playing in pictures starring Gladys Brockwell and William Farnum, has been engaged for a character part in the latest Gale Henry comedy.

Woman to Adapt Screen Classics

June Mathis to Handle Books and Plays for Metro

JUNE MATHIS is grooming herself for a demonstration of her contention that the female of the species is more strenuous than the male when it comes to scenario writing. Miss Mathis is the ace of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff and upon her shoulders is to fall the major responsibility for the scenarios of the big Screen Classics, Inc., specials which, beginning September 1, are to be released through the distributing organization of Metro Pictures Corporation.

With Miss Mathis announcing herself primed and set for heroic undertakings, Screen Classics, Inc., officials are content to stand by and give her all the encouragement in the world. Richard A. Rowland, president, has tried Miss Mathis and found her equal to any literary enterprise; so is not worried about her ability to measure up even to so herculean a task as the translation to the screen of the greater part of the thirty-six famous stage plays and celebrated novels they have acquired for their stars.

Miss Mathis already has gotten away to a flying start. She wrote the scenario of "Lombardi, Ltd.," from the Oliver Morosco stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, in which Bert Lytell is now working, and collaborated with A. P. Younger, a recent addition to her literary staff, in the scenarioization of "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's record-breaking farce, in which May Allison is to be starred.

She proved her ability as a prolific writer of original stories and adapter of short stories and novels under Metro's old policy of program releases, and will now turn her undivided attention toward the adaptation of the "fewer, bigger and better" productions of Screen Classics, Inc.

The contribution of many successful original stories for the screen, and collaborator with various members of her staff, Miss Mathis has established a reputation as a motion picture technician and one of the cleverest handlers of big situations, ranging from graceful comedy to heart-gripping drama.

Now, with the great supply of literary and dramatic material as foundations for the Screen Classics, Inc., productions Miss Mathis's many talents will find greater scope. A big field lies before her in the numerous novels and stage successes which she is to convert to the screen.

"Give me the human drama. Let it be a story about my fellow beings—their hopes and fears, their joys and sorrows. Let me cry with them, but let them be human."

So said Miss Mathis recently, when she was asked to tell what appealed to her most strongly in the silent drama.

"Touch the heart-strings," she declared with emphasis. "Comedy is very necessary. But, after all, it doesn't make the lasting impression that is made by the soul-searching story—the story that gets under the skins of all of us and reveals that mortals are weak, groping atoms in a cosmic wilderness and that into their brief span of existence is crowded infinitely more sorrow than happiness."

Rather serious views for a woman who a few short years ago was playing ingenue leads on the stage. But Miss Mathis takes herself and her art as a builder of screen plays seriously, despite the lively comedy sense that is marked in her personality and shows itself in her work.

Besides writing continuity, frequently working on two and sometimes three scripts at a time, Miss Mathis reads or gets reports upon the multitude of original stories, plays, and current fiction submitted or singled out for consideration as vehicles for the various stars.

Last October Miss Mathis transferred the scene of her activities from New York to Southern California. Since her arrival on the Pacific Coast, Miss Mathis scenarioized "Johnny on the Spot" for Hale Hamilton and "The Blind Man's Eyes" for Bert Lytell and completed "The Red Lantern" for Nazimova. She also adapted Viola Dana's recent success, "The Microbe," from the short story by Henry Altimus, and in collaboration with Lt. Luther A. Reed she adapted Thomas Edgelow's story, "The Amateur Adventuress," for Emmy Wehlen; E. V. Durling's story, "Almost Married," for May Allison, and the play by Anne and Alice Duffy called "Some Bride" for Viola Dana.

Metro Exchanges Await the Fall Campaign Confidently

Branch Men Feel Company Has An Ace in Shape of Open Booking, and Better Films

LIKE sprinters awaiting the crack of the starter's pistol, Metro exchange men in every part of the country are, according to reports they have made recently to W. E. Atkinson, General Manager of Metro, all set for the big fall campaign with the Screen Classics, Inc., specials.

There has been, in several of the Metro branches, some readjustment of personnel. These changes now are all accomplished, so that the managers are giving over their attention entirely to getting things in ship-shape order for the rush of business that is expected to come with the release of the new super-productions beginning with September 1.

Every exchange has been supplied with an unusual volume of exhibitors' aids which are novel and effective—carefully thought out and prepared. The managers of the Metro branches, with these in hand, are busy framing up stunts with these aids as a basis, adapting, of course their exploitation schemes for exhibitors to the locality and the particular theater.

With the knowledge they have of the exceptional quality of the Screen Classics, Inc., productions now under way in the big Hollywood studio, the exchange managers and the salesmen working under their direction, are imbued with a spirit of winning, a confident, go-to-it enthusiasm such as never before been evidenced in any similar organization.

An enormous factor of the Metro sales force, besides the very merit of the productions they are enabled to offer motion picture showmen, is the "open booking" system which the company stands for so staunchly. Every Screen Classics, Inc., picture is submitted to the exhibitor solely on its qualities. No matter how successful have been other pictures by the same producing organization in the past, the Metro salesmen take their new pictures to the exhibitor as if they were the first ever to be offered.

This attitude is prompted first of all by the sense of fairness toward the exhibitor. Metro has long advocated the policy of making every picture contain such box-office possibilities that all talk of program booking is unnecessary. With the stars and stories and production facilities at its command, Screen Classics, Inc., is more than willing to enter into competitive selling of every picture on its individual merits.

As the line up of the exchange managers now stands C. H. Kessnich has charge of the Atlanta, Ga., exchange; E. A. Golden of the Boston, Mass., branch, and H. W. Kahn is at Buffalo, N. Y. At the head of the Metro branch at Chicago is J. S. Grauman; at Cincinnati, O. W. C. Bachmeyer; at Cleveland, O., C. E. Almy; at Dallas, Tex., L. Bickel; at Denver, Colo., C. Klein; at Detroit, Mich., W. N. Skirboll; at Kansas City, Mo., S. L. Haldeman; at Los Angeles, Cal., A. B. Lamb; at Milwaukee, Wis., H. L. Conway; at Minneapolis, Minn., A. Fischer; at New York City, Herman Jans and J. Klein; at New Orleans, La., O. Briant; at Oklahoma City, Okla., S. Brink; at Omaha, Nebr., S. Mac Intyre; at Philadelphia, Pa., R. Lynch; at Pittsburgh, Pa., J. Davis; at Salt Lake City, Utah, B. F. Rosenberg; at San Francisco, Calif., Fred W. Voight; at Seattle, Wash., C. Stearn; at Toronto, Can., Regal Films, Ltd., S. Aaronson; at St. Louis, Mo., C. Werner, and at Montreal, Can., Regal Films, Ltd., is P. O. Loghlin.

A further advantage that the Metro exchange managers have in distributing their Screen Classics, Inc., productions is that prints of all releases will be in their offices well before the date of release of the film, so that the exhibitor may see for himself in plenty of time to arrange his bookings any of the big specials which Metro puts on the market.

Dublin Exhibitor Visitor in New York

Frank W. Chambers, managing director of La Scala Opera House and Carlton theatre, Dublin, and controlling two other theatres in the same city, has returned to New York City after a business and sight-seeing trip across the continent to Los Angeles.

Mr. Chambers is equipping his new theatre in Dublin, which has been in course of erection for the past year, and which will seat 3,000. Mr. Chambers says that it will be the largest and most beautiful theatre in Great Britain.

American pictures are run almost entirely in the Chambers' houses. The program is identical with that of the leading American picture theatres. The new theatre under its license, the cost of which by the way is $100,000, will add singing to its program.

American pictures are very popular in Dublin. However, the popularity of the various American stars varies widely. Many American pictures also are too "strong" to pass the Dublin censors.

Mr. Chambers speaks highly of some of the recent British productions. Among these he cites "The Elder Miss Blossom," which was brought to this country last spring, and is being released as "Choosing a Wife" and also "The Romany Lass," which was brought here by Mr. H. M. Jenks.

Mr. Chambers has long been a subscriber to Motion Picture News, and visited the office while in New York.

Pauline Frederick started work at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, last week, under the direction of Frank Lloyd in a picturization of one of Arthur Wing Pinero's most celebrated plays.

'Best' Critics Pass Upon Prison Film

Sing Sing Convicts Are Enthusiastic Over "Miracle Man"

"THE guy that directed that picture was a fourth timer, I'll betcher." If one were told that this was intended as a compliment, he might regard it as an exceedingly doubtful one, did he not know that the person who uttered it was himself an inmate of Sing Sing prison and spoke from the depths of a deeply affected heart.

The picture referred to was "The Miracle Man," which is scheduled for Paramount-Artcraft release in September. And "the guy that directed it" was George Loane Tucker who, needless to say, much less than being a "fourth timer," never saw the interior of a prison or jail, except as an interested observer.

A print of "The Miracle Man," which is essentially a crook play, was taken to Sing Sing one night last week by a representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, primarily as entertainment. Being a crook play, the manner of its reception by a big audience which naturally would be supposed to know more about crime and the ways of criminals—their passions and sentiments—than any other audience in the world, was the subject of considerable speculation at the office of the corporation.

How the picture was received by this critical audience is briefly described in the Famous Players-Lasky man's written report, submitted on his return to New York. He said: "The picture went over beyond all my expectations. I never before saw such a crowd of enthusiasts and Louis Jacobs, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison, told me that the inmates were sincere in their praise. He said they were hard critics and would not hesitate to indicate their displeasure, had the picture displeased them.

"Edward V. Brophy, warden, and John P. Joyce, superintendent of industries, told me personally that 'The Miracle Man' was the most wonderful picture they had ever seen—and they have seen many. I also received oral praise from many of the inmates themselves. Louis Jacobs said: 'The picture carries a message that gets to the men without their knowing why. It isn't crammed down their throats like a preachment. That's why it made a hit with them.' I also had a talk with ——— ——— (naming one of the best known newspapermen in the United States who recently was convicted of a capital crime). He had read the book and seen the play. The picture, he said, was the best thing he had ever seen."

A letter was received the following day from Louis Jacobs, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League, in which he indorsed the picture and referred to the manuscripts which would be received by scores giving impressions of the feature.

In speaking of "manuscripts" in the letter, Mr. Jacobs had reference to a contest which was announced to the inmates of the institution in the name of President Adolph Zukor and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. An offer was made of a first prize of $10, a second prize of $7 and a third prize of $5 for the three best compositions conveying the impressions made upon the writer by the picture. The judges will be George Blaisdell, Editor of Moving Picture World; Joseph Dannenberg, Editor of Wid's; Lesley Mason, Editor of Exhibitors' Trade Review; Robert E. Welch, Managing Editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and Miss Louella O. Parsons, Motion Picture Editor of the Sunday Telegraph.

The officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation maintain that the picture, submitted to any audience in any city in the country, will be accepted as the peer of any picture ever produced, on the basis of simon-pure entertainment.

that of the next convention city and in the final vote, Spokane was named. Municipal officers, Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, Advertising, and Auto Clubs sent invitations to the convention by Miss Spokane, a young lady selected by the officers of the city to represent Spokane officially in other cities.

The question of whether it was good policy to send petition to Washington asking for the repeal of film and the admission taxes was debated for more than an hour. Many in these sections of the country had increased their admission price when the war tax became effective and the war tax has since been paid outside of the general admission price. For this reason a number who could not force their patrons to pay the tax in addition to the admission price, were strongly in favor of retaining the tax. However, the number proved to be in the minority and the resolution reported by the committee was adopted. Other resolutions indorsed by the convention opposed the Sunday closing in Washington, D. C., favoring the repeal of the daylight saving law and commended the better advertising services now being given by the distributing companies to the theatres.

Just at the close of the convention, Chairman Luken was presented with a handsome loving cup as an appreciation of the very strenuous and satisfactory services he had rendered the convention which is composed of more than two hundred who registered.

The entertainment features of the convention were particularly pleasing. The official welcome by Governor L. F. Hart of Washington, was given at a luncheon Thursday noon when Melvin G. Weinstock of Metro Exchanges presided. Frank Keenan, Pathe Producer's star, spoke on labor and capital questions and the effect the motion picture industry had upon the general conditions of the country. Other speakers were Beatriz Michelena and Fay Tincher. On Thursday evening a beefsteak dinner for the men was given, at which John Hanrick was master of ceremonies and Carl Rieter of the Moore Theatre of Seattle presided. At the same time the ladies were entertained at a dinner at one of the most popular cafes located in the residence district.

The Chamber of Commerce acted as hosts to the visiting film people at a luncheon Friday noon, and for the first time in the history of this organization, the meeting was turned over to any one industry. F. H. Parson, president, welcomed the guests and Melvin G. Winstock presided as toastmaster.

Saturday, all guests of the convention were entertained by a boat trip to Bremmerton and permitted to spend a greater portion of the day in the Pacific Coast shipbuilding yards of the United States Navy. This is the first time guests have been admitted to the yards since the beginning of the European war, and permission was granted by John Rantz, theatre owner of Bremmerton who was master of ceremonies, in a wire from Secretary of Navy, Daniels. Luncheon was served in the mess quarters of the marines and a reception was given the visitors in the beautiful homes of the officers.

The big event of the convention was the screen ball given on Friday evening at which Bessie Love, Beatriz Michelena, Fay Tincher, Frank Keenan and Wallace Reid were the guests of honor. The attendance at the ball was about twelve thousand people and it proved to be the greatest event of its kind held in the northwest. The success of this ball is largely due to the efforts of W. J. Drummond who first saw the advantage of a convention and screen ball to the motion picture interests of the northwest; "sold" the convention to others and then gave all his time to make the event the success that it proved to be.

Where Are the Men?

their manager, and they put their organist in as manager. He had hardly ever been in a show till he started to play for them, and had only worked about eight months; yet he was put in charge of a 2,000-seat house. God bless my soul, but men surely must be hard to get!

Now, don't consider this an ad, but here's the idea: Why don't the big circuits or your magazine, or someone, start some way to get these men together—the big men who want managers, and the small town men who want to manage. I have no doubt there are a lot of small town managers who would be glad of a chance to get in a big place and who would make good, too. And if some of the big managers were turned loose with a small town show they'd learn considerable. There isn't a better place to study human nature than a small town, and human nature is the same the world over. If you can read it and satisfy it in one place, you can do it in another.

Well, I guess I'm about run down this time, so won't get wound up again for a while, but I'd like to know this: When a group of men, or circuit, will risk a few thousand dollars every month on features that the weather may try to "fizzle" for them, why don't they risk a few months' salary on a person who will be a good investment if he turns out right and won't be any worse than the average, any way? Let's hear from some of these big men, and see what grudge they have against a small town man who wants to progress—and there are lots of them.

Please don't publish my address because this isn't an ad, and I want to hear what they have to say—not beg a position.

Your new size magazine is certainly fine. "Every one better than the last one," should be your slogan.

Lesser Builds Organization

Man Behind "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" Will Distribute Other Big Specials

SOL LESSER, a pioneer in the individual exploitation field, who was instrumental in placing the "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" comedy on the road in conjunction with Sennett's Bathing Beauties, is building a great organization for the distribution of special features.

As a result of this experiment, Mr. Sol Lesser has decided to make New York his headquarters, with only a short flying trip to California in between, in order to procure a new five-reel Sennett Comedy for New York exploitation. He will, however, continue his three offices on the Coast that will still handle States rights in the western territory.

This is not Mr. Lesser's first exploitation venture. Among his earlier exploitation stunts are included D. W. Griffith's, "Intolerance," the rights to which he controlled for the States of California, Arizona and Nevada. This ran for a period of six months to capacity houses because of his novel exploitation schemes, which he introduced with the showing of the picture.

With his advent into New York he surrounded himself with three of the most capable newspaper and advertising men that could be found. Mr. B. S. Moss, at whose theatre the picture "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" is being shown, co-operated with Mr. Lesser in the matter of publicity, by allowing Mr. Arthur MacHugh, the head of the B. S. Moss publicity staff to handle Mr. Lesser's publicity for the New York Dailies. Mr. H. C. McCourt was chosen to head the exploitation department.

Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Riddle"

"The Devil's Riddle" is announced as a forthcoming picture subject for Gladys Brockwell, the William Fox star.

"The Devil's Riddle" was published recently in the Argosy Magazine, and stood out as one of the best magazine stories of the year. It is from the pen of Edwina Levin, author of many successes.

New Concern Entering State Right Field

The newest organization to make a bid for patronage in the field of state rights is the Monopol Pictures Corporation. Headed by Max Cohen, a pioneer in this branch of the industry despite his youth, offices have been opened in the Longacre Building. It is Cohen's intention to distribute special productions for the state right market, handling those features possessing the box office qualifications and exploitation factors demanded by buyer and exhibitor. Monopol Pictures will offer first the following pictures: "Alma Where Do You Live" and "The Crimson Shoals." The first named is from the successful Broadway play of the same title. The publicity possibilities of this production are enhanced by the song of the same name, which to date has sold more than one million copies. The picture stars Ruth McTammany, supported by George Larkin and a cast of well known players.

Mr. Cohen is particularly enthusiastic over the possibilities of "Crimson Shoals," starring Francis Ford.

"The Boomerang," distributed by Pioneer Film Corporation, will be given its first showing before any audience at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y.

Illness has forced Anna Lehr out of the cast of "The Teeth of the Tiger" a F. P.-Lasky production. Marguerite Courtot has taken her place.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons latest Capitol comedy is titled "Chasing Rain Beaux."

Sensational Success,

ONLY a picture of the life we lead—out to the last notch—up to the last minute. Only the tragic comedy of human hopes and ambitions—rising, falling, soaring up to the stars, crashing down to the abyss. Only the life crises of two men and two women—only the settings of small town, the mansions of the rich, the roaring marts of trade. Only a picture in which you would not change one scene, one setting, one word, one comma. Only a flawlessly acted, perfectly directed photodrama of modern existence, true as God's sunlight in every last detail. Only this—no more.

Special Service Section on

Mary MacLaren in "A Petal on the Current"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

IF you book "A Petal on the Current," Mary MacLaren's latest picture, there is one big fact concerning this production which you want to keep in mind, first, last and all the time.

This is a story that might happen to any girl who has to work for a living—probably has happened thousands upon thousands of times, but not always with a break in the luck by which the girl gets back to the realm of happiness and the man to a faith in women. "A Petal on the Current" is human and convincing. This may sound like a "boast" for this picture in spite of the fact that this department does not intend to either criticise or praise any production reviewed, but we feel justified in making this statement in view of the fact that your exploitation should be centered on letting your patrons know just the kind of a story "A Petal on the Current" is.

It is a long way back to the time of Miss MacLaren's first great hit as a screen star, when as an unknown girl of rather pleasing personality she blossomed forth under Lois Weber's direction to National fame, almost over night, the heroine of "Shoes." And this is another "shoe" story in that its principal character, portrayed by Miss MacLaren is a clerk in a shoe store.

"A PETAL on the Current" is filmed from a short story published in The Cosmopolitan Magazine, written by Fannie Hurst, a popular author of human interest tales, and has been adapted to the screen by Director Tod Browning. Unlike many stories which originate first in fiction form, this faithfully follows the published version and very few liberties have been taken with either the plot or in the development of the story. There is much that is plainly characterization throughout the first reels and it is not until the middle of the feature that the true dramatic material receives attention without resort to sequences which have no particular bearing on the plot.

"A Petal on the Current" is filmed largely in interiors and there is no great jump in either continuity or locals.

Following is the plot of the feature: "Stella Schump" (Mary MacLaren) is one of the too few modern young women, who remains unsophisticated and shy in spite of the fact that she is employed in a shoe store where her companions are types of those who are to be found in every large city where coming in contact with the world enamels them with a certain cheap polish discernible as an imitation to everyone but the class itself. Stella resides with her mother (Gertrude Claire) another innocent, notwithstanding the fact that she has lived long enough to have buried a husband and raised a daughter to womanhood.

IT is the combined earnings of the two, Stella with her salary at the shoe store and the mother by her neddle, which keeps the wolf from the door of the Schump home. Mother and daughter are happy but shy, bashful Stella dreams of a time when she will be married and have a use for the baby shoes she sells to the fond mothers who come to the Criterion store for footwear.

Stella has a chum in the same deparment, as sophisticated and world wise as Stella is innocent, and it is this girl Cora Coob (Beatrice Burnham) who undertakes to be match maker for her friend by trying to arrange a meeting between Stella and her brother Ed's foreman, John Gilley (Robert Anderson). Wise Cora knows that such a frump as Stella according to the standards of the Criterion store employes will never interest any of the boys who are in her set and her selection of Gilley as a prospective husband for her chum is therefore based on her brother's accounts of his boss' bashfulness and lack of interest in women. Cora's theory is that like begets like and so she arranges to have Ed. bring Gilley to another girl friend's party while she escorts Stella.

Stella goes to the social function but the bashful John Gilley flunks at the last moment, even after reaching the house and Stella is left loverless while the other girls have gay and unconventional times with their male escorts.

BEER is a liquid which Stella has never tasted and in spite of her protest that she does not care to drink, is induced to take one glass. The unaccustomed beverage produces intoxication and in the hope of getting to her home before the others notice her condition, she steals away and begins her homeward journey.

The effect of the liquor on Stella works a transformation in her character and from a shy, bashful girl she has become under it's influence, both silly and bold. As she staggers down the street she meets a man, who follows her a short distance and to whom she speaks. She invites the stranger to buy her a drink and makes a remark which is inferred to mean that she is soliciting for herself. The man that turns back his coat and discloses the fact that he is a plain clothes member of the police department.

Stella is arrested and taken to the night police court where still under the influence of the liquor and unable to make any plea for herself she receives a ten days sentence in the City prison.

The next morning when her senses return Stella writes her mother concerning what has happened.

The shock is too much for the feeble old lady and she dies before Stella is released from prison. In fact Stella arrives home only in time to see her mother buried. The facts contained in the letter, have become known to the land lady who in turn imparts them to Cora and Stella's other friends and when the girl tries to go back to her position in the shoe store, employment is refused her because of her former girl friends objections.

IN the meantime the way-wise Ed. has been teaching his foreman much of life that John did not know existed and as a proof that his contention that women "Are all alike," he uses the case of Stella as an illustration. In this way Gilley hears of the one sided story of what has happened to Stella.

Ed's theories and his examples of the apparent looseness of all women regarding the moral code is having its effect on Gilley and he is induced to spend an evening in company of Ed. and two women of doubtful character.

While waiting for the three persons referred too, the meeting place decided upon having been the street, Gilley is accosted by a girl who on the plea that her mother is sick gains sympathy and is given some money.

Gilley and his companions repair to a saloon and while seated at a table

Exploitation Should Be Confined in Main to Three Points

John hears the girl to whom he has given the money describe the manner in which she had secured the funds with which she is buying her lover liquor. Gilley recognizes the girl and realizing that he has been deceived, looses all faith in human nature. He denounces the girl and after a scene in which a fight threatens leaves the saloon, with these words on his lips: "God help the next woman I meet."

STELLA has come to the end of resources and in her despair is contemplating ending her life.

She goes to a park, and sits on a bench there to see a woman solicit the attentions of a passing stranger.

The man and the woman go on their errand leaving Stella alone unable to bring her physical courage to the point where she can take her own life.

To the park comes John Gilley, with his faith in the world and in all women gone. He seats himself on the bench near Stella. It is then that Stella decides on the "easiest way" and she makes advances to Gilley in the same words as those used by the woman who had shared the bench with her some time previously.

Her overtures are received in silence by Gilley. Finally he asks Stella what she has in the grip which she has been carrying since she left her room. In answer the girl opens it and inside is her mother's picture.

At the sight of the photograph, Stella's mood changes and she is only concerned with the thought that her mother died not knowing that she was innocent of the charge made against her.

She tells her story to Gilley, with the tears rolling down her checks but John thinks it is another tale manufactured to gain sympathy from pecuniary motives.

However, she continues, he realizes that Stella is the girl who had been described to him as a paragon of virtue and then as an example of his brother workman's theories. Still he does not regain his faith until the whole story of how circumstantial evidence had proven an innocent girl guitly comes to his ears. Stella has told John her pitiful story hoping that he will asure her that her mother did not die beleiving her daughter bad.

Biding Stella rise John starts to take her away (the spectator does not know with what intent) and it is then that Stella recognizes her midnight companion as the bashful swain of months before. A scar described to Stella by Cora still remains on Gilley's hand and it is through this that the girl learns Gilley's identity.

Gilley and Stella leave the park and go toward a Salvation Army hotel where Stella enters on the title "Just for Tonight," which is followed by another title inferring that these two had found their happiness and would walk down life's pathway together.

Exploitation on this feature should be confined in the main to three points. Star—story and author but as these are the only sound angles from which a picture should be advertised we should say that you have plenty of opportunity to excite a full measure of interest especially since the star of this story is as a rule very popular wherever her productions many of them successes that stand as monuments of the best that the screen has produced, have been shown.

IN fact if after all the good ones that Miss Weber and Miss MacLaren have put over your people do not like Mary, you have no business booking this film.

In billing the star and she should have the headlines you certainly do not want to forget the other pictures in which she has appeared especially "Shoes." Some of the others are worth space are "The Unpainted, Woman, Bread, The Amazing Wife, etc.

You may argue that your patrons have been told over and over again that Miss MacLaren appeared in these productions. But what of that?

Tell them and keep on telling them. People forget and have to be reminded besides nothing succeeds like success and those productions have all been successes, big one at that.

For your selling talk you must make sure that people understand something concerning the plot of this picture. There are features where you do not need to do this and others where it is unwise to do so, but this story has no mystery plot which must be concealed so give them a good idea of what to expect.

Suppose you use something like this:

"Stella Schump was good and innocent and true but she was induced to drink just once and then she found herself in jail, branded a prostitute.

John Gilley believed all women to be good but the words of a friend who lived only amid sordidness and the story of Stella's downfall as it was told not as it really was, destroyed his faith in everything.

But Stella found happiness and John regained his faith.

This is the story told in "A Petal on the Current."

Here is another:

Chance buffeted Stella Schumps blameless life until death or the "easiest way" stared her in the face.

"Circumstantial evidence and the false arguments of a companion made John Gilley lose its faith in mankind.

Then fate unkind at times, righted the wrongs that had been done, opened the eyes of him who had seen only the bad and from despair and hopelessness two people emerged to live in a happy world because they were happy. See "A Petal on the Current."

As Stella Schump in "A Petal on the Current," Mary MacLaren is appearing in one of the best roles of her career.

Stella was a shoeclerk who longed for a husband and a baby yet was too shy to attract a lover. She goes to a party given by one of her friends and is induced to drink some beer. The unaccustomer beverage produces intoxication and when she reaches the street in this condition a plain clothes man arrests her on the charge of vagrancy and she is given a ten days sentence in jail.

She writes her mother and the shock kills the old lady. Stella's experience in a garbled version becomes known and when she goes back to her position, employment is refused her.

Time passes and she has no money. It is the "easiest way or the river. She decides on the easiest way but fate which has been so unkind in the past, this time chooses to bring Stella happiness, a husband who meets her idea! and a baby who wears the shoes, Stella has admired so much in her days at the shoe store.

The beauty of this simple story as it is told in the six reel production directed by Tod Browning from the pen of Fannie Hurst, is such that you will vote "A Petal on the Current" a masterpiece seldom presented under any banner.

Light Subjects Bring Summer Business

Robertson-Cole has been convinced by the volume of business recorded on its product during the past few weeks, that only the proper type of photoplays are needed to offset the costly summer-time lull in the motion picture industry. In the spring Robertson-Cole laid out a schedule of releases through Exhibitors Mutual, which was expected to bring much more than the average summer returns. The judgment of the concern has been thoroughly vindicated, for the receipts thus far this summer, while admittedly not up to the mark set in the late winter and spring, are much larger than hoped for, and give a fair indication of what might be expected by Robertson-Cole in the coming fall drive.

Careful selection was made of every production offered for summer distribution. Pictures of the lighter nature, with plenty of beautiful outdoor scenery were listed. The real heavy type of drama was shunned and the kind of pictures that would appeal to any audience on the sweltering days such as are here now were posted for issue.

A Timely Robertson-Cole Offering

With the eyes of the world centered upon the Shantung situation in connection with the Peace Treaty, Robertson-Cole believes it has a most timely subject in "Pagan God," second of the Superior Pictures series starring H. B. Warner. Exhibitors Mutual will distribute the production, which was made under the personal supervision of Jesse D. Hampton.

"The Pagan God" is a story of Chinese intrigue, in which an American diplomat is brought in as a central figure through the desire of the United States to get an inside track into the plotting of an unscrupulous band of Orientals.

Noble with Vitagraph

John W. Noble has been added to the staff of directors at Vitagraph's Eastern studios in Brooklyn and will direct Gladys Leslie's next feature, "Fate in the Balance."

Apfel Sees Demise of Titles

World Director Says They Spoil Pictures and Insult Public Intelligence

"THE difficulties that beset a director in the picturization of stories are becoming harder and harder as the industry increases in age," says Oscar Apfel, who has recently signed a five-years' contract with World Pictures to produce features for this corporation.

"One of the hardest problems confronting the director is to create an original finish to a picture. How to get away from the inevitable 'clinch' at the finish as the picture fades out. I might say that this is the most familiar situation in pictures and being the "walk out" cue to the public it is the most detested piece of business in the making of pictures to a director. To get away from it and yet end your picture in a satisfactory way to your audience is productive of more sleepless hours than anything a director has to do with.

"I agree with many critics of pictures that we have a tendency to pay too much stress on titles. We do not give the public credit for enough intelligence and consequently we load a picture up with hundreds of feet of titles that could better be devoted to action and not so much padding. If we would only stop to think that many of the great dramas of life that are acted with ourselves as witnesses, not a word is spoken, yet we get the story in its entirety as regards the meaning of everything that is done. These dramas are played for us daily on the streets of our cities and we do not depend on words which in pictures are given to us in titles. It is this utter disregard of the intelligence of audiences that make us do foolish things in the filming of stories.

"The day is coming when pictures will be made without a foot of titles except the ones necessary to introduce the characters which is necessary to start our minds to follow the story without confusion or uncertainty."

Pioneer Closes Big Contract

Greater Sales Productions Takes Its Output for Three Mid-Western States

WHAT is considered as the biggest and most important deal consummated for many weeks past in the independent field was the joining hands of the Greater Stars Productions of Chicago.

Clyde Elliott and Floyd Brockwell, the men behind the Greater Stars Productions, signed the contracts on behalf of their interest, while M. H. Hoffman, who is now in Chicago, represented the Pioneer.

The Greater Stars Productions, which is the representative independent film exchange in the Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin territory, by the terms of the contract acquire the exclusive rights to all the current and forthcoming Pioneer Productions.

They will shortly offer to their exhibitors Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang," "The Long Arm of Mannister" and "Confession." The other pictures are "The Girl From Nowhere," "The Sins of the Children," "Virtuous Sinners," as well as Grace Davison in "Suspicion" and her latest production, "Atonement."

Both Brockwell and Elliott have been in the film game in Chicago for some time, and when they formed a partnership and created the Greater Star Productions, many of their friends predicted that in a year these two would have the biggest independent film exchange in Chicago. When they started, their one aim was to handle only big features, productions which would be long remembered in the film world as big successes.

The Pioneer contract places them in the position to which they aspired.

"The Trap," a Dramatic Universal Offering

Written by two well known authors and the scenario edited by Eve Unsell, with Olive Tell in the leading role, "The Trap," a Universal picture, stands out as one of the most dramatic photoplays of the year.

The opening scenes of the play are laid in the Yukon region of Alaska, and the first half of the drama continues in this atmosphere when it then changes to the more modern scenery of New York City. The story depicts the struggle of a young New York girl, who has been reared in select surroundings, to escape the terribleness of a sudden marriage with a reprobate of the northern country. The action of the drama is intense and through the story she is brought back to the city of her childhood, where she eventually finds real happiness.

Seldom if ever has any Universal Special Attraction picture had a better cast than is included in "The Trap." Jere Austin is cast in a role of prominence, as is Rod LaRocque, who has a long list of screen successes to his credit. He has played opposite Mabel Normand, opposite Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires" and opposite Madge Kennedy. In "The Trap" he is a "villain," this being the first time in two years that he has not had the "hero" role. Joseph Burke, Sidney Mason, Tallulah Bankhead and Earl Schenck have important roles.

Showmanship Angles on Barriscale Picture

Bessie Barriscale's recent production, "The Woman Michael Married," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual, is said to be one of the best examples of modern styles production and as such as being widely exploited by many exhibitors. Several have linked the advertising of the picture in the newspapers with the advertising of local merchants and have also arranged Barriscale windows. Photographs of the star in her many beautiful gowns were used as models of what might be accomplished with materials which were displayed in the windows.

Universal Film Co.,

Gentlemen:

Allow me to congratulate the Universal Film Company on the cinema production, "THE HEART OF HUMANITY" which I have just completed a three day run on same.

Being located in only a small town I was rather dubious at first in giving it a booking, owing to the fact that it is a much bigger proposition than we SMALL EXHIBITORS are in the habit of handling. But after having run the first day, I puffed out my chest, and considered that I was just as BIG a fellow as Marcus Loew, New York's BIG MAN of the Movies (only that I didn't cover so much territory).

To make a long story short, I piled them in for two matinees and three nights and went over the top with a bang. The whole thing from start to finish is a Work of Art, and I'll say there is no theatre too small to show it. Advertise her big as the picture will surely do the backing.

Very truly yours,

A. C. Abrahamson.

P.S. Since writing this letter a fellow just met me and asked me if I was going to run "THE HEART OF HUMANITY" again tonight. He said he saw it three times but would like to see it again.

My dear Mr. Hellman:-

I take pleasure in expressing to you how the patrons of our different Theatres liked the Universal Super Serial "ELMO THE MIGHTY". They took to it like a duck does to water. They just went wild over it. They are so enthused about this Serial that they can't wait until the next Episode is shown on the screen. I must congratulate the Universal on bringing out such a good Serial.

After seeing this Serial myself, I must confess that I took it for two reasons: Firstly, I did not want to deprive my audience of missing such a wonderful story, full of pep and mystery, and secondly I did not want to deprive ourselves of such a real box-office attraction.

Trusting that the Universal will bring out more like it, I beg to remain

Very truly yours,

Sennett Appears with "Beauties"—in a Book

So great has been the demand for photos of the Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties and his comedians that Sol Lesser, in conjunction with E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mr. Sennett, decided to publish a book which would give a complete set of the Bathing Girls and Comedians. It was their idea to give the public the best, and H. C. McCourt, who designed and produced the booklet, did not spare any expense in doing so.

The cover of the booklet, done in coloring, contains the photo of Mack Sennett and two of his original beauties.

Then there is the general foreword—giving a little of the life-history of Mack Sennett, Sol Lesser, the man who conceived the idea that the admiring public should have the opportunity to see and greet Mack Sennett's Bathing Beauties in person, and finally gives a summary of the contents of the booklet.

"Queens of the Sea" contains thirty-four beautiful pictures, a short story on Mack Sennett and his studio and several ads. It is said to be the first book of its kind to be produced by any state rights exhibitor.

First Two-Reel Comedy of Ernest Truex's

Ernest Truex is supported by a capable cast of players in his first two-reel comedy directed by John Joseph Harvey for Amedee J. Van Beuren. Mrs. Sidney Drew adapted the scenario from "The Night of the Dub," a story by Albert Payson Terhune, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

David Torrence is chief in support of the star. Vallie Belasco Martin and Charles Haskins have prominent roles.

Has Sennett Comedy for Two States

The F. A. F. Enterprises of Omaha, Neb., has secured the Iowa and Nebraska rights to "Yankee Doodle in Berlin". It will start a road show, with the girls, out in September. Two other road shows, without girls, will take in the smaller towns.

Clara Kimball Young, a recent storm center, who is now settled to work on her first production for Equity Pictures Corporation, "Eyes of Youth"

First Equity Well Under Way

Clara Kimball Young and Company in San Francisco Making Number of Scenes

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG and sixty-two others who are associated with her in the production of "Eyes of Youth," the forthcoming Fine Arts photoplay feature, which is to be the initial release of the Equity Pictures Corporation, have arrived in San Francisco for the purpose of making a number of big scenes which will be used in the picture. Miss Young is working at the Harry Garson studios in Los Angeles, but the trip here—made by special train—was made in order that certain special locations which are considered invaluable for the production might be used.

While the release of "Eyes of Youth" has been set for the middle of October, word from the Pacific Coast which is constantly being received at the New York offices of the recently formed Equity Pictures Corporation is of such a nature that President Herbert Somborn and Treasurer Joseph I. Schnitzer are beginning to feel that they must keep going at top speed in order to be ready for the big feature when the release date arrives. The Equity people have a well developed plan of operation that has a lot of novel kinks in it and the working out of this plan involves a tremendous amount of detail. The branches throughout the country through which Equity pictures will reach the exhibitors are to be given a lot of special sales helps, and as a consequence Messrs. Somborn and Schnitzer have considerably more to do than to merely "establish" these branches.

The Equity will have ten pictures each year—four by Miss Young, four by another internationally known star whose name has not yet been announced, and two special productions of an unusual nature.

Although the matter of the foreign distribution of the picture is not yet being seriously considered, developments abroad of an almost daily occurrence point that "Eyes of Youth" will be one of the biggest things in point of popular appeal which the United States has ever sent overseas.

Bull's-Eye Offers Travesty on Spiritualism

The second release of the new Bulls-Eye films featuring Charlie Dorety has been titled "Haunted Hearts," and will be ready for its premier showing shortly. "Haunted Hearts" is a travesty on spiritualism written by Jay Mulhauser.

Dave Morris has been engaged to direct several new Bulls-Eye novelties, which will be ready for release about September 15th.

First of Heralded Cosmo Pictures Aug. 3

The Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Dark Star," with Marion Davies, will be released August 3. This is considered one of the most important announcements of the season because "The Dark Star" is the first of the widely heralded Cosmopolitan Productions, each of which will be released as Paramount-Artcraft pictures, by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, each to be based on the work of a writer of international reputation.

"The Dark Star" is after the novel by Robert W. Chambers. When it was decided by Cosmopolitan officials that they would film the wealth of valuable material which they now own, it was decided that the dramatic story of "The Dark Star" would make one of the best pictures ever filmed. Therefore, this choice came almost unanimously and work on the first Cosmopolitan production was begun in the late spring at the Paragon studio at Fort Lee. Allan Dwan was the director.

The Sawyer-Lubin forces have added a four-page folder to their already extensive list of advertising accessories for the help of exhibitors in publicizing "Virtuous Men." The folder consists of four pages and is illustrated with cuts of E. K. Lincoln, Clara Joel, Grace Darling and Robert W. Cummings. These cuts are placed at the four corners of the two inside pages with the reading matter appearing in between.

Capital Gets "Virtuous Men"

Long Deferred Opening in Washington Will Take Place at Poli's on August 10

THE long deferred opening of "Virtuous Men" in the city of Washington, has at last become a reality. H. E. Coffey, General Manager of the Empire Feature Film Distributing Company, whose organization controls "Virtuous Men" for the District of Columbia, has arranged to present the E. K. Lincoln feature at Poli's Theatre beginning Sunday, August 10th. The picture will run for two weeks at least and Poli's has secured an option to extend the engagement indefinitely. A most elaborate campaign of exploitation will be pursued, the opening gun of which will be fired in the Washington newspapers on Friday, August 1st. Coffey will distribute thousands of circulars and folders throughout the city, post more than 500 twenty-four sheet stands and plans to spend over fifteen hundred dollars in the local newspapers. It is expected that this vigorous promotion of "Virtuous Men", coupled with the broadcast advertising the picture received in the city some time ago, will give it a sensational and successful run.

It will be remembered that "Virtuous Men" was advertised to play at Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington during Easter week of this year. A big advertising campaign was inaugurated by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and Mr. Moore. At the last moment the Rialto management is said to have endeavored to switch the production to their smaller house, the Strand. The Sawyer-Lubin forces refused to stand for the change and "Virtuous Men," despite the newspaper campaign did not show in Washington.

An augmented orchestra will be one of the features of the showing and Coffey has arranged with the Poli's management for a special stage setting which is now in the course of construction.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Corbett Show Friends Film

"Here's my gang," said Jim Corbett as he led a long line of personal friends from the ranks of drama, vaudeville, motion pictures and newspaperdom through the Universal offices in New York Friday night, June 25.

Mr. and Mrs. James J. Corbett entertained their close personal friends at a private showing of his motion picture serial, "The Midnight Man," in the big projection room of Universal.

And the former heavyweight champion of the world on matters fistic was prepared to prove that he was no welterweight when it came to motion picture stardom or championships.

As one admirer put its, "Jim was never satisfied in becoming anything but a champion. When it came to the fighting game he scored the highest honors. Then he started in a dramatic production and all the newspaper critics were amazed to learn that he had the histrionic ability that put Gentleman Jim to the forefront in that profession. And in vaudeville he was a headliner right off the jump and held that position by pure merit in the art of entertaining. And now this motion picture serial will show all his admirers throughout the country that their favorite has scored heavily again in another line of endeavor. Yes, Jim's a born champion in whatever he undertakes."

Impresario Corbett announced that only a few episodes would be shown. He jumped from the third to the sixth and then the ninth and thirteenth. There was a thrilling climax planted at the end of each episode and the spectators were at a loss to find out just how Mr. Corbett had managed to escape, as each following episode which would show the escape was skipped.

This provoked all sort of wild conjectures, but Corbett would not elucidate. He declared that to keep them in suspense would assure him of a big first night audience when the picture was released. Tom Hamlin.

Exploitation Angles Are Vital

Robertson-Cole Believes Its Subjects Exceed Others in Such Possibilities

CLAIM is made by Robertson-Cole that more money is spent by exhibitors in exploiting its attractions through the use of lobby displays, than is devoted to the product of any other motion picture concern.

Virtually every Robertson-Cole offering through Exhibitors' Mutual, has lent itself readily to extensive lobby exploitation, and exhibitors have been keen to take advantage of this fact.

Robertson-Cole points out the big exploitation which has marked recent releases, which include "The Man Who Turned White", "The Mints of Hell", "Man's Desire", "The Woman Michael Married", "Better Times" and "The Man Beneath".

Each of these productions afford exhibitors big opportunities for the type of exploitation that means money to their box office and success for the pictures, it is stated.

Some of the earlier attractions are still being exploited on an immense scale. Such plays as "What Every Woman Wants", Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas", "Just Squaw" and "The Turn in the Road" are continuing to bring forth models in exploitation.

Upon the ingenuity of the exhibitor in arranging his lobby depends in a large measure the success of his theatre. There are exhibitors who contend that attractive lobbies are a waste of time and money, but these are few and far between.

The reward which has come to the exhibitor who has "played with" the Robertson-Cole features before mentioned, is evidence sufficient to prove that lobby displays help materially in the promotion of any picture.

Sales Contest Winners to See Broadway

Five of Pathe's crack salesmen are to take a comprehensive fling at Broadway during the week of August 4th as the result of the salesmen's contest instituted by Director of Exchanges Fred C. Quimby, during the month of June in honor of their Chief, Charles Pathe, who was at that time on a visit to America. The winners of the contest have just been selected and they are as follows: Jack Auslett of the New Orleans Branch, H. P. Calloway of the Cincinnati Branch, March Wood of the Oklahoma City Branch. D. C. Stearns of the Cleveland Branch and Harry Taylor of the Kansas City Branch.

These men topped the entire list of 200 Pathe salesmen during Pathe Honor month and are now to reap the fruits of their hard labor. They arrive in New York on Sunday, August 3rd, and starting Monday morning August 4th, they will be the guests of the Pathe Home Office on a continuous round of gaiety which has been planned to include every point of joy on Broadway.

The Reception Committee will consist of Elmer R. Pearson, Feature Sales Manager, Walter S. Wessling, Short Subject Sales Manager and Frank V. Bruner, Manager of Serial Publicity.

Monopol Makes Sales on Two Features

Max Cohen, of Monopol Pictures Corporation, announced the sale of considerable territory for the two productions which his organization is now marketing on a state right basis. "Crimson Shoals," starring Francis Ford, and "Alma, Where Do You Live?" have been disposed of for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern Jersey to H. N. Smith, general manager of the Consolidated Film Exchange, Philadelphia, Pa.

The entire foreign rights to "Crimson Shoals" have been sold to Reginald Warde, well-known distributor of foreign territorial rights. Warde has already sold the production for Great Britain and several continental coun-

Special Service Section on

Frank Keenan in "The World Aflame"

SPECIAL service on features as a rule does not advise except on the assumption that the exhibitor has or will book the picture and treats it only from the exhibitor's angle, the writer placing himself in the exhibitor's place.

He tells the plot and then presents his ideas as to how the production should be handled, avoiding either criticism or praise.

This policy is not to be changed in the service rendered on "The World Aflame," but the theme (not the story) is of such vital importance and pertains to a subject so unusual and of such real moment that we must advise you on one point that is usually not covered.

Either fully realize that the playing of "The World Aflame" is more than an incident in the history of your theatre, just another bill to be booked, paid for and played, and carefully plan a dignified exploitation campaign, so unusual and complete in its scope, that you will have secured the attention of both the great classes which go to define Capital and Labor, or leave it alone. This is a film for no half way measures. If you let it slide by with your usual advertising, taking what comes to your theatre naturally, this film is liable and we might say likely to prove a dismal failure. On the other hand, if you take advantage of the opportunity which is presented from almost every angle, you will reap a great harvest of financial profit, deliver a message of vast importance to nearly every man, woman and child in your city and again advance the sphere of the motion picture beyond that of mere entertainment or amusement. It is not the story of "The World Aflame" which is of such importance, but the idea, the fundamental thought within which the events filmed have their root.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

TO attempt to deny that our own country as well as the whole world is seething with an undefinable, indefinite unrest, that is neither socialistic or political, but which seems to be a product of an era of war which has permitted some of two classes to make too much money for their own good, one termed "profiteers," the other the laboring man, is to admit that we do not recognize the signs of the times.

The story of "The World Aflame" is a treatment of this subject in that it takes the case of certain of a city's dissatisfied anarchistic people and permits their discontent to spread until an industrial paralysis threatens and then shows how one man of the capitalistic class, who held the office of mayor, broke the back of the anarchistic movement by prompt action and then brought Labor and Capital together on a new basis, an idealistic and, one might almost say, a socialistic one, thereby insuring the future against a repetition of the calamity which had confronted a great city.

This subject is today engaging the minds of the greatest thinkers in the world. It is being given careful study by men who have millions. It is being viewed by many who toil for their daily bread. Each mind is attempting to reach a conclusion. What is the relative status of Labor and Capital?

THIS is the plot of "The World Aflame."

Carson Burr (Frank Keenan) is a wealthy business man who recognizing that the city in which he lives will soon need an executive officer capable enough and honest enough to see that justice is done Capital and Labor, the latter influenced by a group of alien anarchists, clash over the question of what the toiler shall be paid for the labor he performs.

On a platform promising justice to all he is elected and before his term of office expires he finds himself confronted with the crisis he has foreseen.

Labor in all its organized branches has gone on a strike. Back of the movement is the group of men and women of anarchistic minds, governed by a leader who edits a newspaper preaching the doctrines espoused by I. W. W.'s, Bolsheviki's and the other sects of like brand.

The street car lines in the city are tied up. Not a wheel is turning. The superintendent of the road and the mayor run a car through in spite of the mob which threatens them at every turn of a wheel. Two thousand extra police guard every industrial plant in the city. The city's returned "Dough Boys" are organized under efficient leadership.

In one day the strike is broken, the alien band with its leader are arrested and deported and the business of the city resumes.

WITH quiet restored, the mayor calls the city's captains of finance to his home and proposes a plan which will insure the future against another such crisis.

A share in the profits for the employees of every plant in the city is what he suggests. He proves to every capitalist present that their interests would be enhanced by such an arrangement. When he has convinced his capitalistic friends that it is time for a new regime, he goes with them to a hall where labor is holding a meeting that purports to be the beginning of another industrial disturbance and states the proposition to them. The result is the adoption of the plan with excellent results. Everyone is satisfied and happy.

(The love interest of the picture is furnished in the romance of the mayor's daughter and his private secretary and there are many little side steps in characterization and counteraction, but these do not concern the plot, so we pass them in our synopsis.)

Usually with any picture in which Frank Keenan is cast for the leading role we would say by all means center your publicity on the star, but this story, or rather the theme of it, is of such a nature that Mr. Keenan is overshadowed and therefore should be given second place in your billing.

WITH the admonition against booking this picture unless you expect to give it an exploitation campaign equal to that of any production you have ever played, it naturally follows that we should suggest along what lines this advertising should run.

At the very first it is our idea that not a thing should be done which is at all suggestive of the "circus" style of billing. Keep your exploitation dead serious in every way, pounding away on the one thought that this picture presents a message of the utmost importance.

Therefore you will discard all "stunt" ideas as not in keeping with the subject with which you have to deal.

We would first invest heavily in 24-sheet stands and cover over every

Tense moments in "The World Aflame," starring Frank Keenan

Frank Keenan dominates in nearly every scene of his latest production, "The World Aflame"

Call in the Preachers and Newspaper Men on This Picture available space so that both millionaire and workingman will see this picture advertised wherever they go. Next get out your smaller billing, all of it carrying it's selling talk based on the one big idea. Buy big space in your newspapers and fill available windows with cards. Get a neat herald into the hands of every person you can reach. Spend money like a drunken sailor on this, for you will get it back many fold.

NOW here is an idea that might start some "talk" and that is the very best kind of publicity.

Every city has it's labor unions and it's rich men, and the rich men are usually those who hire labor.

Arrange for a special showing of this picture to a combined audience of the employers and of the officers of each union.

Call in the preachers, the newspaper men and any others who have a public influence in your city and put this picture over for their benefit. The farther in advance of your playing dates you could pull this private showing the better. It ought to be several days and to do that you would have to arrange with your exchange to ship it to you for a special date. (We have no information on this subject, but would consider that the exchange would be glad to do this for you without extra charge for service.)

Now let's carry this idea a little farther, because if we get these men all together, the laborers sitting on one side of the theater and the plutocrats on the other with the newspaper men staying just long enough to say they were there, this whole thing might fall flat and that would be bad.

SO the idea would be to get these people to mingle. That would mean something more than just a picture show.

Now speeches will suggest itself as the best thing to attempt for this purpose. And get this. No matter how big a man may be he likes "to show off." You can persuade one or two of your captains of industry to give a few minutes talk and then give some of the labor union men an inning. (Warning—Do this before the showing or they will all walk out on you.)

Now you want someone to stage manage this affair who knows his business. Every man who comes to your little party wants to be met with the glad hand of welcome. He wants to be introduced to some one else. He wants to be made to feel at home and when it comes to the speech making, your stage manager should keep that moving. If you can get from fifty to a hundred men together in this way and warm them up you can reap more good advertising from it than a good many dollars will buy.

Besides those newspaper boys will give you half a front page not because it happened to be you and your theater and Frank Keenan in "The World Aflame" but because influential men met, talked and saw a show and that all goes to make what is known as "news."

YOU will need some selling talk for your newspaper displays so we suggest a few examples:

Because one man looked into the future far enough and honestly enough a great city, purged itself of the Red Scourge, and the man builded for himself and his fellow men an ideal spot in which to live, where Capital and Labor worked in perfect harmony and true co-operation.

See—"The World Aflame" for the most dramatic story of the year, bearing a message of vital importance to the social and industrial world.

Here is another:

The city faced an industrial crisis because Capital and Labor did not know how to work in complete co-operation and harmony, each to receive the full measure of that which it produced. A man who had looked ahead, the mayor, in a single day broke a great strike, brought disaster to a group of anarchist disturbers and showed the warring classes the way to a plane of right and justice.

See "The World Aflame", a story told in photoplay which visualizes a thought of vital interest.

Material for a herald will be available from the synopsis if you desire to use a story of the plot.

THERE is one point in covering the story of this subject which we think is worth attention of second consideration and that is that this idea was developed by Mr. Keenan himself and that the plot has its origin in the recent street railway strike in Seattle, Washington, the role which Mr. Keenan enacts being that of Ole Hanson, Seattle's energetic executive official, who by prompt measures killed what threatened to be a strike movement of alarming proportions. In sections where an interest in Seattle means more than a few headlines in a newspaper this fact that the story of "The World Aflame" is based on what has actually happened will be of great value and certainly it is worth mentioning if you are located on the Atlantic instead of the Pacific coast.

In relegating Mr. Keenan to second place in the exploitation of this feature we do not mean that you should forget him entirely for this sterling character actor, with a style all his own, has many admirers who love to see him put over his scenes. What you want to do is mention that Mr. Keenan plays the principal role in "The World Aflame" and that it is one of the most dramatic of his career.

There are not many of the supporting cast who will mean much to your audience although they are all good types and anyway this is a picture in which a mention of players is not required.

There is a little comedy in the first sequences but in the main the story is drama with much that is melodrama toward the end of the picture.

If it were not for this melodrama connected with the progress of the strike and the efforts of the mayor and his assistant to run a car over the road in spite of the fact that all the street car employees are on a strike, together with a sequence in which the Mayor's son is kidnapped and badly hurt, this picture would lack considerabiy in audience appeal, but the element referred to, furnishes sufficient suspense to keep an audience from dwelling too heavily on the "lecture" stuff that the picture does contain.

The offering is in six reels and was directed by Ernest Warde with Jack Cunningham aiding Mr. Keenan in the preparation of the scenario.

WORTH REMEMBERING CONCERNING THIS ONE

A BIG human vital story.
A star who has an established reputation for putting over tense scenes.
A story based on the Seattle strike.
An original idea developed by Mr. Keenan himself.
A title which has great possibilities for exploitation and which will catch the eye wherever displayed.
A super production which is to have extra attention from its releasing corporation and an extended advertising campaign.
Available from your exchange on "The World Aflame" will be a striking 24 sheet lithograph, smaller stands and small paper, window cards, etc. A special music score with complete orchestration parts will also be at your service at a nominal sum.

After a year's hard work, a work of love for our soldiers in France, Elsie Janis will be seen in Selznick pictures

Home Atmosphere for These Extras

Up in the Tejunga Pass, in the far-famed Southern California mountains, there is a Zulu village, situated upon the very spot where not so very many years ago the tepee of the American Indian stood. The African detail was constructed under the direction of Jesse D. Hampton for the use of Blanche Sweet, who is starring under his management in "A Woman of Pleasure." The story as picturized by George Elwood Janks, in seven reels, has been enlarged upon to a considerable extent and will be released by Pathe. Wallace Worsley is directing Miss Sweet under the supervision of Mr. Hampton.

Hundreds of Africans were transported from Los Angeles to the mountain pass to play in this picture. Every night they insisted upon returning to their homes, so it required very heavy expense daily for automobiles, meals and the necessary costumes.

Territory Going Fast on "Hushed Hour"

Harry Garson's second Blanche Sweet production, "The Hushed Hour", which is being state righted is rapidly being disposed of, the following territories having been sold in the last few days: Jones, Linnick & Schaefer, of Chicago, Illinois; Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisvills, Kentucky and Tennessee; Pioneer Film Corporation, New York State; Josiah Pearce & Sons of New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi; The First National Exhibitors' Exchange of Cleveland, Ohio; Merit Film Company of Denver, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Idaho; Charles F. Schwerin, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina, and Virginia. The United Kingdom has been sold to the Gaumont Company.

The sales were made through Herbert K. Somborn, formerly Sales Manager for Mr. Garson, but who is now the president of the newly formed Equity Pictures Corporation.

Art Director Engaged

Charles H. Kyson has been engaged by Allan Dwan as art director of the Allan Dwan Feature Productions, and will take up his duties immediately as a member of Mr. Dwan's staff at the Brunton Studios.

Universal Prepares for Fall

Many Productions Ready to Be Viewed by Exhibitors; Big Summer Business

"THE prospects for the Fall season, as far as Universal is concerned, were never better and the fact that we now have nineteen fall productions and short subjects in the exchanges, is not only pleasing the exhibitor but is making his plans for the fall easier to formulate." This statement was made last week by Harry M. Bermann, Universal's general sales manager.

"The present summer is the most successful one ever experienced by motion picture producers and exhibitors. Much of this success has been due to the better quality of productions and the cooperation which the producers are giving the exhibitors.

"Universal scored one of the most notable victories in producers' sales-campaigns when it succeeded in placing in its exchanges many of its fall productions by August 1. Other companies which recently adopted the opening-booking plan and who have followed Universal in its plans to get to the exhibitor as early as possible several of the fall productions, have succeeded to a degree. Universal believes that it is the only producing company who has a total of nineteen pictures in the exchanges at the present time. Seven of the productions are of the Jewell and Special Attraction brand, two of them are the first halves of serials, two are special comedies, three are educational, and five are of the already famous Stage Womens' War Relief Series."

The names of the productions which are now in the Universal Exchanges and which are being shown to exhibitors are: Jewels, "Home", "Paid in Advance", and "Forbidden". Serials, "The Midnight Man" and "Elmo the Mighty",; Special Attractions, "The Petal on the Current", "A Little Brother of the Rich", "The Ace of the Saddle", and "The Trap",; Jewel Special Comedies, "Monkey Stuff", and "The Jazz Monkey"; Major Allen Animal Series, "Trailing the Leopard", "Bear Trapping", and "Lion Trapping"; S. W. R. R. Series, "A Star Over Night", "Winning His Wife", "Fighting Mad", "An Honorable Cad", and "Tom's Little Star".

Noted Dancer to Make Series

Doraldina, Exponent of Hawaiian Dances, to Produce in Independent Field

DORALDINA, actress and dancer, is the latest to join the independent producing field in the forming of the Doraldina Pictures, Inc., for which company she will produce a series of pictures during the coming year.

Mme. Doraldina is not new to the motion picture field, having made a feature for Pathe, and recently completed "The Heart of Nasonia" on the coast. She is known from coast to coast and all over Europe for her original manner of performing the Hawaiian terpischorean art.

She is at present being featured in "The Red Dawn," the Thomas Dixon Jr. show, which is due to open on Broadway in the early part of August, and which opened to an enthusiastic audience at Stamford, Conn. She has a dramatic part in this show and in conjunction with her screen work she should establish an envious record.

Doraldina will be remembered for her connections with many Broadway cafes and roof gardens, where daily she danced to packed houses.

Definite plans for the starting of the first production have not been completed, but a studio and several directors are under consideration. Negotiations are also being made for one of the biggest Broadway plays ever produced.

"The Heart of Nasonia," which Doraldina made prior to coming to New York is now being negotiated for by several distributors for the domestic and world rights.

The policy in the production of these pictures will be in keeping with Doraldina's talents, and they will not be made so as to conform only to her dancing abilities, but also to give her dramatic scope plenty of leeway.

Story Interests in "A Sage Brush Hamlet"

William Desmond in his latest picture, "A Sage Brush Hamlet," released by Robertson-Cole and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, plays the role of a pursued lover. Instead of the rough and ready Westerner trying to win the heart of the Eastern girl, in "The Sage Brush Hamlet" the girl tries to win the madcap leader of a reckless crew of cowpunchers. This truly human situation with its excellent comedy side lights assures the production marked popularity. In fact, unusually heavy advance bookings are reported by the exchange managers.

Marguerite De La Motte plays the part of the Eastern girl, and her escapade in her "nightie" leads to no end of amusing situations. Ed Piel, Walter Perry and George Fields support William Desmond as members of the reckless Bottle Canyon gang.

Nephew of Italian Premier with Metro

Frederic Malatesta, nephew of the Italian premier, Nitti, has been engaged by Director General Maxwell Karger to play the role of a South American millionaire in "The Four Flusher," in which Hale Hamilton is starring for Metro Pictures Corporation under the direction of Harry L. Franklin. The picture is now under production.

Mr. Malatesta appeared as a Russian nobleman with Edith Storey in "The Legion of Death."

Lehrman Has No Aids in Studio Venture

Henry Lehrman, producer of Lehrman Comedies, has just issued a positive denial of a statement recently published in a trade journal which declared that Roscoe Arbuckle is half owner of the new Henry Lehrman Studios now being erected at Culver City, California.

"The new studios are entirely my own property," said Mr. Lehrman, "and I have no partners or associates whatever in their ownership. When I contracted with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the distribution of future Lehrman Comedies, I determined to build a production home which would in every respect meet my ideas of what a modern studio should be, and the plant which I am now bringing to completion is the result.

"Mr. Arbuckle has leased space for the making of his pictures, but his position at the studios will be solely that of a tenant. I am moved to make this point clear in justice to both Mr. Arbuckle and myself."

Theda Bara in a Story of Old Ireland

"Kathleen Mavourneen" is the working title of the third Fox super-production with Theda Bara as the star which will be presented by William Fox in line with his elaborate policy for 1919-1920.

This play, described as "the sweetest of Irish love stories," was adapted for the screen and directed by Charles J. Brabin, from one of the works of the late Dion Boucicault. It is a production, the strength of which lies in its implicity and powerful love element.

With the Irish question among the issues of the day, "Kathleen Mavourneen" will, it is believed, have a strong box office value outside of the fact that it is a big play by a big author, interpreted by a big star.

Supporting Miss Bara are Marc McDermott, Raymond McKee, Edward O'Connor, Jennie Dickerson, Marcia Harris, Henry Hallam, Harry Gripp and Morgan Thorpe.

Where Credit Is Due—

In a review of the World picture "Bringing Up Betty", published last week, credit for photography work was given Mr. Schneider instead of to Mr. Gondolfi, as it rightfully should have been given.

Whirling Dervishes Pictured

Turkish Fakirs May Be Seen in Educational Releases of Red Cross Films

WHAT is claimed to be the first and only moving pictures of the howling dervishes of Turkey are to be seen in one of the new single-reel subjects of the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross, according to a statement of Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America. The educational organization has finished cutting and titling four of the new pictures, one of which will be devoted to the city of Constantinople.

The howling dervishes of Turkey are an ancient religious order, rather to be classified as a profession than a priesthood. They correspond with the religious fakirs of India, who also subject themselves to physical torture in the name of Mohammed. The Turkish dervishes hold their performances in dim cellars, and collect goodly sums from the audienec of laymen and spectators that are present.

The ceremony is based largely on self-hypnotism, plus a certain measure of clever faking. Along one side of the arena is seated, tailor-fashion, a group of individuals who supply the necessary atmosphere. At the beginning of the ceremony these men start slow movements of the head, hands and body that increase in speed as the ceremony proceeds, until the final climax, when the motion and general uproar reaches the maximum. All of which adds to the religious frenzy that is created to bewilder and deceive the onlookers, while the leading "actors" perform their "stunts."

The new Red Cross pictures are to include a number of unique subjects that have never before been photographed. The name of the American Red Cross has proved to be an "open sesame" in the Turkish Empire that has enabled their cameraman to penetrate regions and places that have never before been accessible to the camera. Every week additional negative is received in New York from the men in different parts of the world, and by early fall a regular releasing schedule will be established through the seventeen exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation that will provide a supply of unusual scenic and travel films.

Rogers Arranges Real Ship Christening

In order to further perfect the first of the Jane and Katherine Lee comedy playlets, Lou Rogers, president of the Rogers Film Corporation, presenting Jane and Katherine Lee, arranged for the special christening of a ship at the Newark shipyards, last week.

Though the action in the picture calls for a flash of the ship and the christening, still, in order to have the authentic scene, Mr. Rogers arranged for this effect and broke a choice bottle of champagne on the occasion to the sorrow of the property men and spectators.

With these minor details completed, Director Tefft Johnson is now busily engaged in the editing, and Tom Bret is doing the titling.

In order to obtain the best stills possible, Lou Rogers has ordered his cameramen to use a Graphles camera for this purpose in the future, instead of the usual still camera.

Washington Manager of Realart Named

William H. Rippard, well known in theatrical, newspaper and photoplay circles as a result of his sixteen years' experience in these varied fields, has been appointed manager of the Washington branch of Realart Pictures Corporation. The selection of Mr. Rippard follows the recent visit to the Capital of Ben F. Simpson, Realart's Field Manager, who is touring the East establishing exchanges for his organization.

Offices were opened July 21st at Suite 806-820 Mather Building. The Mather Building is located at 916 G Street, N. W., and is familiarly known as the "film building" among exhibitors as most of the larger picture companies have their offices there.

Screen Magazine Has Interesting Topics

Two of the features that have long been promised for the New Screen Magazine take their places in the current issue, No. 24, and have struck a chord of popularity at the outset. These are to come in series, and they include some extraordinary underwater natural history material of such merit that the Museum of Natural History in New York has asked for a copy of the print. The habits and appearance of the diving beetle and the caddis fly, from the larva to the adult insect, are shown in a subject entitled "Wonders of a Wayside Pond."

"Atonement" Is Finished for Pioneer

The final turn of the camera on the first Grace Davison production which is to be exploited by the Pioneer Film Corporation occured last week.

The new feature which is in five reels will be known as "Atonement." The scenario was written by Charles Edwards Hall, and this production was directed by William Humphrey. Conway Tearle appears jointly with Miss Davison as co-star.

The cast includes Sallie Crute, Huntley Gordon, Anthony Merlo and several others.

Pioneer will shortly offer "Atonement" on the state right market.

McCarthy Picture Soon to Be Launched

Releasing plans soon will be made public for the first offering of McCarthy Picture Productions, a special feature of original character, it is said, soon to be shown to the trade under a name which has not yet been finally selected. The picture which was given a pre-view at the Universal studio, where it was made, is practically completed under the supervision of John P. McCarthy. Following this pre-view, McCarthy told of his intention to proceed at once with a second feature and said:

"We are especially proud of our cast, selected carefully to fulfill the requirements of the initial story which was written with Russell Simpson in view as the lead. I personally feel that Mr. Simpson in this picture has scored even a greater success than in "The Brand," Rex Beach's play. Dorcus Mathews, in support has proven very magnetic and satisfying, while Bob McKim, our 'bad man,' has lent weight to the production. We believe we have one of the most efficient business staffs to be obtained, and every member thereof has added their personal efforts to make our first production a success."

Goldwyn Signs Leading Man for a Term

In accord with its policy of retaining actors and actresses who have proved their worth and won an assured place in the esteem of photoplay patrons, Goldwyn Pictures, last week, renewed a contract with John Bowers whereby that leading man will remain with Goldwyn organization until November 20, 1920.

Mr. Bowers' most recent portrayal was in the character of the romantic young western miner in the latest Madge Kennedy success, "Through the Wrong Door." Under his present contract, his first work will be opposite Pauline Frederick in a picture directed by Frank Lloyd.

World to Exploit Big Film

Rights to Picturized Version of the Novel, "When Bearcat Went Dry," Bought

WORLD FILM has closed a contract for the distribution of the filmed version of Charles Neville Buck's story, "When Bearcat Went Dry," after lively competition between several firms.

It will be released in the near future by the World Film Corporation and a complete line of printing will be provided from twenty-four sheet stands to one sheet, including all the other accessories necessary to help the exhibitor to cash in.

Charles Neville Buck, the author of the novel on which "When Bearcat Went Dry" is a native of Kentucky. Even while a member of the staff of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Mr. Buck was a constant contributor to important fiction magazines with his narratives of the hardy mountaineers of Eastern Kentucky and Western Virginia. In the course of time he lengthened his stories and they were presented to his great army of readers in the form of popular novels. A number of them have been dramatized and had New York productions, and one of them was made into a play by Augustus Thomas and was shown at the Lyric Theatre, New York City. Eight of his novels had screen productions and were voted by public and exhibitors as highly successful.

"When Bearcat Went Dry" was just off the presses the picture rights were sold. As the work progressed in filming the novel it was apparent that a bigger and more interesting story would be shown on the screen than appeared on the printed pages of the book. A director in the person of Ollie L. Sellers, fully appreciating the picture worth of the scenario, gave the best that was in him to make a record production.

It is the intention of World Pictures in putting this feature out as a special to give preference in the showing to those who first manifest interest. There are to be no strings tied to the release nor will it be necessary to take on other contracts to get a chance to cash in on "When Bearcat Went Dry."

Big Campaign Brings Results

Chicago Office of F. P.-Lasky Makes a Record Appeal to Large Convention

THE Chicago sales force of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation recently completed an important advertising campaign in the city of Milwaukee, one which bids fair to stand as a record for individual city campaigns.

During the week previous to July 5, the National Education Association held its annual convention there and in order that the delegates might have the opportunity of judging the merit of the productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which had been so effectively brought to their attention through the large display announcements prepared and sent to the daily papers by the advertising department of the home office, the Chicago sales force arranged with twelve of the most prominent photoplay houses in Milwaukee for solid weeks of Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

At the Alhambra theatre "Secret Service," the Paramount-Artcraft special starring Robert Warwick held the screen throughout the entire week. At the Butterfly, Marguerite Clark was the star in "Come Out of the Kitchen" while "Oh, You Women!" played at the Toy theatre. These three houses are all situated down town and all ran the attractions for a full week. The other nine houses, situated in the residential sections of Milwaukee, were booked with Paramount-Artcraft productions throughout the week, some making two and some three changes during the seven days.

The Chicago men also made a special effort to see to it that the pictures were given more than the usual amount of advertising and that the name Paramount-Artcraft might receive as much publicity as possible. Postcard reproductions of the Saturday Evening Post Paramount-Artcraft advertisements were distributed among the exhibitors together with suggestions for their use. Each exhibitor was also given a good supply of trademark lithographs and large trademark cuts.

"Mickey" Hit in West

Mid-West Greater Features Co., which controls "Mickey" in Colorado territory, has received an appreciative letter from the Lyceum theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., which commented as follows on a run of "Mickey":

"Very pleased to inform you that "Mickey" went big on the two repeat days. Played to capacity houses both days, and could not handle all who wanted to see the picture. This run ended the fifth day here and the last day was biggest of all. For a drawing card it can not be beat."

The letter ended with a request for a return date.

Fox Feature Drive

Fox Film Corporation is making a big drive on a special group of productions. The selling points and general attractiveness of the pictures included in this group are being brought forcibly to the attention of exhibitors, with the idea that they will appreciate the strong appeal these productions have for all motion picture patrons.

The features included in this group are the Sunshine Comedies, which are enjoying unusual popularity as a summer feature; the Great Nine, a cluster of nine big Fox successes, and the Lucky Thirteen, which is a selection of sparkling comedies.

This drive is being made under the direction of Tom North, manager of Fox Film Short Subjects, and will continue until September.

Anita Stewart Picture Through Vitagraph

Exhibitors and picture fans are evincing a considerable interest in the announcement that Vitagraph is soon to release an Anita Stewart feature, "Shadows of the Past." Miss Stewart made many fine pictures for Vitagraph—their excellence was always so well assured in advance that orders for the new feature are already reaching the New York offices from all sections of the country.

As the title would indicate, "Shadows of the Past" has to do with the efforts of three ex-convicts to tread the straight and narrow path.

Gleaned in Eastern Studios

THE extemporaneous lines that Elsie Janis uses while working on scenes, are often so original and to the point that Director James Young has formed the habit of having someone always ready with paper and pencil to take them down to be used for captions when the picture is cut. One such title used to a dozen or so ex-soldiers around a boarding house table the other day was: "If I was good enough to serve ye while ye was dyin' in France, I'm good enough to serve ye while ye're kickin' in America.

Owen Moore has just arrived in New York from the coast, and is going to commence work on his first starring production for Selznick Pictures Corporation just as soon as he can find a satisfactory story. Meanwhile he is reading everything he possibly can with the hope of discovering an as yet un-picturized good plot. He says it's like the proverbial needle in the haystack.

After Pauline, vaudeville star and hypnotist, had been at work as the star in the Supreme Pictures, Inc. serial temporarily entitled "Brewster's Mysterious Millions," for several hours last Tuesday, director Will S. Davis complained of a leaden and sleepy feeling. With a smile and a wave of his hands, Pauline roused his director to his usual alertness, and Mr. Davis decided that it might sometimes be a very inopportune thing to have an honest-to-goodness hypnotist in such close proximity.

The company which has been selected for the "Miracle of Love," featuring Wyndham Standing and Lucy Cotton, is entirely English. As the picture has English setting and atmosphere, Director Robert Leonard thought it a very happy coincidence.

Alice Brady, whom the public has made its own, forcing the star to labor for film and stage. Now a Realart star

Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," a Selznick picture, released through Select Pictures Corporation

For a mob scene in Gareth Hughes' first starring vehicle for Tyrad Pictures, "The Red Viper," which scene is supposed to take place on New York's east side, Jake Schargel, a leading Jewish comedian was engaged. Director Jacques Tyrol expects very realistic results.

Richard Barthelmess is reported to have received 1,233 letters from newly acquired friends after the first showings of "Broken Blossoms" in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. Now Barthelmess' typewriter is working nights, shooting off replies with machine gun rapidity. Such is the price of fame, but the young star says it is the first bill he enjoyed paying.

Eugene O'Brien finds that having Elsie Janis and her company on a neighboring set at the Biograph studio, makes concentration on his own picture "Sealed Hearts" extremely difficult. For something is always happening when Miss Janis is about, something that it would be a pity to miss.

Since "Moonshine and Shadow" is completed and ready for fall release, Charles and Violet Blackton are among the retired film stars. They are summering with their parents at the Blackton home in Brooklyn, giving part of each day to the study of French, music and dancing, to say nothing of the three r's and kindred subjects.

Jane and Katherine Lee autographed their pictures for J. J. McGraw and Christy Mathison out at the polo grounds the other day. It was difficult to say just which pair of celebrities was more pleased at meeting the other.

Helen Ferguson is playing the lead in a production called "The Star Rover." Her role is that of the tiny Duchess, and one of her costumes calls for a train four yards long and three yards wide. They didn't mind wasting material on such non-essentials as trains in days gone by.

Gladden James has quite recovered from his recent attack of what was thought to be ptomaine poisoning, and is back at work on his picture under the direction of John Adolfi.

Harry Morey has gone fishing near Nyack, N. Y. We hear that he is accompanied by his new twelve-cylinder Pathfinder, so we wonder just how much fishing he will do.

Tammany Young is playing the part of a "ruff nec" with Elsie Janis.

Jean Paige is spending part of the hot weather in the Berkshires.

Helen Holmes spent the greater part of one day last week in an airplane near the Grantwood studios, where her latest serial is being filmed. Jack Levering, her leading man, is an aviator himself, while Miss Holmes is beginning to feel just as much at home in the air as on land.

Conway Tearle and Grace Davidson have finished their most recent production entitled "Atonement," which will be released by the Pioneer Feature Films.

Charles Miller has begun his next production for the Independent Sales Corporation. The story is said to deal with gypsies, and Corliss Giles and Florence Billings have the featured roles. No title has yet been decided on.

Frankie Mann, who is at work on a serial under the management of A. F. Beck to be released through Pathe, has a most unique claim to distinction. She has never been in Los Angeles. In view of the fact that she has been making pictures steadily for the past year, we think this distinctly unique.

Manuel Noriega, at present with the Spanish Opera Company at the Cort Theatre, is said to be the most popular and best known actor of the present day among his own country people in Spain. It is further said that Signor Noriega is contemplating the production of a motion picture serial in the near future.

L. Rogers Lytton is playing Elsie Janis' father in her forthcoming production for Selznick Pictures Corporation, under the direction of James Young. Mr. Lytton has been vacationing at his country home through the warm weather, but owing to his lifelong friendship with Director Young, he was easily persuaded to take the part with Miss Janis.

From "Heavy" to "Hero" with Wyndham Standing

HOW would you like to be Wyndham Standing, and play leads for the very most loveliest stars there are, and be so in demand that you might always have three or four engagements at once if it weren't for the impossibility of being in several places at the same time? In fact, he is so much in demand that Mrs. Wyndham, who is quite as charming as her big, sociable, jolly looking leading man, and has had quite an enviable career on the English stage herself, has given up any further histrionic aspirations in order to act as manager-secretary for her overworked husband. Not that she minds—Oh, dear, No! She is perfectly thrilled by all the tributes and comments and appreciation that come with popular approval, and enjoys the quaint letters that pour in by the hundred with the keenest sense of humor imaginable.

"Some of the letters Wyndham received after 'The Eyes of the Soul' was shown were very touching," she observed. "There were several from people who had lost sons in the war, and there was a most pathetic one from a mother who declared that Wyndham bore such a striking resemblance to her son who had not come back, that she never took her eyes off his face while he was on the screen. Strange, how those resemblances do happen, isn't it? Wyndham answered that letter very particularly."

"That was a wonderful part," Mr. Standing exclaimed. "I don't think I've ever played one I liked better. I'm glad I've definitely got away from the heavy stuff. You know in my early picture days I used to be the villain."

"We can't imagine it," we protested. "How could any audience be expected to believe that of you?" If we've ever met a leading man who does not look like a heavy, it is Mr. Standing.

"Oh those were amusing times" (we hoped this was a good prelude for reminiscences and we were not disappointed). "I remember once I dashed into the husband's happy home, smashed several articles of furniture on my way through the lower floor, leaped up the stairs six at time, broke open the locked door of the wife's bedroom, and with a triumphant smile, exclaimed, by way of a caption: 'Love Conquers All.'

"But I love the picture work, and I've no regrets whatever about leaving the legitimate stage. There is such a change of action and setting, and so much opportunity to be out of doors that it makes up for the loss of an audience. 'Nature never did betray the heart that loved her,' you know, and, aside from books and the opera, there's nothing I like better than a day spent somewhere close to Nature. Nature is my pet hobby, don't you know. I'd rather go out for a day's fishing than—Oh, that reminds me. Mrs. Standing and I were out at one of the quaintest little old fishing towns on Long Island one summer, and there was the jolliest old salt—that's what you call them, isn't it?—well, this one was a genuine landmark, with snowy white hair and the most innocent blue eyes. We felt sure he'd never been out of sight of his home in his life, even though he did live only a few hours from New York, and Mrs. Standing always called him a child of Nature, when he wasn't around, of course. So we let him take us out fishing early every morning, and we spent hours with our lines trailing from the little boat, but never a fish did we catch. The old man encouraged us, however, and we kept hoping for better luck next time, until the old woman who brought us vegetables asked Mrs. Standing one day what we went out on the water so early for every morning. 'Why to fish,' Mrs. S. told her, as though our reason was rather obvious. 'Don't you know they ain't no fish in this inlet before October?' was the contemptuous retort. After that we realized that the child of Nature was quite as much a New Yorker when it came to making money as everybody else, but his hair was so white and his eyes were so blue and he was so charming that we never accused him of such duplicity. We pretended to be just as much interested in those fishing expeditions as ever. Which proves that we don't really mind getting up early."

Remembering the books as one of his hobbies, we asked Mr. Standing what he liked to read. "Oh, all the philosophers," he replied, "but the thing I enjoy most is the opera. I never miss one of them during the season if I can help it."

"Yes," Mrs. Standing broke in, with a teasing smile, "if I ever want to start trouble, I suggest to Wyndham that we go to a musical comedy instead of the Metropolitan. And you know Wyndham may look as though he had a wonderful disposition, and never could be temperamental, but he can go up in the air when he wants to."

"Temperament's out of fashion," Mr. Standing declared. "I think it's quite absurd for people to regard it as a proof of their being artists. Acting is a business, like any other profession, and some people can act and some can't, just as some can organize and command and invent and some can't. Professionals are only human beings, after all."

"But very likable human beings in this case," we thought as we went away wondering at the spirit of good comradeship that really does exist between some professional husbands and wives in spite of popular opinion to the contrary.—Marguerite Jones.

"Home" Gets Booking in Loew Houses

Marcus Loew has booked the successful Universal-Jewell production "Home" for a run of sixty days. The contract was closed recently by Sam Zieler, manager of the New York Universal Exchange.

"Home" was produced under the direction of Lois Weber, and features Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charles Chaplin).

In the supporting cast of this Jewell production are: William Crittenden, Lydia Knott, Helen Yoder, Al Ray, Frank Elliott, John Cossar and Clarissa Selwynne.

An Afternoon with Petite Lillian Hall : : : : :

WE'VE just had the most delightful afternoon, in spite of our unpressed suit and curlless hair and moist shoes and all the other disadvantages attributed to poor Saint Swithin. Once ensconced in a huge, comfy chair in Lillian Hall's cosy hotel apartment, with a box of chocolates at our elbow, and Lillian's entrancing self in the most charming blue and lace tea gown just opposite, telling us the story of her life, we forgot all about the weather for the first time in ten days. For Lillian looks like Louise Alcott's Amy, and photographs like Beth, and can you imagine a happier combination? When Mr. Brady was casting for "Little Women" his first contract with Miss Hall assigned her the part of Amy, but after interviewing every ingenue in New York and telegraphing to the coast in vain for possible Beths, Mr. Brady gave up in despair and declared that motion picture professionals were, or at least looked, much too worldly wise for the [illegible] girl of bygone days. Then he saw some of Miss Hall's "stills," and his troubles were over. It was an easy matter to find another Amy, and Miss Hall's frank, unsophisticated expression, innocent, childlike eyes and perfectly lovable self were just what Director Harley Knowles wanted. There is no need to comment on her portrayal of the character. Audiences all over the world loved her, and wept bitter tears at her death.

"I'm doing a comedy now," Miss Hall explained, "but I don't want to be a comedienne. This picture is just by way of a vacation. Yes, truly, playing with John Dooley is nothing but fun, and of course I'm thrilled with the idea of having William Nigh for a director. He's wonderful! My days at the studio are just one glorious good time."

"How did you happen to go into pictures?" we asked. "That's always what everybody wants to know."

"Oh, it wasn't terribly exciting. I always used to take part in all the amateur theatricals we gave during my school days, and then one time a stock company came to town for the summer. I met the manager at tea one afternoon and teased him into giving me a part. Naturally, as most of the audience were friends of mine, the papers were all very good to me and I was supposed to be a great success. Then I went to Canada with another stock company, and after that I played a number of child parts in various shows. Stuart Walker interviewed me for the Lola part in 'Seventeen,' but I lost my nerve and was afraid I hadn't had enough experience for it. I wouldn't feel that way now.

"After my stock training picture parts came quite naturally, and I've never faced starvation or had any real troubles at all. I did 'go broke' once, but you see I have a perfectly good home to go to any time I want to, so I never have to worry."

"No," she went on in response to a question, "I've no aspirations toward stardom. I want to be successful—everybody does—but I'm sure I never could take the whole responsibility of a production. I'd be simply terrified."

We were incredulous—a motion picture actress who didn't long to be a star some day! But Miss Hall was emphatic.

"I want to earn my own living because I don't approve of anyone's being a parasite—I've heard a lot of suffrage talks, you see—and I didn't think I ought to be just fooling round at home doing nothing of any importance. In my anxiety to go to work, I even took a course in stenography, though I've never made use of it. Pictures are so much nicer. I love the film work, but I'm sure I never was intended to be anything but an ingenue. I want to be a child and play baby-parts just as long as I can. By the way, how old do you think I am?"

"Judging by appearance or intelligence?" we parried, "if you didn't seem like quite such an experienced little lady, we'd say sixteen."

"I'll whisper it to you if you'll never tell," she laughed, so we can only say that sixteen wasn't such a very bad guess, after all.

"Would you like to see some summer things I've been making?" she asked, emerging from a closet with an armful of the daintiest, coolest looking frock imaginable, with hats of the same material.

"A friend of mine made the hats," she declared, "but I did the dresses, without a pattern, too. And don't the costumes look as though they had come directly from a Fifth Avenue window? I like to flatter myself into thinking they do."

"But they really do, exactly," we affirmed with perfect sincerity. "And we'll be sure to tell the fans that your favorite color is blue."

"Oh, yes," she agreed merrily, "and that my eyes are blue, too, and my hair is naturally golden—a perfect blonde, in other words."

Her laughter was irresistible. We went out into the rain with the feeling that there was plenty of sunshine inside, in spite of the gloominess out of doors.—Marguerite Jones.

Gleaned in Western Studios

ERNEST C. WARDE, energetic director for the Brunton studios, is preparing the third of the series of ten feature photoplays, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan with the star's own company in support. While Kerrigan is enjoying a few days' vacation between pictures, no such opportunity has presented itself for Warde, who is busily engaged in a study of the script and the initial work on the third picture. He has just completed the first two, which are "A White Man's Chance" and "The Joyous Liar." These are ready for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and in addition to the noted star, have Lillian Walker as leading woman. As in the case of the other two, the name of the third Kerrigan picture will be decided by Mr. Warde and those associated with him in its production when it has been completed, but it is said that it will contain many unusual situations of a virile and striking nature in keeping with Kerrigan's talent.

Lynn F. Reynolds, Universal director, has "shot" the final scenes for "The Brute Breaker," a story of the French Canadian logging camps which was furnished him by Johnston McCulley, the magazine author. Reynolds had as co-stars Frank Mayo and Kathryne Adams.

Reaves "Breezy" Eason is in the midst of his work at Universal City in the production of "The Jack of Hearts," the special western feature, which has Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill in the leading roles. It is expected Eason will take his company either to Catalina Islands or Bear Valley on location for several scenes.

Eddie Cline is completing a two-reel Sunshine Comedy at the Fox studio which has Polly Moran and Slim Summerville in the leading roles. Cline has managed to give a novel diversion to the usual chase incident in presenting the predicament of one of the young girls whom he uses in the picture when she finds herself dressed only in a bathing suit, attached to a combination of runaway street car and automobile.

Tom Santchi, between pictures, is vacationing at Catalina Island, and finding his chief attention attracted to the condition of his rod and tackle. Santchi and the Farnums, Dustin and William, are in a three-cornered competition for the distinction of taking in the largest Tuna hooked at that fisherman's paradise.

First Truex Two-Reel Comedy Is Titled

Amedee J. Van Beuren has decided to call his first two-reel comedy, starring Ernest Truex, "The Night of the Dub," the original title under which this Albert Payson Terhune story was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mrs. Sidney Drew's screen adaptation and John Joseph Harvey's direction have provided a lively comedy full of legitimate laughs.

Cameraman Perfects "Out of Focus" Lens

Marcel Le Picard, Will Rogers' cameraman, who has a genius for inventing new and improved devices in the mechanics of photography, has perfected a special lens which produces a novel effect that may be applied to the artistic betterment of Goldwyn photoplays.

Slightly out-of-focus effects, giving an impressionistic tone to scenes or figures that lend themselves to artistic treatment of the kind, have become something of a fad of late. But only the most expert cameramen have been able to produce artistic results. Too frequently, the scene has merely appeared out of focus and therefore defective.

Mr. Le Picard explains that by means of a new receptacle with adjustable lens carriers, he can get a close-up with varying degrees of out-of-focus effects, which are both attractive and unusual. Using the new device, the image on the screen is kept in perfect focus, the features being sharply outlined, but a soft halo, giving the picture the artistic quality of a painting, is attained.

Bull's-Eye Comics to Have Art Titles

The first two-reel comedy with art titles will be released by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation about September 1st. Although hand-made art titles are not uncommon in dramatic productions, they have never been used in comedy pictures, according to Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager for Bulls-Eye. The Bulls-Eye art titles are to be caricatures illustrating the action of the film, against an artistic background. The lettering will be done with a brush, while the cartoons will be in pastel.

Newspaper Men Witness "Bandbox" Filming

Kenneth C. Beaton, known as K. C. B. by newspaper readers throughout the United States for his humor and philosophy, and Frazier Hunt, war correspondent, witnessed the filming of every one of the exteriors taken at Lake Mohegan, N. Y., for the new Deitrich-Beck production of Louis Joseph Vance's story "The Bandbox," starring Doris Kenyon, which will be released early in the fall by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Coast Mutterings of Rivalry

Los Angeles Faced with Competition from San Francisco, Says United Man

ACCUSTOMED by long usage to unchallenged motion production activity and a prosperity arising therefrom that has made the city a source of envy to other Coast communities, Los Angeles has been startled from unapprehensive complacency into a condition of watchful alarm lest its remunerative laurels be abstracted by its northern neighbor, San Francisco, according to a communication from William Lord Wright, special studio representative in Los Angeles for United Picture Theatres of America this week.

"The Golden Gate city has of late shown signs of its realization of the fact that to be a centre of motion picture productions is far from being a bad thing for a city's business prosperity," says Mr. Wright in part. "Rivalry has, of course, long existed along industrial lines between these two big Coast cities, but it would appear that not until recently did 'Frisco cast an envious eye on the abode of big film stars away to the south," Mr. Wright goes on to point out.

"Los Angeles has been growing; that city has won to itself the Western plant of one of the world's biggest rubber tire manufacturers; the project of a million dollar harbor for its rival set the Franciscans to thinking how they could retaliate, and so San Francisco is turning its intensive attention to getting a share of the M. P. industry for itself.

"Capitalists in the latter city are said to be contemplating the erection of palatial movie studios. San Francisco architects are reported busy with studio blue prints, and propaganda spreading emissaries from the north are said to be in evidence down south insinuating among movie men the advantages offered around the Golden Gate.

"Since motion picture money, trade and employment form such a vital factor in Los Angeles business, keeping up, as they do, rentals and revenue, Los Angeles is setting to work to ensure the retention of this source of wealth and prosperity. The reported recrudescence of New York as a more active centre of motion picture productions is another instigation to Los Angeles to roll up its civic sleeves and take the very best care of its prized possession.

Musical Film Comedy by Adolf Philipp

Adolph Philipp has just completed his first musical film comedy for the Adolf Philipp Film Corporation, at its studio, 11 East Fourteenth Street.

Supporting him in his first endeavor to offer a unique idea in musical film production will be a cast of capable screen thespians, including Miss Patsy De Forest, Miss Cleme Brian, Miss Anita Brown, Miss Mary Louise Buckley, Miss Lucia B. Seger, Joseph P. Marquis, Edward Elkas, George Henry, Alexander Kaufman, Joseph Savoli and J. Irving Southard.

Anita King Stars in a Triangle Offering

"One Against Many," a Triangle production, will serve to bring Anita King, well known to fans, back to the screen. This production will be released August 17, and Miss King is said to handle her role in sterling fashion. Edgar Jones directed.

"Title Jury" Is to Be Goldwyn Fixture

In devising innovations in production that are bound to bring about superior photoplays, Samuel Goldwyn gave considerable thought to the matter of titles. He considered them from all angles and finally conceived what he calls "the jury system," a plan that is justifying his confidence in the benefits to be derived from getting a concensus of opinion as to what "goes over" with the great audience reached by Goldwyn Pictures.

The recently formed "title jury" is composed of men and women in the organization, who from experience and temperament see things from different viewpoints. The jury comprises those with a literary training and others without any training of the kind. An effort is made to have this body typical of the average motion picture audiences as they are found in all parts of the country, in small theatres as well as large.

When a new production is viewed by the committee it contains titles written by the title editor, but they are subject to change and sometimes to removal entirely, if the jury finds that for one reason or another they fail to carry the desired point.

Ince Company Working in New England

To obtain the proper scenery for a part of "The White Book," the Thomas H. Ince production starring Dorothy Dalton, the company has gone to Marblehead, Mass., where the rocky coast is said to be much like that part of the British coast where some of the action of "The White Rook" takes place.

In "The White Rook," Miss Dalton is supported by Henry Mortimer, Paul Caseneuve, Richard Neil, Warren Cook, Thomas Cameron, Walter Barrett and Bigelow Cooper.

"Black Gate" in Making

Ruth Clifford, who is a picture star in her own right, has been engaged by Vitagraph to play the leading feminine role opposite Earle Williams in his next feature, "The Black Gate," which is based on the mystery story by Hilliard Booth. The picture is now being made at the West Coast studio at Hollywood.

Vitagraph News Bits

Five episodes of "Daredevil Dick", the newest serial starring William Duncan, have been made at Lake Huntington where the company has been engaged for several weeks. Their return is not expected, it is said, until September.

Earle Williams is starring under the direction of Theodore Marston in "The Black Gate".

Another Vitagraph Company on location is that headed by Antonio Moreno and Carrol Holloway who are at Truckee, Calif., at work on mountain scenes for the serial, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain."

Bessie Love has started work on a new feature, having returned from Seattle where she was a guest of the convention of Northwestern Exhibitors. She is under the direction of David Smith, and has Charles Spear as her leading man, while Jay Morley, Ann Schafer, John Kunkel and Beulah Clark are in support.

Lake Huntington also is the address of Larry Semon and his comedians who are making comedy there in the timber camp setting which will combine possibilities for attraction with the humorous situations to be found in a logging camp.

A number of artist's models have been engaged for beach scenes in the current Montgomery and Rock comedy being made under direction of Gilbert Prat. The company recently has spent much time at Laguna Beach.

Theodore Marston, who is directing Earle Williams in the "Black Gate" was engaged for that purpose by Vitagraph officials for the first of his productions after "Mortmain," one of the most powerful subjects, it is said, offered by the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Marston had not been engaged in picture work for some time, having been incapacitated by a serious accident.

Ruth Clifford also is a recent Vitagraph acquisition, having been engaged to play the leading role opposite Earle Williams. Others in support in "The Black Gate" are Harry Springler, Brynsley Shaw, Melbourne McDowell, Clarrisa Selwyn and Park Jones.

Paramount-Artcraft

Production of "Everywoman", the Famous Players-Lasky special feature being directed by George Melford with Violet Heming in the title role, is proceeding with an equipment of elaborate settings and extensive equipment. The gowns worn by the feminine players especially are striking, while large numbers of extra girls are employed in the larger scenes.

Ethel Clayton has returned to the Famous Players-Lasky studio from her trip in the Orient and has many thrilling stories to tell of her adventures. She will soon begin work as star in "The Fear Market," which will be produced by Robert G. Vignola.

Lila Lee, posing amongst the trophies which will be awarded to the winners in the Famous Players-Lasky golf tournament

Major Robert Warwick, at present starring in "Captain Dieppe", the Anthony Hope story, will assume the leading role in the next William C. deMille picture, which is to be known as "The Tree of Knowledge."

Bryant Washburn, under the direction of Donald Crisp, is completing his scenes in "Why Smith Left Home", and soon will be engaged in the starring role of "It Pays to Advertise", the George Broadhurst stage success. Washburn will have Crisp as his director again in the next picture.

Wallace Reid, returning from Seattle, where he was a guest of the Northwest exhibitors' at their convention, is engaged in the production of "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." a noted stage drama, under the leadership of James Cruze.

Lila Lee, who at present is starring in an original story by Beulah Marie Dix, at the same time is preparing for her next stellar vehicle "Why Change Your Wife" in which she will be directed personally by Cecil B. deMille.

Under the direction of Walter Edwards, Marguerite Clark at the Morosco studio, is at work in "A Girl Named Mary". Kathleen Williams is Miss Clark's principal feminine support, and Wallace MacDonald is the leading man.

Thomas Meighan left the Famous Players-Lasky studio the week of July 21st on a trip to Pittsburg, Pa., where his mother is ill. He is expected to remain east for several weeks.

Gradual recovery is noted in the illness of Elliot Dexter. who collapsed from overwork recently, and who will not be able to resume the grease paint, it is feared, for two months.

The title and art department at the Famous Players-Lasky studio, of which Loren Taylor has charge, is occupying new quarters, two entire floors of a large three-story building having been assigned to its use.

Fox Studio Doings

William Farnum and Director J. G. Edwards are at Balboa Beach to make the closing scenes for the picturization of "Wings of the Morning", the novel by Louis Tracy. In these the most spectacular feature of the photo drama will be staged when a section of a real ocean liner will be wrecked on the rocky shore at that place.

The William Farnum company recently returned from a three-weeks' location at Santa Catalina Island, and after completion of the present feature, will leave for the East to take part in the opening of the new William Fox studio in New York.

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, under the direction of Scotty Dunlap, are engaged for the leading roles of a five-reel comedy drama now under production, the name of which has not yet been decided upon. It is a story, however, with a newspaper office as the background, for which some of the more important scenes and a large portion of the Fox stages are being devoted for its portrayal.

Universal Newsettes

Four six-reel features were completed at Universal City, and turned over to the editorial department for cutting and titling. "Loot", the Arthur Somers Roche mystery story, which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post, was finished by Director William C. Dowlan with Darrel Foss and Ora Carew as the stars; "Common Property", a drama dealing with the nationalization of women in Russia, written by Elliot J. Clawson, was completed by Director Paul Powell, with Robert Anderson, Nell Craig, and Colleen Moore as featured players; Lynn Reynolds shot the final scenes for "The Brute Breaker" a story of the French-Canadian logging camps, by Johnston McCulley, the well known magazine author, and starring in this production are Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams. Monroe Salisbury completed "Sundown Trail" from the pen of J. G. Hawks, in which Alice Elliott played opposite Salisbury under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon.

Robert Wells has taken a company headed by Fritzie Ridgway, Herbert Hayes and Frank Schum to the Frontier Days rodeo at Cheyenne, Wyoming, to make "Winning a Bride."

Reaves Eason is producing "The Jack of Hearts," with Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill in the leading roles; Edward Kull is directing Pete Morrison and Magda Lane in "The Return of Striped Shirt Ransom"; while George Holt is producing another one of the Tempest Cody series starring Marie Walcamp. The title of this latest western is "Tempest Cody Saves the Day."

The most daring feats ever attempted in the air, it is said, are being recorded for the Universal screen by Milton Moore, chief cameraman for Director Jacques Jaccard, who is producing the first big serial melodrama, "The Winged Trail" with Lieut. O. L. Locklear, who changes from plane to plane in mid-air in the leading role. Francelia Billington plays the feminine lead.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, appearing in single reel comedies for Universal

Harry Carey and company, under Jack Ford's direction, returned this week from Bear Valley, where exteriors were being shot for "The Eternal Savage", Carey's new outdoor melodrama which was written by the star in collaboration with his director. Kathleen O'Connor has the leading feminine role, and Hal Hoadley wrote the scenario.

Douglas Gerrard, who has returned to Universal to direct Monroe Salisbury, took the entire company this week to Pine Knot Lodge in the San Bernardino mountains to shoot the opening scenes for a new Salisbury vehicle by F. McGrew Willis, adapted from Elliott Peake's "Altar on Little Thunder."

Norman Dawn's novel production, "The Eternal Triangle" in which canine actors only are used, has been completed so far as camera work is concerned and is now being cut and titled for humorous results.

Tod Browning is producing Henry C. Rowland's "Auld Jeremiah" which is to be Mary MacLaren's next starring vehicle. David Butler is her leading man.

George Seigman is well under way with the shooting of "Who Knows?" a mystery detective drama in which Kenneth Harlan and Helen Eddy are seen in the leading roles.

Comedy production is receiving an added impetus this week at Universal City. A new comedy headed by Harry Mann, director-comedian, has been put to work. Florence Turner, who is starring in and directing her own comedies, has just completed the first of a series "Oh, It's E. Z."

IN and OUT WEST COAST STUDIOS

At the Ince Plant

Five photoplays, of which two are big Ince Specials, are under production this week at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City. One of the super-productions is C. Gardner Sullivan's "Americanism vs. Bolshevism," which deals with the modern problem of organized capital and organized labor. Other Ince pictures in production are those featuring Hobart Bosworth, Charles Ray, Douglas MacLean, Doris May and Enid Bennett.

Direction of the Special Hobart Bosworth feature now under production at the Ince Studios has been assigned to Irvin Willat, who has been engaged by Mr. Ince for that purpose. Mr. Willat will be assisted by Ernest Pasque.

Exhibitors throughout the country soon will be offered a one-reel picture made recently at the Ince Culver City studios, in which the Ince cameramen, during the lunch hour, caught the various employes of the studio at luncheon and in recreation. The Ince stars, directors, executives, scenario writers, extra people, stage hands, carpenters, and even the livestock of the studio, all were included in the thousand feet which is being arranged and edited as a semi-educational film showing some of the features of the industry.

Cast of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism" features was announced this week as follows: Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Castleton, Claire DuBrey, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman, Lewis Morrison and Gordon Mullen, all of whom will be under the direction of Fred Niblo.

Under the working title of "A Man's Money," a new play was begun this week by Charles Ray supported by Gladys George. Charles Mailes, Wm. Conklin and Mollie McConnell are other members of the cast. The story by Julian Josephson.

Here and There

A novelty in motion picture production, it is asserted, has been put under way by Maxwell Karger, Metro's director general, as the result of which Viola Dana, Bert Lytell, May Allison and their companies now rehearse each of the more important scenes in street clothes and without make-up. Then they stage a dress rehearsal as a preliminary to taking pictures.

Henry Lehrman has issued a denial of a rumor published in a Los Angeles newspaper that Roscoe Arbuckle is half owner of the Henry Lehrman studios. Mr. Lehrman stated that the plant at Culver City is entirely his own property, and that Mr. Arbuckle merely had leased space at the Lehrman studios for the production of Arbuckle comedies.

Opening scenes of the Clara Kimball Young new vehicle, "The Eyes of Youth," will be staged in San Francisco by Albert Parker, who is directing the picture, and who revised the screen version from the stage play of the same name. The shipping district will furnish location for the opening episodes of the play. In support of Miss Young are William Courtley, Vincent Serrano, Edmund Lowe, Anders Randolf, Gareth Hughes, Sam Sothern, Pauline Starke and Rudolfo De Valantina.

Gale Henry has completed her work as the principal comedian in "Her Week End," being produced by the Model Comedy Company, and has begun preparation for her next picture. Nearly every scene of the latest production was taken on location, and a large number of wild animals was employed in the mountain scenes. Bruno Becker is her director, and included in the support were Milburn Moranti, Hap Ward, Eddie Baker, Louis King and Ray Hampton.

Ernest C. Warde has completed the direction of the first two of the J. Warren Kerrigan series of photoplays being produced by Robert Brunton. These are "A White Man's Chance" and "The Joyous Liar," which will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Lillian Walker was the star's leading woman in each instance.

Fred Stone, who is producing independently at the Brunton studios, has completed his first feature, "Billy Jim," which had Frank Borzage as its director and Josie Sedgwick and Vola Vale in the star's support. Scenes of the events of the annual frontier day celebration at Cheyenne, Wyoming, will be utilized by Mr. Stone in his next production, opportunity for filming them having arisen as a result of the actor's visit to the mountain celebration.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has arranged to demonstrate the supremacy of that city as a film producing center through the publication of material and figures bearing on the development of film production. A large map of the city and vicinity in which the location of every studio will be shown and the various ways of reaching them will be a feature of the Chamber's campaign to prevent the encroachment by other cities on Los Angeles' share of the business.

T. Hayes Hunter, Wallace Worsley and Rupert Julian are the three new directors who have been engaged to take part in the production of Goldwyn features under their new policy of fewer and better pictures. Gertrude Atherton, Basil King, Leroy Scott and Gouverneur Morris will be directed by these three.

Mr. Hunter, who recently produced independently Zane Grey's story, "The Border Legion," with Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth as stars, has been assigned the first of the novels of these authors. He is preparing production of "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes.

Major Hughes has arrived at the studio to confer with Director Hunter and studio executives regarding the production.

"The Perch of the Devil," by Gertrude Atherton, will be produced by Rupert Julian, and its scenario is being prepared by Rex Taylor, who is now in consultation with Mrs. Atherton.

Director Worsley's story has not been chosen.

Geraldine Farrar has begun work on her second Goldwyn Picture on a scale of magnificence more elaborate even than the production just completed. She will share honors with Lou Tellegen, her husband, as leading man, and Reginald Barker will again direct. The story was written by Charles Logue and arranged for the screen by E. Richard Schryer. Its locale is in London, Cairo and the Egyptian deserts, and in it Miss Farrar will play the role of a titled Englishwoman who finds herself in a conflict of emotions with an Arabian Sheik, the part assigned to her husband. The Victory ball recently held in London to celebrate the end of the war will be duplicated in the Farrar picture and very striking settings, it is said, already have been made for this episode of the drama. Included in the cast are Casson Ferguson, who plays the juvenile lead; Alec D. Francis, Edith Chapman, Macey Harlan and several others of equal note.

Madlaine Traverse has got a real big idea. She's going to open a shop to sell gowns, hats, ETC. after she uses them in pictures.

Bill Farnum gave a party on his yacht, and broke up the event for a few minutes by spearing a thirty pound white sea bass.

Ernest Warde kept a company working at Brunton's past the lunch minute, and the players ate up all the props—hot dogs.

Irvin Willat is back at the Thomas H. Ince studio doing a Hobart Bosworth picture. His last from this lot was "False Faces."

When Eddie Cline saw Polly Moran's automobile he said: "What's this, comedy?" "No," she answered, "it's a crime," which is just like Polly.

And now that James Kirkwood has declared his policy, are there any other directors who want to come back to the grease paint and applause?

Ethel Clayton was not lost in the land of Cherry Blossoms, but just kept quiet to create a little mystery. Yes, she's back at the F. P.-Lasky plant.

Henry Lehrman rose again this week to remark that Roscoe Arbuckle did not own a half interest in the Lehrman studios. Roscoe is just a renter.

Everybody around the Ince lot took part in a thousand foot subject made during the noon hour which shows what the word recreation means at a studio.

"Jackie Jingles" comes to HOKUM office. Of course, the title wouldn't indicate that it's a page of publicity about a certain Miss Saunders by Sy Snyder.

Frank Lloyd, the Scotchman, is recalling his younger day experiences in London to help get over a play laid in the fog. Pauline Frederick is the star.

And now Marguerite Clark will play "A Girl Named Mary." Incidentally, we are told, she is not attempting to steal anybody's stuff. This is merely a title.

Bryant Washburn and Walter Hires gave Lois Wilson a fly swatter, shaving brush, mouse trap, and a 15c ring for her birthday at Truckee. A good time was had by all.

Dick Willis' stuff comes to us this week in green. And now we note that this press matter is not the compliments of Dick Willis, but the compliments of Willis & Inglis.

A man told Charley Ray he'd always found he could take his wife and kiddies to see one of Charley's pictures, and know they would all enjoy the show. No charges, Charley.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran secured a special permit from the U. S. Government to use a still in their current comedy, which may be a new way of getting around the war time prohibition measure.

The Woolworth Tower of Hollywood—that three story building which is part of the Lasky studio—is to become the Bohemian corner of the plant, for all the artists of the art department have been congregated there.

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has added a multigraph machine to its equipment, and a fellow named Walraven continues as conductor. This surely is in keeping with the title of the next picture "The Fortune Hunter."

"The Hard-Boiled Tenderfoot" from Fox will have a great big waterfall set, and Carl Downing, the new publicity man from the cast, being long on figures advises us 20,000 gals. of water were used; but this scene was made before the 1st of July.

Frank Keenan, that grand young fellow of the films, is still knocking 'em dead on his personal appearance tour with a capital and labor talk that tells how much good the film industry has done, and how it is preventing raising of the red flag. Frank is a bright young fellow, and claims the St. Louis convention was a whiz.

Wally Reid told George Bellman of the Seattle Times he was looking for a leading woman for his next picture, and all of the attractive maids of Seattle "swooped" down on him, giving the telephone operators and bell-boys of the hotel a lot of work during the Seattle convention last week. Wally emerged with a trunk full of pictures.

Bessie Love was guest of honor at a luncheon while in Seattle for the Screen Ball where they discussed voting on educatiion bonds. When Bessie told them she went through high school during the last four years she has been in pictures, and graduated with her class in June, there was so much enthusiasm displayed, all Seattle thought the bonds had been voted.

Way out on Niagara Street in Buffalo we found the Felxume Sign Company busy as the dickens. Their Oplex signs are "going big."

Right near Flexume is the Spencer Lens Company, a firm that has evidently been hiding its light rays behind a douser. It seems they are making an objective lens of unusual quality which costs more and does more than many others of the same general style.

During the recent hun-fracas, the Spencer Lens Company was one of the two or three organizations selected to manufacture high-grade special glass for the U. S.

Reports to the contrary, the Wotten Rexolux has not disappeared from the market. Their manufacture was stopped for a time—in fact, just at the wrong time, since it was just becoming known—to give place to other work, but we are told by official that the same machine is now being sold.

You can't beat Cleveland for its projection, its seeming hustle, its street car service and its hold-ups and murders.

Last Week We Met—Harry K. Lucas

DID you ever meet Harry K. Lucas? No? Well, we have, and we might say that you have missed much if you have not heard him tell how he puts it over from Atlanta.

Stop at the Astor? Usually; when there is chocolate ice cream on the bill. If you ever buy him a lunch slip the wink to the waiter and see that the ice cream order is a double portion—the rest of the material supplied from the kitchen makes little difference.

You've got him. Yes, he was here last week.

Tall, distinguished looking? Absolutely.

Seen in company with E. M. Porter, on a Thirty-Fourth street crosstown car? That's him.

Next time march right up and speak to him. He'll pump your arm and, if you let him, will make you believe that next to one of his exhibitor customers you are the greatest thing this side of the northern boundary of Georgia.

Business? That should be his middle name. He's full of it. Thinks it, plays it, eats it and sleeps over it. And the best part of it is he has made good at it and in doing so has played fair with every man, treating them all alike—no favorites.

The territory which is covered by the Lucas trade mark contains more square mileage than that of any other one man in our industry of whom we have heard, and he covers it all by mail.

He has never yet had a man out selling for him and he says he never will unless he is absolutely sure of the integrity of the man who may take the position. He must work on "Lucas Principles" only.

Vices? Well—some. Aside from being a great "NEWS" booster he plays golf. He used to swim but this caused him to lose so much weight that he has stopped this form of diversion, and now only takes to the water occasionally, that is compared to the old days.

A letter from him since he returned to the Peach Belt says that out of his two days, between his return and the time of writing, he has broken his record for the golf course twice.

No—I would hardly say he has given up business—for he enclosed price lists and circulars just as though he intended to sell me something.

He tells us the links are great in Dallas too. He has just opened up there. Perhaps that's why, we don't know. Sometimes coincidences like this do happen.

Don't be misled about Lucas. We merely want you to know him better. He is one of those all-around men, worth knowing better. He works when he works,—and makes good. He plays when he plays and breaks records. That's him all over.

Electric sign manufacturers are on the high wave of prosperity along with others. Kennedy, of the Rawson & Evans plant, tells us they are working at top speed on sign orders, and at the same time getting out something new for the trade. George Hall is in charge of the R. & E. colored glass department. Under him experts design glass marquises and canopies for theatre fronts. We understand that Rawson & Evans is the only firm in the country making signs in fired glass.

that man, Cookingham, puts one hand in his pocket, wraps the other around a cigar and talks "Transvorter"—well, any man that's already bought an M. G. set has to swallow a torrent of arguments, well put.

The home of the Transverter is a bee-hive. They're making the little fellow for motion picture work and battery charging and probably for other uses. C. C. Dash, Asst. Prof. of Electrical Engineering at Case School of Applied Science has resigned from the faculty to become a consulting engineer to the Hertner Electric Company.

And he's another man who swears, eats and lives by the T. V. R. Without a doubt the primary impression received by a traveler among equipment manufacturers is the enormous expansion either already carried out or contemplated. Without an exception it seems to be a case of hustling like all creation to get business that's just around the corner.

Particularly does this apply to the educational filed. And it is here that the new "sub-standard" film is finding its place. Those who prophecied the failure of the "narrow width" cannot fail to be impressed by the whole heartedness with which the safe film is being accepted and broad-guaged men in industrial and educational lines.

There is nothing but desolation and a feeling of emptiness at the studio of the Essanay Co., in Chicago. But in the laboratory there is a bit more life. Some of those machines of George Spoor's were reeling off an enormous footage in developed film. Although C. F. Chandler, Essanay adv. mgr., kindly escorted us through the rooms in which the machines are at work, we are not allowed to say anything about them.

Shouldn't wonder a bit but what Spoor has an improvement in mind and wants to get it running before doing much talking.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Carbon Arc for Motion Picture Projection

By W. C. Kunzmann.

Reprinted from Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

THE motion picture theatre is a permanent institution as is evidenced by the developments during the past two or three years. Hundreds of motion picture theatres have been built which are second to none of the legitimate with respect to size and appointments of interior and exterior. The productions, too, have kept pace with the theatres. These productions now depict on the screen picture plays costing hundreds of thousands of dollars and employ the best of theatrical talent as principals. The picture producing interests have invested fabulous sums in permanent studios fitted with every conceivable contrivance necessary for the production of practically any play and the innumerable feature incidents which occur in the lives of any and all people of this world.

The art of the motion picture is composed of two principal industries, the manufacturing industry and the exhibiting industry. This paper will describe some of the features of the production of light and its projection through the film as applied to the exhibiting of a motion picture.

The resources available today that answer the general requirements of the light source for motion picture work, that is, steadiness, maximum intrinsic brightness and distribution characteristics permitting a high degree of concentration, are the direct and alternating current carbon arc, and the high power incandescent projector lamp.

The carbon arc brilliancy of 84,000 c.p. per sq. in. (130 c.p. per sq. mm.) is sufficient for any condition of operation, while the brilliancy of the incandescent projector lamp approximately 20,000 c.p. per sq. in. (or 30 c.p. per sq. mm.) is only sufficient for low-powered installations at present. This paper will deal exclusively with the carbon arc as applied to the motion picture exhibiting industry.

THE PROJECTION

The projection system optically is practically in the same state of development as the first successful machine. A line drawing will illustrate the important features of the equipment.

The light of the arc is gathered by the inner condenser (Fig. 1) into a parallel beam, which is then converged to a spot on the film. The projector lens is focused upon the film and the light passing the film is then projected upon the screen.

The condensing lenses and the projecting lens are independent in size and focal length from each other. The former are chosen to best correct the light rays and converge them into the most suitably shaped beam. The projection lens is chosen totally according to the throw and size of screen picture.

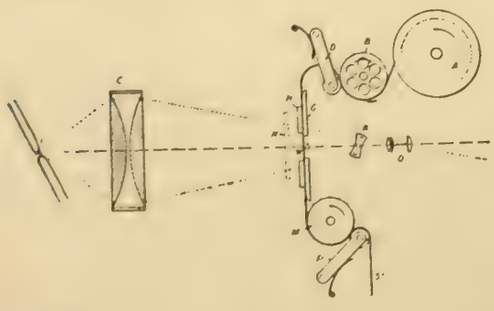

FIG. 1

To get a picture 10 feet wide at 40 feet throw, we merely choose a projection lens having a focal length in inches in proportion to the width of the film picture (roughly 1 inch) as 40:10, that is, 4 inches focal length of lens in this example.

When the projection machine is used as a stereopticon for slides, etc., the projection lens must be of different focal length.

The same principle in calculation is used but now we focus the stereopticon lens on a slide 3 inches wide which is located close to the lamp. Since the same size screen picture is required in both cases (10 feet wide at 40 feet throw) the stereopticon lens must have a focal length in proportion to the width of the slide (3 inches) as 40:10 or 12 inches. (See Fig. 2).

THE LAMP

The entire success of the projection is now up to the lantern and its operation.

The curves in Fig. 3 show the relationship between screen area and the candle power required at the arc, and the current necessary. It is interesting to note that of the total illumination available from the D. C. arc, but 10 per cent gets to the screen, while with A. C. only 5 per cent gets to the screen.

The maximum shown in the curves are no longer maximums but are really minimum values in the better show houses. One hundred amperes at the arc for screen areas of 400 sq. ft. are common and even 150 amperes (10 kw.) are being tried. Couple these arc wattages of 7 kw. and 10 kw. with the fact that 60 inch searchlights require only 14 kw. we have some conception of motion picture projection and what it is coming to if present rate of improvement keeps up.

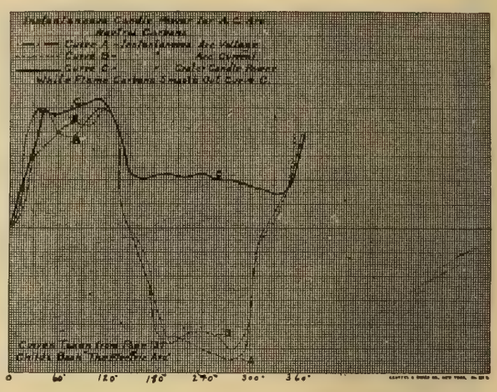
Knowing the amount of current after analyzing theatre lighting, screen and equipment requirements, we can select the size of carbons to produce satisfactory projection.

Below are given the proper carbon combinations for the different current requirements and also the standard settings for both direct and alternating current projection.

CARBON COMBINATIONS

Direct Current

Current	Size Carbons.
For 25 to 50 Amps D. C. use	¾ x 12 inch, Cored Upper 5/16 x 6 inch Metal Coated Solid Lower.
For 50 to 65 Amps. D. C. use	¾ x 12 Cored Upper. 11/32 x 6 inch Metal Coated Solid Lower.
For 65 to 70 Amps. D. C. use	⅞ x 12 inch Cored Upper. 11/32 x 6 inch Metal Coated Solid Lower.
For 70 to 85 Amps. D. C. use	⅞ x 12 inch Cored Upper ⅝ x 6 inch Metal Coated Solid Lower.
For 85 to 100 Amps. D. C. use.	1 x 12 Cored Upper. 7/16 x 6 inch Metal Coated Cored Lower.



Alternating Current

Amperes	Carbon Diameter
40 or less than 60	⅝ inch Combination
60 or less than 75	¾ inch Combination
75 or less than 100	⅞ inch Combination

PROJECTOR CARBON MANUFACTURING PROCESS

In the manufacture of high grade projector carbons it is necessary to use an especially prepared carbon flour. The flour is carefully mixed with the necessary binding material and forced by hydraulic presses under high pressure into the desired shape. If a cored carbon is wanted, a steel needle is suspended in the center of the die. The forced carbons are then placed on racks to cool and when sufficiently cool they are cut in the proper lengths for baking. To insure absolute straightness, correct size and perfect stock before baking, the cooled carbons are thoroughly inspected before being turned over to the baking department.

In the furnaces, the carbons are subjected to the temperature necessary to produce a uniform carbon of certain definite quantities. After the bake is completed, the furnace is sampled and the carbons examined by the testing department before being sent along for finishing. These tests are even more severe than those to which a projector carbon is subjected by the user.

Upon receiving the testing department's O. K., the carbons are sorted for straightness and examined for imperfections, and if they are hollow shells, made ready for coring. Every precaution is taken in the coring department, where the hollow shells are filled to see that the core material fills the entire length of the carbon. The composition of the coring material is of considerable importance as it determines largely the burning quality and color of the arc. After coring, the carbons are dried, finished, pointed, inspected and placed in the shipping stock.

THE CARBON ARCS

In the direct current arc, the crater of the positive carbon forms the principal light source. The positive crater is of relatively large area, while the negative spot is small and is not usually considered as a light source. While 95 per cent of the light emitted by the arc comes from the posican be enclosed in a letter or sent separately by first-class mail.

This not only saves postage but ensures prompt service.

FINE ART SLIDES are printed on celluloid by a photo-mechanical process.

Hence, all breakage is eliminated and absolute uniformity is obtained.

FINE ART SLIDES stand up under heat which would ruin the old-fashioned silver emulsion glass slide.

The colors are absolutely fast at all temperatures.

FINE ART SLIDES require less light than regular lantern slides, because of their greater transparency and their absolutely pure whites.

At any amperage they will outlast the old-fashioned slide.

FINE ART SLIDES are more attractive than the old-fashioned slide, because, being reproduced by a half tone process, the faces show distinctly on the screen and the white spaces are absolutely clean, clear and brilliant.

PROJECTION INSTRUCTIONS:

1 Take two discarded lantern slides, cut through the paper binding, and remove and polish the cover glasses.

2 Take a paper mask from one of the discarded slides, and place between the two polished cover glasses.

3 Place the Fine-Art celluloid slide between the cover glasses, taking care to see that it is square with the edges of the glass and that mask is straight.

4 Hold the glasses firmly together and fasten top and bottom edges with the gummed strips to be found herewith

tive crater, the characteristics of the negative carbon are of vital importance in securing steadiness of operation. In operation, the positive crater is set so as to face the axis of the optical system. In setting the carbons in this position, care must be taken to reduce to a minimum the shading of the crater by the negative carbon. In this respect, the direct current arc is superior to the alternating current arc. A direct current arc is longer and therefore gives less shading of the crater. The greatest advantage of the direct current arc is the fact that the current travels only in one direction and therefore the positive crater receives electrical energy continuously and consequently maintains a higher temperature,

As was stated above the characteristics of the lower carbon on direct current are of greatest importance in securing steadiness of operation. The size of the upper carbon is determined by the power imputed to the arc. If the positive is too small the current will overlap the end of the carbon and the arc will be noisy and unsteady. If too large, the crater covers the end of the carbon and the arc again will be unsteady, because the average temperature at the tip is lower. With the negative carbon, the carrying capacity is the important factor since the size of the negative carbon required by the negative spot is small. A small carbon keeps the arc steady and also eliminates the shadow due to the shading of the crater by the negative carbon itself. This problem has been solved by plating the solid negative over its entire length with a series of metallic coats forming a shell of metal of low electrical resistance around the carbon. This metallic coating volatilizes in the heat of the arc and thus prevents the spattering of the rear condenser lens with the heavy metal beads formed with the old style metal coat. The coating carries the major part of the current and makes possible the use of a small negative with the high currents required by long throws and dense films.

The direct current arc is inherently stable and the range of arc voltage can be made whatever the projectionists desire, but there is one fact to be borne in mind that, for each given current value there is a definite arc voltage at which the arc operates at maximum efficiency. With a constant current value, gradually shortening the arc length, will finally produce an unstable arc; just previous to that point is the limiting voltage for the current chosen. Or, otherwise, a given current requires a certain arc length of voltage. To increase the current and not change the arc length, is equivalent to shortening the arc in the first case and the arc becomes noisy. For this reason increasing voltages are required for increasing currents.

When using small diameter solid metal coated negatives on direct current we start at 52 volts for 30 amperes and increasing by 2 volts for each increase of 10 amperes, reaching 62 for the arc voltage at 100 amperes, a saving of 0.7 kw. or 10 per cent in arc wattage, than in case where the old style large diameter cored negatives are used, starting at 55 arc volts for 30 amperes direct current, and increasing voltage and current in same proportions as recommended in former case.

The arc steadiness and crater formation is materially improved as is shown in the photo (Fig. 4) of equivalent combination in the new and old systems.

In the past when using cored negative carbons the basis for choice of the negative was a ratio of 1 for the negative diameter, to 1.65 for the positive diameter, or a cross sectional ratio of 1.2.

Under the table of Carbon Combinations for direct current projection, the new developed solid small diameter metal coated negative calls for a cross-sectional ratio of 1.4, the negative having ¼ area of the positive.

What determines the size of a carbon for given service is the ability to stand up under it but the limiting factor differs in A. C. and D. C.

On direct current the limiting factor is the crater. Since the temperature of a carbon arc is constant just as is the temperature of boiling water—be there a teaspoonful or a barrel full—so, by putting into the carbon more current, we merely increase the number of the hot light-giving areas until finally the tip of the carbon or crater can no longer accomodate an increase and then no further increase of light is possible for that carbon. The body of the carbon is as yet unaffected by the current but the crater can no longer take care of further increases. This is the limiting factor and so we take the next larger sizes.

On alternating current the crater is but half the size of the crater formation on direct current, owing to the fact that the energy is divided equally between the upper and lower carbon; therefore, we can go still higher in current density on A. C. without reaching a crater limit but we now find that the carbon body cannot carry an unlimited amount of current without glowing and oxidizing away sharply, so we are limited on A. C. to the physical characteristics of the carbon. Sketch (Fig. 5) shows the physical limitations for a ⅝ inch A. C. carbon. Using the old style alternating current carbon, a short air gap gives a hissing and sputtering arc which is very unstable. By using cored carbons, the cores of which are impregnated with carefully prepared chemicals, an absolutely silent and steady alternating current arc can be obtained. By using the proper chemicals a light source of high intensity is obtained which is far above that of the old cored carbons.

This change in the construction of carbons for use with alternating current projection is one that has come to the front in the last year and has met with marvelous success. It has brought the alternating current arc in close competition with the direct current arc and it has allowed many houses who had seriously considered adopting other sources of illumination to continue with the alternating current arc without necessitating a single change in or about the lamp house or in the wiring. The mere substitution of these new carbons for the old style alternating current carbons makes the alternating current arc a very desirable and economical light source for projection.

In addition to fulfilling the general requirements, the carbon arc has other characteristics which make it adaptable for motion picture work. These characteristics are: 1—Color of light; 2—Reliability; 3—Flexibility; 4—Steadiness.

Color of Lights—Until recently, the color of the light used for the projection of the high-class film was a source of much annoyance. It is obvious that where the picture is taken in the open and in bright daylight, the effect upon the screen would be inferior unless the projection light source approached that of daylight in color value. The light of the direct current arc is the nearest approach in color value to daylight of any of the known illuminants that could be used for motion picture projection. The light of the alternating current arc using the modern high-grade projector carbon approaches that of the direct current arc both in color value and intensity. A pure white light is beyond doubt the proper kind of light to use for projection since it brings out the high lights and shadows and will project upon the screen a picture that will please the most critical audience.

Reliability:—The arc in the hands of an efficient projectionist, is a very reliable light source. It is not easily affected by fluctuations in line voltage and therefore will give an even screen illumination where other illuminants will fail. Carbons have a definite length of life and therefore the projectionist can guard against the failure of light in the middle of a reel of film.

Flexibility:—The carbon arc gives a steady, flexible light, variable at the will of the operator according to the density of the film. No two films are alike and no two parts of the same film are of the same density and consequently to give a true artistic presentation of any picture you must have a flexible light source.

Steadiness:—Both the direct and alternating current arcs are giving absolutely steady illumination. The traveling of the arc and negative shadows have been eliminated in arc projection.

In conclusion, emphasis should be placed upon the use of proper carbon combinations. The carbon manufacturer specifies a definite diameter of carbon for a definite current requirement and any deviation from this will result in poor projection. If the projectionist is without positive knowledge of the amount of power he is using he can obtain this by means of a volunteer and ammeter. Standard instruments for this purpose can generally be obtained from the local power plants.

Information on Cameras

From Massachusetts comes this: "Kindly inform me where I can get literature on the Bell & Howell, and Akeley Cameras, also where I can get a book on Photographic Lenses and Shutters."

Reply: Write to Akeley Camera, Inc., 250 West 49th street, New York City, and to the Bell & Howell Co., 1803 Larchmont Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

As soon as possible we will make up a list of books on photographic lenses and send it to you. We don't know of any book on shutters but some of our readers may. If so, will they kindly write in so that we may send the information to our Massachusetts friend who wishes his name withheld?

Emlay Works on New Camera

Earl Emlay, inventor of the Novograph high-speed camera, whose work has proved very popular in Pathe releases showing retarded action, is now working on an improved camera named the Stereospeed. The new machine is said to give an even clearer analysis of various motions than the Novograph. It will be manufactured by Mr. Emlay in association with the men behind the newly organized Motion Picture Producing Company of America.

Canada Answers Criticism

Technical Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

I have just received July 5 issue of the NEWS and upon turning to the P. D. I noticed the article, "REQUIREMENTS TO COVER AN OPERATOR'S EXAMINATION," by D. C. Buprkholder, Oyen Alta. (wherever that is), and I was naturally interested, inasmuch as I happen to have had the privilege of passing this much discussed examination.

The gentleman's letter is very brief and not to the point but I understand that he thinks the examination is somewhat too technical and of an unnecessary length and that is exactly why I am answering the communication. I am aware of the fact that the government officials read these articles and if the letters like this one went by without an explanation or contradiction the said officials are liable to be misled and think the same as the writer of the article in question.

The majority of the PROJECTIONISTS of this Province, I am quite sure, will not agree with the ideas as expressed in this letter. We are quite satisfied with the present examination for the present but we are looking forward to the time when we may have a better one, a MORE technical one. We are well aware of the fact that the present system is not perfect. But we do not think that it is too technical nor do we think that it is too long. There is not one question on the present examination that a good Projectionist cannot answer if he has studied and knows his business. The gentleman in charge of the examination, Mr. P. Barber, is a competent Projectionist and has served his time in the projection rooms of this city. He prepared this examination and I have not heard one Projectionist who has PASSED the paper make any complaint.

My friend from Oyen says that he is informed that nearly all the union operators passed the paper first class. I want to inform the gentleman that he has been misinformed and I have my doubts if 50 per cent of the union PROJECTIONISTS passed the paper first class. Mr. Barber was, at one time, a union projectionist and perhaps that is why friend Burkholder makes this false statement. I would like to ask friend Burkholder what class he was put in and perhaps when we have this information we will see why the kick was made.

In closing the writer makes the suggestion that six questions on public safety, twenty on handling the machine and lamp and thirty on electricity and ten on the optical system would be a sufficient number of questions to ask in all. Well, if the applicant was put through a regular examination that many questions would be ample but under the present system I cannot see how you are going to cover the entire subject of projection by asking any less than 100 questions and I tell you that 100 questions will not, in my estimation, cover it. When I say a regular examination I mean an examination that covers the entire subject of projection. And when the applicant comes in to make application for a license he proceeds to remove his coat and Mr. Examiners (three high-class competent Projectionists) introduce him to a large room containing all kinds of propection apparatus and you are told to assemble your projector, hook her up to the generator over in the corner and get your "juice" off any one of the several panels, assemble your lenses, line up your optical system, connect your meters, etc., etc. That is what I call a REGULAR examination and it is the kind we hope to have in this Province before long.

A few questions in addition to this examination are all right. This is the kind of an examination the Projectionists of the Province of Alberta want and will not be satisfied until we get it. But we do NOT want the present examination made any shorter or simpler because we believe that any man that can't pass the present examination is not competent to be in charge of a projection room and if he is at present working he should be removed and replaced by a competent Projectionist.

I would like to deal with this subject more extensively and answer those questions the Editor asks but I have no time at present. My main object in answering this letter was just to put the readers of the NEWS right on this matter and the views I have expressed will, I believe, meet with the approval of PROJECTIONISTS of this Province, union or non-union, and don't forget what I said: P-R-O-J-E-C-T-I-O-N-I-S-T-S.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) W. B. ALLEN,
President Local 360 M. P. M. O.

A Few Words on Projection Room Conditions

SOME weeks ago while visiting a well known manufacturer of certain projection equipment the talk got around, as it usually does when men interested in projection meet, to a discussion of the methods to be used in improving the working conditions of the projectionist. This particular manufacturer has gone into this subject from A to Z and what he doesn't know about the projectionist and the oftentimes discouraging conditions under which he works, no one can tell him.

In our short talk he brought out in a clear way what the projectionist is up against. Later on we asked him to put his words into a communication which we could publish.

This is his letter unsigned at his request. It should cause many a reader to dust off his Underwood or unlimber his gold tipped Waterman and send in a few additional thoughts on the subject. With hot days here or hereabouts surely some of you have ideas of your own concerning the conditions under which you are putting in your six, eight or ten hours a day.

In one of our recent discussions you asked my

All progressive studio managers buy them—because Westinghouse Motor Generator sets mean better pictures—clearer pictures—steadier pictures—and above all satisfied patrons.

Ask any studio manager or motion picture theatre owner what he thinks of Westinghouse Motor Generator Sets for changing alternating current to direct current. The answer is the same from all. It is the same answer you will give after you have installed one for your studio or theatre.
